In the light of the foregoing, who can fail to see that the result or consequence of disobedience, first on the part of David and his children (as I have shown) and then Solomon and his children, was simply the failure for the time being, of a man on the throne and kingdom of David, as is now the case; simply an intermission or interruption; and that there is not one word about a change of the rightful Heir from Solomon's to Nathan's line. We have this interruption and cutting off for the time being as the result of disobedience, brought to view. Psa. lxxxix. 38–44. David, after referring to the covenant "declaring the perpetuity of his throne in the strongest language possible," says prophetically, "But thou hast cast off and abhorred, [that is, cast off the Ruler off the throne, and the people off the land—the entire nation] thou hast been wroth with thine anointed. [David's representatives, Solomon, Zedekiah and others] thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant (David), thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground: [for the time being, but not utterly]. Thou hast made his glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground;" [until he comes whose right it is]. Nothing here about "bringing the deathless Heir through another line." To have done that on account of Solomon's sin would have broken the covenant as much as it would to have cast off David on account of his terrible sin. It has been said, "If it is impossible for David's seed to endure forever unless it comes through Solomon," etc? I answer, it was impossible for David's promised seed to come otherwise than through Solomon; for it was impossible for God to lie. He promised David, that a son shall be born to thee—Solomon; hence Solomon was a son of promise; and he said that of all David's sons he had chosen Solomon to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel; and that "the kingdom was established in the hands of Solomon, and established forever;" as I have shown. He also said, once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed [of which Solomon was the beginning, by virtue of his being the beginning of the fulfilment of the covenant] shall endure forever, as before shown. It has been said, "It is a mistake to say that 'the kingdom was rent away from both lines—from all of David's children. You cannot read away from a man what he never possessed,'" etc. This, like many other things that have been said, is the result of misapprehension and a contracted view of the purposes of God. Such a view lacks breadth and comprehensiveness, which is the case with much that has been written on this subject, although the writers are evidently unconscious of the fact, and hence much misapprehension, and many erroneous conclusions. The "kingdom" of Israel did not consist merely of the throne and its occupant. It includes the territory and the subjects, or the ruled, as well as the rulers. The subjects, the twelve tribes, or children of Israel "possessed" it as well as rulers, and were called, "the children of the kingdom;" and Christ said "the children of the kingdom shall be cast out." He also said, not to the rulers in Solomon's line, but to the descendants in both lines, to the nation: "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Matt. xxi. 43. In consequence of disobedience, it began to be taken or "rent" from them in Solomon's time, and continued to be rent, distracted and taken from them, both rulers and ruled, until the rending was complete in the destruction of the Capital, Jerusalem, and that wonderful "house of God," Solomon's Temple: which contained the visible presence of Jehovah. For hundreds of years, the children of Israel were in the presence of God, represented in symbol by the Shekinah, which rested above the ark of the covenant, over the golden cherubim bending reverently over the mercy-seat, the place of God's presence where he met his people, and could be directly consulted, answering their enquiries, even with an audible voice sometimes. Num. vii. 89. The time was when "the Lord was gracious unto them, and had respect unto them because of his COVENANT with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet." 2 Kings xiii. 23. But as they continued to disobey, he said, "I will forsake you and the city I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence;" Jer. xxiii. 39; not the ten Tribes only, but Judah and Benjamin also. 2 Kings xxiii. 27. Accordingly the time came, "For through the anger of the Lord, it came to pass, in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out of his presence;" 2 Kings xxiv. 20; "cast them out of his sight," Jer. vii. 15. But although they have been cast off and cast out in consequence of disobedience, yet the unconditional feature of the covenant stands sure. "I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy, and they shall be as though I had not cast them off," Zech. x. 6. "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath, I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, said the Lord thy Redeemer," Isa. liv. 7, 8. "And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was far cast off, a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in MOUNT ZION from henceforth, even FOREVER," Micah iv. 7. Hence, although there is a temporary failure, yet the covenant stands sure—The "sure mercies"—that the time shall come, and doubtless in the near future, when "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;" Jer. xxxiii. 17; as the never-dying Heir—David's Son and Lord—will take the throne, and reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be NO END."

I think now the reader, whoever he may be, cannot fail to see that Solomon's disobedience could not and did not frustrate God's covenant with David, and therefore that Jesus was the Son or descendant of David in the Solomon line. But while Josephites admit this, and while they are compelled to admit much that I have said as to the total lack of direct Scriptural evidence in favor of their views, yet they have their reasons and arguments, such as they are, for holding them: which we will now consider.

MILLFIELD, April 30, '87.

Dear Restitution:

Having just returned from filling an engagement at Salem, Columbiana Co., O., a place to which I had been previously invited, allow me to sketch a few matters which may be of some service to those of our speakers who shall follow me. I do this the more freely as such information puts the minister in possession of such information as will enable him to shape his course with more wisdom, and with far greater profit to all parties concerned. I entered this field without even a hint of its past history; consequently, without any warning of the nature of those special obstacles to my success. I had pictured to myself a virgin field of some 6000 persons, with mouths and ears wide open to catch the sound of every thought, however poorly uttered; for, you know, that, to novices in the Advent views, there are many strange ideas to be heard.

As to the real state of things at Salem I found myself what is usually termed "green," sufficiently so, at least, as to take out of my composition pretty much all the starch there was in it. You know how a speaker, that has a high opinion of his own intrinsic worth, feels when his audience is composed in the main of empty benches.

Such was your very humble servant in the city of Salem (pause). I found that the citizens knew enough of "Adventism" and "soul-sleeping" to deprive them both of curiosity and ears. I was, in my own estimation, heavily loaded with some very choice thoughts, but nothing to shoot at. Our brethren, very sparsely scattered over a territory six miles square, did all they could to get me a citizen audience, but their efforts were fruitless. Here and there one, rare as grapes after the vintage. The majority of the people of Salem belong to the "big" church (the world); the remainder are split up into about fourteen denominations.

I was there, however, and although I looked back towards home now and then, I fully resolved to make the best of my sad disappointment — disappointment, not in our brethren, for a people more hospitable and affectionate cannot be found, but in a good hearing from the citizens. Allow me, then, very briefly to state my daily experience for two weeks. Our brethren have no church edifice nor any place to hold meetings, but in their own private residences. The first thing, therefore, to obtain was a place in which to speak.

Brother Barber (John) and myself first called on the Presbyterian minister. And here let me say in justice, and once for all that Brother John Barber, and his whole family, are as kind and faithful as any that can be found.

Our reception was cool and formal. He said that I could not have come to a time more unpropitious for speaking on the prophecies. That a person was there who had been lecturing on the prophecies, connecting with them other doctrines, such as healing all diseases, so as to bring their rational investigation into disrepute; that I could not get an audience, and that, under these circumstances, he was opposed to my having their church (which was the best church edifice in the city.) He said that I could call on the other ministers as they might not view matters as he did. He took pains during my entire stay to carry out his predictions, for he never once showed himself at our meetings.

It is well to state more fully the Presbyterian minister's reasons. In the latter part of winter a minister, claiming no denominational association, appeared before the citizens of Salem and called their attention to a series of expositions on the prophecies. He covered the walls of the City Hall with maps and charts, illustrating the views of Bagster, Editor of the Signs of the Times, Baltimore; with these expositions he associated the denunciation of the churches, and the gifts of healing all diseases.

Such a course resulted in gathering around him thirty or forty disciples, converts to his views, and a total alienation of the ministers with their several churches. He was in the full tide of his success when I arrived at Salem.

My first discourse was in the Prohibition Hall, on a third story. Very few were present, as it was difficult to find where I was to speak. The next I spoke at the Town Hall, but the noise of the Salvation Army in the street, and the running up and down stairs of an ill-mannerly set of boys and girls, rendered my effort painful to myself, and about the same to those disposed to hear.

My third effort and the fourth were in the same hall; my fifth, sixth and seventh were in the church house of the Disciples, a fair building, if I had been favored with their membership. They gave their building only for one appointment at a time, and finally by absence and silence they gave me the severe hint that I was not wanted. While they fully endorsed what I said, they silently and very coolly excluded me for what I did not say, and for what I did not propose to say. Tuesday night of the second week I closed my efforts at the church of the Disciples; this I can say in truth, that with but very few exceptions I left their membership as wise, as holy, and as pure as when I —— did't find them. At my last meeting in that house (Tuesday evening of the second week), I had a newspaper, the pastor of the M. E. Church, the largest church in the city. He was a man of intelligence and has filled every position in that denomination, except that of a Bishop, so I was told. He was a member of every audience I had from that time to the close of my efforts. I call them efforts, for feeble efforts were all that I could command. Wednesday night I did not lecture. I was introduced to the Methodist minister, and on Wednesday called at his residence. He received me courteously, conversed freely and intelligently, thanking me for calling. I took my leave of him being highly pleased with his gentlemanly and Christian deportment. Had all the ministers taken a similar course my lectures would have been an entire success.

Having no service on Wednesday night, I attended the M. E. prayer meeting. In this meeting I was, by the minister, shown all possible respect. I was invited forward, introduced to the audience, invited to pray and speak, and my lecture for Thursday evening was voluntarily given out, he adding that it would be no "clap-trap" lecture.

My Thursday evening's lecture was in the Town Hall again. Our minister (M. E.) made some excellent suggestions at the close of my lecture.

On Friday and Saturday evenings I spoke in the same hall; on each evening our friendly and Christian minister took a part, asked questions and treated me with great respect.

My last appointment was on Sabbath, at 3 p. m., at the Town Hall. Our audience had grown very considerably. At that concluding meeting our Methodist minister (Hingley) gave me a public commendation more flattering than I had ever before received. He stated that he had been induced to attend the lectures through the popularity and high standing of the lecturer; that he had known me by reputation when I was President of Waynesburg College, Pa.; that I was regarded as a standard in Biblical interpretation, and for literary and scientific attainments was ranked among the first in the State. I name these points and statements because Brother Hingley's conduct is so unlike what is ordinary.

Relative to my audiences, and effects, it is due to say, that very generally those that heard me a few times, were regular and interested hearers henceforward. Seed is sown there which will germinate and be fruitful. A few words relative to our brethren in Salem are certainly in place. On the two Sabbaths spent in that city it was my privilege to meet with them in their religious exercises. Their services are interesting. They have a Bible Class, and have reading, prayers, and attend to the breaking of the loaf. They are widely scattered, though, when practicable, they are together on the Lord's day. The Salem church has one remarkable feature: with one or two exceptions, of twenty-two members, they are (by blood and marriage) of one family (Barber). Brother John Barber and family have been readers of THE RESTITUTION from its origin, are fully devoted to the cause we advocate, and are by no means sparing of their earthly substance. One proof of this was their great kindness and liberality towards myself. I have labored long in the advent movement, have travelled quite extensively, have found many kind friends, but none more kind and hospitable than the ones just named. These are green spots amid the world's deserts and wastes of selfishness.

Our brethren made a praiseworthy move towards the purchase of a lot, and upon it of erecting a suitable building for public worship. By request I drew up a subscription, when, in about ten minutes, sufficient was subscribed to insure the erection of a comfortable house. Brother John Barber subscribed $200, saying, "If that is not enough, I will double it, and if that is not enough I will double it again." How true it is, "Where there's a will there's a way." They were on the hunt for a suitable lot and want me to dedicate the house on my return from Canada in July.

Thus ended my labors in Salem. I sold a number of my works and added to my list many excellent friends to the cause and to myself at least. May the Lord prosper them.

A few words as to other matters. My new work, the "Eastern Question," is now out and ready for delivery. You will send your order to me, or to THE RESTITUTION office, when I shall immediately order the number requested from the Lutheran Book Concern, 180 South High Street, Columbus, Ohio. They have agreed to furnish whole editions to each person, paper or agent, according to my orders. I can thus supply you direct from Columbus, whatever books you want, as fast as you can dispose of them. I want Brother Chaplin to read the work as soon as convenient and remark on its merits and demerits. It has cost me much labor and anxiety. Its plan is new, so is the unity of thought which extends through the work. If it has many imperfections, I can only say in that particular it resembles its author. That it will be much read, and read with interest, I feel quite sure. Jehovah is the ruling Spirit on every page. The book is still larger than I have stated, having about 656 royal octavo pages.

One other item will close this lengthy communication—my proposed Canada trip. I have received pressing invitations to visit Toronto, and while there to lecture on the "Eastern Question," "Coming Age," and other topics of interest. I expect to remain in Canada part of June and through July. My address will be Toronto, unless otherwise stated. I want agents for Canada, and through them for the British Empire. We can send out new editions as rapidly as will be required. We expect to devote our time in putting the two works, "Eastern Question" and "Coming Age," into general circulation. Wherever we lecture we create a market for our books. The world's present movements are fully discussed in the "Eastern Question." Let all read and investigate. The signs of the times should be familiar to every Christian and lover of present truth.

J. P. WESTMAN.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed specially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

THE RESTITUTION.

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION is the "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also, hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion for remission of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

BROTHER WM. ELLIS, Editor of the Christian Leaup, writes us that he is about to return to England. For some time past he has been making his home at Forreston, Ill.

ALL we can do in the Editorial line of writing this week is to gather together what we can of a miscellaneous character relative to Jerusalem, Palestine, and Jewish restoration, and connect the items together by some remarks of our own. The fulfillment of the latter-day prophecies centers round that wonderful city and land. What is taking place there is one of the most striking signs of the times.

WE call particular attention to what Brother Dwiggins places before our brethren in the present number of our paper. How it may be best to do some evangelizing, so as to get the glad tidings of salvation before the world; and how it may be best to proceed in building up Churches in Bible organization; and then, when thus associated together, to so conduct ourselves in our church capacity as to promote our own growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, that we may become heirs together of the kingdom, and the grace of life will be the important matters for our consideration. Let us pray that we may come together in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

NOTES FROM ABROAD.

The Editor of the Dawn of the Morning—a paper published at Grand Rapids, Mich.—is now visiting Palestine. Of the returning of the Jews to the Land of Promise he remarks:

"People are flocking from all parts of the world to Jerusalem. Jews of all nationalities are arriving daily to observe the passover. I was glad when they said unto me, let us go up to the house of the Lord, whither the tribes go up.' It is significant. Every year there are more coming, and many come to stay. I have not spoken with any here yet but believe and firmly believe the time of restoration is at hand. 'O,' said a Jew to me yesterday, 'the time is not far off when we will have a change, when our Messiah will come.' Yet they do not see their Messiah in the Christ of God. Well, the veil shall again be rent."

From another paper we slip the following brief allusion to the same fact. The "Fig-tree" that was doomed to an age-lasting barrenness is now budding, and ready to put forth the leaves of a blessed Springtime, preparatory to "filling the face of the world with fruit." Isa. xxvii. 6.

"It is an interesting fact, says the Methodist Times, that there is now a larger number of Jews in Palestine than at any period since the days of our Lord. There are more than 42,000 Jews in their fatherland—almost the same number as returned from the captivity in Babylon."

To these brevities we append another relative to Joseph Rabinowitz, who visited Palestine a few years ago, and returned with the watchword, "The Key of the Holy Land lies in the hands of our brother Jesus." It is said that "more than 200 families have now joined in one communion under the title of 'The National Jewish New Testament Congregation,' as a result, and the influence and work are spreading in Southern Russia:

"Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz writes to Rev. Dr. Saphir, of London: 'My journey to St. Petersburg was well timed, and by the grace of God blessed and successful. I am permitted to preach the gospel, and to distribute the New Testament among Israel without any hindrance whatever, till the proper hour comes for establishing the community of the Sons of Israel of the New Covenant.' In the spring I hope to obtain permission from the authorities of Bessarabia to build a place of worship. I can obtain a site in one of the best parts of Kishineff, and will prepare the building materials when I have the necessary money in my hands. I found in St. Petersburg a man who could assist me in my work here. He is about fifty years of age, and was brought to Christ through the movement in Russia. He is known to Prof. Delitzsch, speaks Hebrew and Russian, and is familiar with the Talmud and the Kabbalah.'"

We supplement the foregoing notes with the following letter which will speak for itself, as to the reviving of the hope of Israel in the heart of one that is himself a Jew, of the stock of Abraham. The Times of the Gentiles are just about terminating, and the Times of Israel's Messiah are just about to commence:

FROM A HEBREW OF THE HEBREWS.

For the Dawn of the Morning: I have been a reader of the Dawn for some time past but must add that a person naturally feels somewhat discouraged not to see some movement towards Zion which I daily hope and pray for. My business engagements are such that I cannot find time to write much for the papers, which I should be very glad to do. I wish to express the pleasure afforded me at meeting Bishop Paterson in our Holy City. I met him last Sunday at the house of Mrs. A. E. Davis, where we had the pleasure of hearing him speak for half an hour, and I have seen his love for the land of my fathers which inspired me with a new interest toward the restoration of the kingdom of God, and I shall be most happy to aid or give my advice to those whom God may call to help in the restoration of our beloved land. Bishop Paterson has evidently arrived just in time to purchase land for a colony at a low cost. There are now two desirable locations for sale: One village is about eighteen miles from Jerusalem on the Jaffa road; the other is twenty miles from Jerusalem and the same from Jaffa. Both locations are very desirable for colonies. The one great desire of my heart is to see American colonies established in the Holy Land where the great and everlasting promises are to be fulfilled shortly. Your friend in the hope of the restoration of Zion in Jerusalem.—S. Kanstoroom.

As an appendix we add the following from Messiah's Herald as to a system of colonizing that is being inaugurated in Palestine by German colonists:

An account is given in a German paper of the present condition of the Templar colonies in the Holy Land. These various colonies were established by Christopher Hoffman, the first at Jaffa in 1869, the second on Mount Carmel in 1872, the third at Savona in 1872, and the fourth at Jerusalem in 1873. The original title of the colonies was "The Institute for the Preparation of Humanity for the Kingdom of God on Earth," and the thought of the founder was that the Christianization of the Holy Land would be the first step toward this great result. The members were called "Friends of Jerusalem," and "Temple-builders," and they now number between thirteen and fourteen hundred. It is said that they have been more successful commercially than religiously, and there has been a decline in their prosperity since the last Russo-Turkish war. The Turks hate them cordially, and the German Government has several times intervened for their protection. They all come from Wurtemburg.

Youth's Column.

How to do it.

The fields are all white,
And the reapers are few;
We children are willing,
But what can we do
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

Our hands are so small,
And our works are so weak,
We cannot teach others;
How, then, shall we seek
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

We'll work by our prayers,
By the pennies we bring,
By small self-denials—
The least little thing
May work for our Lord in his harvest!

Until, by and by,
As the years pass, at length
We, too, may be reapers,
And go forth in strength
To work for our Lord in his harvest.

Simple Faith.

Johnny Hall was a poor boy. His mother worked hard for her daily bread. "Please, give me something to eat, for I am very hungry," he said to her one evening.

His mother let the work that she was sewing fall upon her knees, and drew Johnny towards her. As she kissed him the tears fell fast on his face, while she said, "Johnny, my dear, I have not a penny in the world. There is not a morsel of bread in the house, and I cannot give you any supper tonight."

Johnny didn't cry when he heard this. He was but a little fellow, but he had learned a lesson of trust in God's promises. He had great faith in the sweet words of Jesus when he said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you."

"Never mind, mamma; I shall soon be asleep, and then I shan't feel hungry. But you must sit here and sew, hungry and cold. Poor mamma!" he said, as he threw his arms round her neck and kissed her many times to comfort her.

Then he knelt down at his mother's knee, to say his prayers after her. They said "Our Father" till they came to the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread." The way in which his mother said these words made Johnny's heart ache. He stopped and looked at her, and repeated them with his eyes full of tears—"Give us this day our daily bread." When they got through he looked at his mother and said, "Now mother, don't be afraid. We shall never be hungry any more. God is our Father. He has promised to hear us, and I am sure he will."

Then he went to bed. Before midnight he woke up, while his mother was still at work, and asked if the bread had come yet. She said "No; but I am sure it will come."

In the morning before Johnny was awake, a gentleman called who wanted his mother to come to his house and take charge of his two motherless children. She agreed to go. He left some money with her. She went at once to buy some things for breakfast; when Johnny awoke, the bread was there, and all that he needed!

Johnny is a man now, but he has never wanted bread from that day; and whenever he was afraid, since then, he has remembered God's promises, and trusted in him.

Let us remember these three P's—the Presence, the Power, and the Promises of God; and this will help us to learn the lesson of trust. And in all our times of danger and of trial let us try to follow the example of David, when he said, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee."

A Touching Incident.

A very touching incident occurred at Gouverneur Hospital, New York City, recently. Little Annie Ashpurvis was sent by her parents, who lived at No. 36 Hester street, to the cellar for some fire wood. The child, who was but six years old, took a lighted lamp in her hand and while descending the stairs, her foot slipped and she fell, breaking the lamp, and the flames of the burning fluid soon enveloped her entire body. As soon as the surgeon was called, the little sufferer was wrapped in what is known as "Strike's prepared sheet," and driven in an ambulance to the hospital. The child was put on a sofa cot, and the surgeon did all he could to alleviate her suffering, but it was impossible to save her life. Under the influence of a narcotic she soon fell asleep. Thus she lay slowly breathing for some hours. Her face was so swollen she could not open her eyes. About half past two in the morning, she showed signs of returning consciousness. The watchful nurse asked her would she take a drink. She distinctly answered, "Yes."

In a moment the house surgeon, Aspel, was beside her cot. He felt the pulse, but shook his head and turned to go away. As he did so the little creature moved her body. She turned half around. The dim light of the candle shone on the blackened face. The swollen lips pursed out, in a clear, sweet voice the dying child began to sing the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

The doctor and nurse stood transfixed. The other patients in the silent darkened ward leaned on their elbows, and drank in the sweet melody. The first verse completed, she gradually sunk back on her pillow. Her strength began to fail, and, with it her voice, and only the humming like distant music of the air of the hymn could be heard. How sweet, yet weird that humming sounded. The candle lent its meagre light, the big clock in the corner tolled out its seconds as the sweet little life returned to its Maker. The humming ceased. All was over. The doctor turned away, and his handkerchief sought his eyes. The nurse gazed into the flame of the candle. She seemed to read the little one's death there. She heaved a sigh, and no doubt offered a prayer. The remains were buried from the hospital. The coffin was strewn with flowers, offerings of her little schoolmates, with whom the dead child had been a favorite.—Evangelist.

Communications.

Dear Restitution:

The article in THE RESTITUTION from Brother Monsrieff on Psa. xxiii. 4, is worth the price of the paper, because it is truthful. For many years I have held or taken the same view of the passage, and when thus understood it makes sense and commends itself to thinking men.

Brother M.'s article, which was published in THE RESTITUTION, I think in February, "Happy in Death," was worth its weight in gold, for it will forever annihilate in the minds of those who think in harmony with God's laws, both natural and revealed, the false doctrine that has saluted their ears, as if from the lips of those who were comforting mourning friends with the false doctrine that they might rest assured that it was well with their relative who now is in the cold embrace of death; because he had expressed to him his willingness to die, that he was happy; in a vision he had seen the separated spirit of his mother ready to welcome him into the presence of God and the Lamb where he would greet all the cherubic legions of Salem's bright King, and about victory! victory! and back eternally in glory unfading. Yet a life of sixty years had been spent in direct opposition to everything that was God-like, until the doctor informed him that he must die, and the preacher labored to show him that if he would just believe in the person of Jesus or on him, and was willing to die, it would be well with him, for death would introduce him into the glorious future, heaven, though he had been guilty of wilful murder.

A number of years ago a Mrs. Campbell murdered her husband, and sent him to the hot place, according to common teaching. Subsequent to her trial, the preacher, with his false doctrine, fitted her up for his visionary heaven, and whilst upon the gallows she desired "it was the happiest moment in all her life, in a few moments she would be in glory"—heaven. Said Dr. King, who was hung for murdering his wife, whilst standing upon the platform in an ecstacy of joy, "I shall soon greet my dear wife in glory." A man who was hung a number of months ago for the crime of murder, was asked by one of his pious advisers who visited him on the day previous to his execution if he did not think that the hour of execution would be a sad one? "Nay," said he, "a bright one, for I shall be singing the sweet by and by, the Lord knows I love to sing."

All this is the fruit of false teaching, having for its foundation the heathen dogma that man, all men, are in possession of an immortal soul, which is the thinking and knowing part of man, and the body is the house in which it lives, and upon the death of this house it passes out and is conducted, if good, by some seraph band to travel those starry regions until they shall have brought it on to the exalted plains of glory, where it is to greet all the cherubic legions of Salem's glorious King, play on golden harps and sing redemption songs!

This is pleasing to the ear of the lovers of fables, but not to God, for it robs Jesus of Nazareth of the brightest gem of truth that God has delegated him with power to give to those whom he has given to him, eternal life. John xvii. 2. It leads the human family to lose sight of the coming of Jesus and the resurrection. Also the promise God made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and his oath and covenant to David! It tramples under foot the plan of human redemption; it lays the foundation for every false doctrine that has been substituted by the apostacy in place of the genuine. It has opened the door for crime and misery to roll its dark and turbid wave over this beautiful earth, which belongs to the children of God by heirship!

Dear Restitution:

I see by the last paper that R. V. Lyon has been to our city, made inquiry, but did not find me, for which I am indeed sorry. Notwithstanding my extreme age (88), with twenty-six years decrepitude, I should have been glad indeed to have had an interview with him. There are many things to interest a careful Bible reader besides our peculiar One Faith and Hope, at this time of our world's history.

It is true I am here alone, or next to alone, in the sublime and glorious hope of him who is to be our future King, who is to reign on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously, for a thousand years; in which Millennial age the world will be converted, a nation will be born in a day. Rapid work! Just like Jesus and his immortalized and resurrected saints.

The work in the restitution will be grand and glorious beyond the description of my feeble pen. This is indeed a clean, well-built city. Who will be the first to plant the standard of truth? But for my advanced age I would not wait a day. God's judgments hasten greatly. Who is ready to say Here Lord, am I, send me? Our time is indeed short, and what we do must be done in haste. God help to do the work.

Brother Weethee's forth-coming book on "The Eastern Question" if I am correctly posted, will be just the book for this people. An agent to solicit subscribers should be well read in the Scriptures, and in history.

God's work must be well and faithfully done. I am old and feeble, but have a blessed hope through grace, of seeing the King in his beauty. A few more hard fought battles, and all will be over. We need much wisdom to guide us aright, in this "Vanity Fair" city.

My address is 251 Massachusetts ave., Washington, D. C. Say to Bro. G. W. Cherry that I have lost his address, and he will please write me again. Affectionately.

THE JEWS OF ANCIENT ROME.

Among the various Jewish congregations with which in the days of the Apostles the borders of the Mediterranean and adjoining districts were literally studded, the most important next to that of Alexandria was undoubtedly that of Rome, the Queen of the ancient world herself. But for the Israelites settled in the great Metropolis of the Roman Empire, the harbingers of Christianity would have met with infinitely more difficulties in seeking to sow the seed of truth among the heathens; and consequently everything relating to the history of the Jews in ancient Rome cannot but be of supreme interest to all Christians. In the following we give a summary of a lecture recently delivered in a Jewish society by Dr. Hildesheimer, of Berlin, and reported by the Israelit of Mayence.

It must be supposed that the first Jews came to Rome in the days of the Maccabees, that is to say, about the middle of the second century preceding the birth of Christ. Judas, the Maccabee, sent an embassy to the Romans, for the purpose of concluding an alliance with them against Demetrius, of Syria. After Judas's death, his surviving brothers, Jonathan and Simon, sent in succession ambassadors to Rome, and in the year 139 B. C. Simon received the dangerous title of an ally of the Roman people. As early as eighty years from that date, many Jews must have lived in Rome, as may be inferred from one of Cicero's orations delivered in the year 59 B. C., respecting the governor Flaccus, who was charged with appropriating to his own use 200 pounds of gold received by him in Asia as taxes payable by the Jews. In the course of the civil war that raged in Judea at the time of Pompey, many Jews were brought to Rome as slaves. These slaves clung with great persistency to their religion; they would not work on the Sabbath nor on their holidays, and would not eat of their master's food. They had to endure cruel ill-treatment on that account, but at the same time the Romans learned to appreciate the moral value of slaves who held their religion higher than their lives, and many of them were set free in the course of time. These libertî formed the nucleus of the Jewish congregation of ancient Rome.

The first place in which they settled down was the right bank of the Tiber. In the days of Cæsar and Augustus there were as many as 40,000 Jews in Rome. Julius Cæsar granted them many privileges; he was a great friend and protector of the Jews, on the one hand because he admired their religion and the purity of their morals, and on the other because he felt grateful for the help that had been given him by the Jews of Alexandria. He granted them unconditional religious freedom, and expressly recognised them as a legally-constituted body, a privilege granted to no other religious community. He also protected them in the observance of the Sabbath, and allowed them to send half a shekel to Jerusalem. So much were they attached to Cæsar's person, that they were quite inconsolable after his death, and wept day and night over his ashes. Augustus also showed great kindness to them, and enlarged their privileges. On his own part and that of his family, the Emperor sent presents to the Temple, so that two sacrifices could be offered on his behalf each day. When, after Herod's death, a deputation from Judæa came to Rome to complain of the cruel rule of the Idumean king, some 8,000 Jews residing in Rome joined that deputation and secured a partial success. Many Jews were on intimate terms with members of the Imperial family. Livia, the wife of Augustus, had a Jewish female slave who was most influential, and the husband of Julia, Augustine's daughter, also favored the Jews greatly. The Jewish population of Rome was divided in about nine different congregations, and the heads of these occupied positions which were very much coveted. In the catacombs of Rome five distinct burial places have been discovered. The most remarkable thing in these is that the epitaphs inscribed are generally in Latin or Greek, none in Hebrew, with the exception of a few words at the bottom of the gravestone.

There can be no doubt that the authors of ancient Rome were very bitter upon the Jews. Every one knows Horace's lines, Credat Judæus Apella, and the account given by Tacitus in his Histories of the origen, the manner and customs of the Jews, is brimful of hatred and malice of the worst description. A great deal of the enmity is traceable to the same causes to which Anti-Semitism owes its origin in modern society. While the wealthy Romans contracted immense debts and wasted all their property, the Jews accumulated wealth by dint of honest industry, and the masters of Rome hated and persecuted the Jews for it. The principal satirists of Rome, Juvenal and Persius, inveighed their scathing criticism on the aliens who would not adopt the habits of the Pagans, but would cling to their own tenets, which the men endowed with the highest intellect in the heathen world would not take the trouble to fathom. The author of the paper from which we have been extracting does not go far enough. He does not tell us that the Jews as Jews remained scrupulously secluded from the rest of the community. Directly a portion of the Roman Jews embraced Christianity, they thought it their duty and their mission to place the religion of Christ within the reach of all, and to impart the sum of saving knowledge to those who, until then, had been scoffing at the tenets of Judaism and Paganism alike. And thus it happens that when once Christianity had obtained a firm hold of a portion of the population of Rome, among whom there is reason to believe the Jews must have been very numerous, there was an end to the conversions to Judaism, which at one time, strange to say, that is to say in the latter days of the reign of Tiberius, had become quite a matter of fashion. From that time Judaism and the Jews receded into the background in Rome, and the Christians soon became so numerous that the wretched tyrant Nero tried his hand first at the first persecution of Christians recorded in history.

News Items.

CALCUTTA, May 9.—It is rumored that the Russians are collecting supplies at Chardjui, about 200 miles from the Afghan frontier, preparatory to an advance on Khamiab.

NEW ORLEANS, May 9.—Several thousand people assembled at noon yesterday on the river bank at head of Lizzard street to witness the baptizing of a number of converts by Elder Williams, of Mount Zion Baptist Church (colored). Between eighty and one hundred white and colored men, women and children were crowded against a railing at the water's brink, and in the midst of the ceremonies this railing gave way, precipitating most of the spectators into the water. In the struggle for life that ensued, eleven persons, both white and colored, are known to have been drowned, and some estimates place the number at fifteen. The most of those who fell were rescued by spectators who were watching the ceremonies from skiffs.

VIENNA, May 9.—A series of hot winds that have prevailed throughout a large portion of Hungary have resulted in forest fires of great magnitude. At Nagy Karoly 400 houses have been burned and 5,000 people are homeless. At Eperies some lives have been lost, and at Torocska 300 houses have been burned and four lives lost. The entire village of Merogy was destroyed. The total damage to property by the fires is placed at $2,500,000. Emperor Francis Joseph has sent $5,000 for the relief of the victims of the fire.

NOGALES, A. T., May 9.—A dispatch from Luis E. Torres, Governor of Sonora, says that Tuesday's earthquake created terrible havoc in Montezuma. Several villages were almost totally destroyed, including Opato, where nine persons were killed. At Babipe, all the houses were destroyed and 150 lives lost.

At Tucson several slight earthquake shocks have been felt in the last few hours and much anxiety prevails.

A volcano has broken out in one of the peaks of the Sierra Madre mountains, destroying all the timber and pastures in the valleys below.

German papers call to mind that Kaiser Wilhelm in his ninety years has survived no fewer than seventy-two reigning sovereigns who were his contemporaries, viz.: Fifty-two kings or queens, eight emperors, six sultans and six popes. Of these, three were Kings of Prussia, Frederick William II., Frederick William III., Frederick William IV.; two were Kings of Hanover, two Kings of Wurtemburg, four Kings of Bavaria, three Kings of Saxony, one King of Westphalia (Jerome Bonaparte), one King of Greece, one King of the Belgians, three Kings of Holland, three Kings of England, three Kings of France, five Kings of Sweden, four Kings of Denmark, three (or four) Sovereigns of Portugal, five Sovereigns of Spain, five Kings of Sardinia, six Kings of Naples, two Emperors of Austria (one of whom was the last of the former line of German Emperors), two Emperors of France, four Czars of Russia. He has also survived twenty-one Presidents of the United States.

Indolence in the Lord's work is a great sin. Many a Christian crying out "O my leanness!" had better be honest and cry "O my laziness!" So much of an anomoly is an indolent Christian, that Dr. Dwight says:—"Among all those who, within my knowledge, have appeared to become sincerely penitent and reformed, I recollect only one lazy man. And this man became industrious from the moment of his conversion."

Publisher's Notes.

Elder H. R. Carter writes that his address for the present is, Millerton, Sumner Co., Kansas.

Any one knowing the present address of John Baylor, who used to live at Willow Point, Texas, will confer a favor on us by sending it to this office.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 600 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is afraid of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed especially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

THE TIME IS SHORT.

Up, up, my soul, the long-spent time redeeming:
Ask then the seeds of better deed and thought
Light other lamps, while yet the light is beaming;
The time
The time is short.

Think of the good thou might'st have done, when brightly
The sun to thee life's choicest seasons brought;
Hours lost to God in pleasure passing lightly,—
The time,
The time is short.

Think of the drooping eyes that might have lifted
To see the good that Heaven to thee hath taught;
The unhelped wrecks that past life's bark have drifted:
The time,
The time to-day.

Think of the feet that fall by misdirection;
Of noblest souls to loss and ruin brought,
Because their lives are bereft of affection.
The time,
The time is short.

The time is short. Then be thy heart a brother's
To every heart that needs thy help in aught;
Soon thou may'st need the sympathy of others:
The time,
The time is short.

Communications.

Circular to all the Members of the Church of God in Indiana.

To enable the Conference to make arrangements to thoroughly canvass and evangelize the State, we must know what material we have to work with, and to that end the following interrogatories are published. We request every member of the church in the State to write a letter, addressed to A. R. Underwood, Secretary, Plymouth, Ind., in answer to these questions:

1. Have we an organized church at your place?
2. How many members are there?
3. Give the names and addresses of the elders and deacons.
4. How many believers are there in your neighborhood who would unite in organizing a church? Will you do so?
5. How often do you have preaching services?
6. Who preaches for you?
7. How often do you hold prayer and social meetings?
8. Will you, with God's help, prepare and read Bible lessons, making your own appointments and getting as many persons to assist in the services as you can?
9. If the Conference will send you a printed outline of Bible readings, on different subjects, will you hold Bible reading services?
10. If the Conference will send you books, papers and tracts will you give them to such persons as will carefully read and study them?
11. Are you willing, God helping you, to do all in your power to advance the Master's cause?

The foregoing questions can all be answered very briefly; write the number of the question and the answer immediately following it, as follows, namely, 1. Yes. 2. Twenty-five. 3. Elders, John Smith and Peter Jones; deacons, John Doe and Richard Roe; address of each, Mayville, Ind. 4. Five; I will assist. 5. Twice each Sunday. 6. Elder James Good. 7. Every Thursday evening. 8. Yes. 9. Yes. 10. I will. 11. I will do my very best. Sign your name and write your address plain. These answers are merely to suggest the form of answers we want. Each one will answer according to the facts in each case. If there are additional facts, not called out by the answers to these questions, which you think would assist the committee, give them by all means.

Now brethren and sisters, we want an answer from each one of you. Do not think some one else will give the desired information. We want an answer from every lover of truth in the State. The answers will not be made public; they are wanted for the use of the committee which will be appointed by the Conference to take steps to have the entire State evangelized.

By making the proper effort we can double our membership in one year. Each one can surely get at least one person into the truth in a whole year. If you think you cannot go to work with all your might and you will prove the contrary. It is such a blessed thing to work in the Master's cause, and when a glorious thing it will be to have our relatives and friends go into the kingdom with us when Christ comes. Here is an opportunity for you to assist in the good work and I know that you will not hesitate, but come at once to the work and send in your letters.

B. S. Dwiggins,
Pres. Ind. Conference.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of Indiana, D. V., will convene at two o'clock, on Thursday, June 9th, 1887. The reason for convening Thursday instead of Friday, as heretofore, is this: A large amount of very important business has been mapped out to be transacted, and we will need more time.

A large number of the brethren and sisters have been personally requested to prepare papers upon various subjects, to be read before this conference. These papers will be used as the basis for considering these different subjects, and where the authors of the papers are present they will lead the discussion.

What our people need more than anything else, is system in our work. A large majority of our members are well versed in Scripture and are able and willing to do valiant service for the Master. All that is needed is a plan of operations whereby each one shall be assigned certain work to do. The brethren and sisters are willing to work and will only be too glad of an opportunity of leading some precious one into the fold of Christ, and thereby save a soul from death and add a star to their crown. We what therefore to take such action at the June conference as shall finally result in giving everyone some specific work to do, so that at the great harvest time we may all come bringing in the sheaves. A few can't do this work and do it as it should be done. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom, we therefore urge every one who loves the Lord and loves his cause, to not only come to conference but to come so as to be there at the beginning of the meeting. The committees, to whom will be referred the different branches of the work, will be appointed at the first meeting.

Able ministers will be present on Thursday and one of the best, if not the best sermon of the conference will be preached on Thursday night. Every church in the state will of course send delegates: but we not only want the delegates but we want a large representation from each church in addition to the delegates. We also want the brethren and sisters, who reside where we have no organized church, to come. We also extend a very cordial invitation to the brethren in other states to be present with us and assist us by their good offices and prayers. To all who cannot come, please do as Paul did, write us a letter of good cheer. Now brethren let us all pray from this time until the close of the conference, that we may have an interesting and profitable meeting, and that much good may be done in the name of our dear Redeemer.

R. S. Dwiggins,
Pres. Ind. Conference.
A. R. Underwood,
Secretary.

"The Church of God is the Kingdom of God in the Suffering State."

Dear Restitution:

In The Restitution for April 20th, your correspondent, James Cameron, takes exception to the article I wrote under the above heading; more in the form of an enquiry than in a denial of what I claim is the truth, and he has invited me to be still more plain than I was in the article referred to. With your permission I will attempt to illustrate the same matter in another form. The church of God is that community which has obeyed his invitation to become heirs of his kingdom which has been prepared for being inherited from the foundation of the world. The church is spoken of in three different states. First in a polluted state, when it was foolish, disobedient, serving divers lusts and pleasures, etc., etc., Titus iii. and elsewhere.

These parties so described were as much of the kingdom while in that state as the various products of iron ores existed in the mine whence the iron was dug. The essential element is inherently in the ore, and in like manner the essential element for receiving and using aright the supreme authority of Jehovah existed in every man who has become an heir of the kingdom of God, which is simply another name for his supreme authority. The foolish have become wise, the disobedient have become obedient, the unclean have become clean, the ignorant have become enlightened, the perishing have become saved, etc. These are facts, things done, not things to be done, but the positive results flowing out from a belief of the gospel of the kingdom of God. For any one to deny these results is to deny his own understanding of and belief of the gospel.

Now this washed, justified and sanctified class in the very same who formerly were not so. They have not lost their personal individuality by the change of behavior. True, they are renewed in the spirit of their minds, but the basis of their being is still there so as to be identified as the same persons who once were dead in trespasses and sins, but now were in the quickened state. Now if these persons ever sing to God at all they must sing "Thou hast loved us and washed us," and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, or a kingdom of priests, and we shall reign on the earth.

I am not the author of these different translations of the words of the spirit any more than my friend J. C, and to my mind he has chosen for himself a task which he is as certain to fail in as others have failed before him when he attempts to satisfy himself that the church of God is not the kingdom of God. I have not made the least attempt to prove that the Church can exist in the state of suffering and in the state of glory or reigning at the same time. Neither can she be clean and unclean at the same time. If she is in a state of apostacy then she has cast off subjection to her espoused husband.

The apostle says that Christ loved the church and gave himself for it. From this it is manifest that Christ loved those who were the church when Paul wrote his letter before they heard of what he had done. It was so in Paul's own case. Jesus loved Paul and gave himself for him before he knew what he had done. After Paul knew Jesus he was added to the company of those who believed that he died for them. He gave thanks to God the Father for having translated him out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son.

This was over thirty years before the book of Revelation was given. Paul was as really in the kingdom of God's dear Son when he wrote his letter to the Colossians, as he was in the kingdom of darkness on his way to Damascus persecuting the church of God. But Paul, although in the church of God and in the kingdom of God was not in possession of power to reign. Flesh and blood can be in the church of God and in the kingdom of God, but it cannot inherit either. David and his lineal descendants were in possession of the kingdom of Israel but they were not inheritors of it. The wicked of today are the possessors of life and of the earth, but they are not the heirs nor the inheritors of either, because they are in the kingdom of darkness. The divine order is first sonship, then heirship, and afterwards possession. This order cannot be reversed, as there can be no heirship before sonship, and no possessorship before heirship. The church of God is composed of heirs of his kingdom and of none else. All their names are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life as heirs. If any name once written there be blotted out, it shows that the terms of heirship have been broken by him, and that he is not any longer an heir and that when the time of inheriting the kingdom of God comes he is found on the left hand of the Judge.

I affirm therefore that if there be no company who can sing the song given in Rev. v. 9 and 10 today, then there is no church of God today nor any heirs of his kingdom waiting to be put in possession of it.

W. Ellis.

Millerton, Kan.

Dear Restitution:

I was looking over our much beloved paper and saw a letter from Brother W. L. Skeels, in which he called the names of brethren over near to me. These were Brother Prosser, who taught me the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, also Brother Trasdell. They are at father and brother to me. How I would like to see them and pass the hours once more with them. Brother Skeels has an honest worker with him. I know him to be zealous for the cause. Would like to see Brother Skeels. I live neighbor to Brother Milton V. Skeels. They are Christian people I think. Would like to hear Brothers Skeels and Prosser on the age to come or those things which concern the Lord Jesus the Christ, but if I do not in this age, I have a hope which the apostle says is steadfast, that hope is that I may meet them in the next, there to part no more.

Would like to correspond with some of the brotherhood of Oregon, as I am contemplating leaving this part of the State of Kansas or perhaps the State as soon as I sell my farm to advantage or even get its worth. Would exchange land if desired and satisfactory to both. Brother H. H. Carter, of Indiana, has been with us since last fall. He likes our country well. Hope he will call on us again, as he bid us all farewell the second of this month for home. Brother Carter is a good speaker and much esteemed among our brotherhood in this State as far as I have heard. He works for Christ and last for The Restitution, which paper is the visitor or should be of our entire faith. If any of our faith wishes or are in need of a speaker, rightly dividing the word, I could recommend him (not that I am capable of judging). Of course we all have our short-comings, or hobbys, if we could only see them, but self is too near. It seems each Brother looks for perfection in the other. We do not make the allowance probably we should, each looking for a perfect state in future. Does it not take all kinds of good material to make a substantial building. I find in reading Matt. xiv. that after the twelve apostles saw the young man turn away Peter asked what he should have (as a reward). Now what if one of our brethren should ask our clergy the same question, would they not reprove in place of bearing and answering as our Savior did on that occasion? Yes, the same thing in regard to Philip and the Eunuch. If we could only bear with each other. It's my failing, I am too impatient and it always seems to me those who are thus minded have more to endure or contend with. Love to all. I remain your brother in Christ,

J. R. Fisk.

Dear Restitution:

It is with a sad heart that I sent myself to write to you of the death of my companion, Elder Jacob Shaffer. He died on the 4th of April, aged eighty-three years, ten months and seven days. He died as he had lived, a firm believer in the second coming of the blessed Lord and the restitution of all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began. His disease was the gravel from which he suffered great pain. He was taken sick on Saturday, March 26th, and was sick from that time until the fourth of April, when he fell asleep in Christ. He was a kind husband and father, and has left a wife, six children, eleven grandchildren and several great grandchildren to mourn his loss. He sometimes thought he would live to see the coming of the blessed Lord, but alas, he had to bow to the decree of all mankind. We had made up our minds to go to Kansas this summer to live the balance of our lives, but it is a true proverb that man proposes and God disposes. O, it is hard to part with our friends when we think that we will see them again, but to have to lay them in the cold, cold grave, it is like taking our hearts from our breasts. But we mourn not as those without hope, for we know that if we follow the example he left that we shall meet again where there are no more tears and no more parting, and may the Lord hasten that day, and may we ever pray for the Lord to come quickly. Your sister in the hope of the second coming and kingdom of our blessed Savior.

THE VAIL UPON THE HEART OF THE JEW.—Part I.

Paul says: "Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: and not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail, untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament; which vail is done away in Christ; but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart." 2 Cor. iii. 12-15. The reading of these sentences does not convey any very definite idea of their meaning, nor is the obscurity altogether removed by the better rendering of the Revised Version. Up to the twelfth verse the argument is sufficiently plain. It is hard for us to realize that Christianity was ever called upon to fight for the right of existence, that its credentials were challenged and discredited by an older religion. But the Epistles make it plain that in every city where he preached the Gospel, Paul was confronted with men who insisted that Judaism was the final revelation of the Divine will, and that its existing institutions and ceremonials must be embodied in the universal religion. The sharp debate on circumcision involved the question whether the Mosaic economy was designed to be preparatory and prophetic or permanent. The great Gentile Apostle insisted that Christ was superior to Moses, that the Gospel had superseded the Law. The covenant of God with Abraham, he argued, antedated the legislation at Sinai by more than four hundred years, and it was older than the rite of circumcision. The priesthood of Melchisedek was declared to be more ancient than the Levitical or Aaronic order; a superiority tacitly acknowledged when Abraham paid tithes to the priest-king of Salem. A comparison of Moses and Christ, of the Law and the Gospel, Paul claimed, clearly established the essential superiority of the latter, and made it plain that the former was never intended to be a religious finality.

Such is the course of thought in the earlier sentences of the third chapter of Second Corinthians. The ministry of the Law and that of the Gospel are contrasted; and the contrast is shown to prove that Judaism has only a preliminary and preparatory vocation. It cleared the path for Christianity. Christianity is shown to excel Judaism in the message which it proclaims. The substance of the latter was the precept, the letter that killeth, the command that exacts moral perfection, that shows man what he ought to be and do; the burden of the former is the promise, the glad tidings of what God has done for the sinner. Hence the ministry of the Law was one of condemnation; it provoked and fostered the sense of ill-desert and awakened fear, but it could impart no settled peace: while the Gospel proclaims the forgiveness of sins, and the adoption of grace, and so is a ministry of life. And finally, Paul concludes, the Mosaic ministry was transient, evidently designed for temporary ends, carrying on its very face and in its heart the prophecy of its disappearance, while the ministry and mediation of Christ are permanent.

The latter fact was the main stumbling-block to the Jew, and is to this day. Christianity claims that Judaism is the true religion only in its transitional and preparatory stage; that in Jesus Christ the prophetic ministry of Moses was wholly and for ever absorbed. At this point of the argument the Apostle introduces the figure of the vail, as illustrating and confirming the transient design of the Mosaic economy; a device of logic more suited to the Oriental than the Occidental thinker and reader. The men of the East think in symbols, we do not; they are poetical and pictorial, we are prosaic and practical; they identify analogy and argument, while we distinguish between logic and illustration. "Look at Moses," said St. Paul, "his conduct and appearance prove that his position was inferior to that of Christ, that his ministry was never designed to be complete and final. For Moses put on a vail when he ceased speaking as the prophet of the Lord, that the people might not behold the fading of the glory upon his face; but Christ never wears the vail, because the glory never fades upon his face, and we are permitted always to behold, with open face, though as in a glass, the glory of the Lord."

The reference is to Exodus, chapter xxxiv., verses 33-35, which at first seems only to refer to what took place when Moses returned from his forty days' absence on Sinai. There was a strange glow upon his face, of which he was ignorant, but upon which Aaron and all the people looked with awe. It was the visible evidence that he had come from the presence of Jehovah. At this point, a single word, written in italics in the old version, has misled the reader, "and till Moses had done speaking, he put a vail on his face." What could this mean, but that the vail was intended to hide the radiance that had made the people uneasy? But the Revised Version completely alters our interpretation, by correctly substituting when for till. Moses put the vail upon his face "when he had done speaking," to indicate the end of the message he had been commissioned to give. And it appears, furthermore, that this use of the vail was continued, and became a fixed one in the prophetic ministry of Moses. Whenever he was summoned to a conference with the Lord, he laid aside the vail, and upon coming out he spoke unto the people what the Lord had commanded; after which the account goes on to say, "Moses put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with him."

There are some who still contend that Moses wore the vail in his ordinary prophetic intercourse with the people, and that he covered his face to hide the radiance. But the interpretation of Kurtz and Alford seems more natural, as conveyed by the terms of the narrative, that the vail was not used to hide the radiance, but to indicate the end of the message with which he had been charged. Upon each new revelation he appeared unvailed, and the vail was again assumed when the Divine Word had been spoken. Thus the vail was the symbol of a partial, interrupted ministry, a ministry confessedly imperfect, anticipating and pointing to that of Christ, whose face is always unvailed and always shineless ocean. Twice had they been exiled from Palestine, he said: once when the Roman armies had driven them out, and later by the logic of events, which had forced them to abandon the expectation of a return. They had been forced to surrender the hope of a future personal Messiah, and that sweet word had come to represent for them the idea of an ultimate and permanent deliverance of the race. They looked for deliverance; for salvation, but not for a Savior.

The Millennium was their Messiah. The logic of events had compelled them to break away from the Levitical ritual, with its sacrifices, and distinction of meats, and ceremonial purifications. The law of Moses had become unbearable. The ancient yoke could no longer be endured. They old skins had given way. Modern scholarship had undermined the pillars of their traditional faith. The felt that the day of isolation had for ever passed, and that they must be absorbed in the world of today, sharing its mental, social, and political life. This involved a radical reconstruction of their ancient religion, the boldest task ever undertaken by man; but, then, the speaker continued, Abraham was bold, Moses was bold, the Jew has always been bold, and he has set his face to the future, though he know not what that future contained. I could not help thinking of Saul of Tarsus, who fought this battle out, who centuries since achieved the resurrection which is the problem of the modern Jew, but whom Israel is not yet prepared to hear. The vail is yet upon their hearts, though there is earnest life within.—By A. J. F. Behrends, D. D., in Israel's Watchman.

The Glory of the Latter Temple.

"The Glory of this latter House shall be greater than of the former," said the Lord by the Prophet Haggai, when Zerubbabel was rebuilding the Temple at Jerusalem. Yet how many things which had been the especial glory of the first temple—the temple built by Solomon—were wanting in this! The Shechinah, or visible presence of Jehovah, departed when Solomon's edifice was destroyed, and was never more seen on earth. The ark and its contents—the "testimony" given to Moses—where were they? Lost forever to the people of God—become a prey to the spoiler! The mysterious Urim and Thummim—no more could that oracle be questioned, for it, too, had been lost. The Sacred Fire sent from heaven to consume the accepted sacrifice—alas! it was extinguished, never more to be rekindled. The Spirit of Prophecy spoke its last on earth by the lips of Malachi. How, then, when all those memorials of Divine favor had been withdrawn, could the Temple, destitute of them, exceed the former House in glory?

It was not by superior richness of materials, or greater skill of the builders. The "glory" promised was from the Lord. "I will fill this house with glory." The promise was fulfilled when "the desire of all nations" was come. When the Son of God was brought into the temple, a little child—when he entered into it and cast out the money-changers and those who sold doves—then was the glory of that house greater than all the wonders of Solomon's Temple. The presence of the Lord of glory was brighter than the Shechinah; his love needed not the testimonies of the Ark; his word was more gracious than Prophecy, and more clear than the oracle; and his holy zeal outshone the heaven-kindled Fire. The temple consecrated by such a presence possessed a greatness no edifice that ever cumbered earth could match.

Reader! the same Lord doth ever humble himself to dwell with the most lowly of his followers. The humblest—yea, the least esteemed Christian may be in his own person a temple, inhabited by the Spirit whose rare and shadowy manifestations formed the glory of the first House; whose presence filled the latter one. That presence was but temporarily vouchsafed there; with you it may be abiding and eternal. See, therefore, that you cast from the building so honored, all things that offend.

The heart may often be cheered by observing the operations of an ever-present Intelligence, and we may feel we are leaning on his bosom while living in a world clothed in beauty and robed with the glorious perfection of his Maker and Preserver. We must feel that there is a Governor among the nations who will bring all plans with respect to our human family to a glorious consummation. He who stays his mind on his ever-present, ever-energetic God will not fret himself because of evil-doers. He that believeth shall not make haste.—David Livingston.

Explanation of Label Marks.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1888. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE EARNEST DESIRE OF THE CHURCH.

Come Lord Jesus! come again!
Shout, O Church, the glad refrain!
Echo back the joyful strain.

Then, O Lord! how tarried long,
Come to earth with angel throng!
Wake again that sweetest song:

Chanted at thy lowly birth,
To the fallen sons of earth!
Token of thy heavenly worth.

Of thy Church the living Head,
Church for which thy blood was shed,
Come and raise her from the dead!

Change the living, waiting ones,
Crown, and seat them on their thrones,
Still creation's ceaseless groans!

Brother with thy light, the gloom
Make the desert wastes give room
To the wealth of Eden's bloom.

Take the poison from the air,
Make the earth both good and fair,
End these ages of despair.

From oppression grant release,
Cause the clang of arms to cease,
Bring the reign of perfect peace.

Wipe all tears, wipe the tears,
Verify the dream of seers,
Crown with love eternal years.

Then to God through endless days,
All created things shall raise,
Hymns of pure and lofty praise.

"RESURRECTION, THE TRUE GATE OF LIFE."—Part 2.

Is it not remarkable that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the varied theories of Hades and its Shades and Ghosts come not from the Bible, or Bible lands, but from those nations where the light of revealed truth had not penetrated! Surely on this subject we "ought to turn from idols to the living and true God." There is in human nature, almost wherever found, an intense desire to know the future and to see the unseen, hence the resort to the heathen oracles, witches, wizards, and those privileged beings, supposed, through their relationship with the gods, to know the future. This finds its outlet in modern demonology, or spiritualism—a forerunner of that strong delusion prophesied of the last days. But we find, wherever Jehovah has revealed himself, all such intercourse has been strictly forbidden. The ancient people of God were surrounded by those who constantly had recourse to such sources, hence the repeated warnings against them in the Law and Prophets. In the days of Christ and the Apostles many of these pagan ideas had become systematized by the philosophers, and Paul especially warns us against them, "Beware, lest any man spoil—make a prey of—you through philosophy, and empty deceit, according to the traditions of men, according to the elements of the world, and not according to Christ," Col. ii. 8. Emphatic Diaglott.

We turn now to the only true record and source of knowledge on this important subject—The Inspired Word of God. "To the law and testimony; if they (of any School) speak not according to this it is because they have no real light in them." Where the Word of God is silent, we dare not speak. But when the Lord hath spoken we may fearlessly proclaim the truth. The Bible begins with God's creation of the heavens and the earth, and of man out of the dust of the ground; carries us forward in his history through its varied stages of the fall and redemption, and closes with the new heaven and earth, in fact, a cleansed universe. So that as it regards all that is essential for us to know the record is practically complete. And if we adopt the safe canon of interpretation, that God speaks what he means, and means what he has spoken, we shall not go far astray. Figures, parables, illustrations are freely used in the Bible. But on matters of life, death, resurrection, judgment, the simplest and plainest words are used, and that in their natural sense. There is one solemn truth to which we would call attention for a moment, which I am afraid in these latitudinarian times is partially lost sight of by many Christians, that is the condition of the human race, as set forth throughout the Word of God. By many the race is regarded in its normal condition, individually responsible to God according to the light, privilege, and facilities afforded to them. Of course this is true, to the extent of the conditions in which we are placed as a race, who have had our trial, failed, and received our sad sentence of death, in the person of our representative, the first Adam. If this solemn fact of our present condition be recognized, we see how exactly the gospel, as a redemptive scheme of mercy and grace—is adapted to a fallen race of guilty dying sinners. Admitting this solemn fact, we can appreciate God's great gift of eternal life through Jesus, as it is freely offered to those who without it must inevitably perish—that is, cease to be—blotted out in the second death. To this tainted condition, derived from our relationship with our natural Head, we must add our actual condition as sinners personally against God, our need of forgiveness and renewal, so that we may be recipients of Divine favor, and the great privilege of becoming the children of God through faith in Christ Jesus. Is this the popular Gospel that is preached in the name of Jesus Christ today? Alas, no! Man is represented as an immortal soul at present enshrined in an earthly temple which sin has rendered mortal. But the immortal soul can dispense with it for an indefinite period. The murdered Abel, for example, is represented as living on in bliss, either in heaven itself or the paradise of Hades. What need of resurrection after nearly 6,000 years of disembodied conscious life and bliss? Nay, this is not all the contradiction to the written Word, for some represent the saints as perfecting their character in knowledge and holiness, and qualifying themselves for teaching others, in the strange School of Hades. The shady side of Hades is represented as a kind of purgatory for the ungodly, who there reflecting and repenting are gradually growing into saints, while one writer suggests that others may have so sinned in this life as to have forfeited for ever their bodies, but may live on as spirits or souls for evermore! Gladly do I admit that some of these are among extreme opinions, but the tenor of so-called Gospel preaching, and the sentiments expressed by leading Evangelical Ministers in funeral orations and sermons for such men as Dr. Stanford, Hugh Stowell Brown, Chown, and others, show the cherished belief of conscious life in death and the almost needless superfluity of resurrection. But we turn from these eloquent minstrels, as, however gifted, both out of time and out of tune, with their panegyrics. Out of time, because they anticipate resurrection. Out of tune, for they glorify only a part instead of the entire persons of the saints of God.

Permit us to assign a few spiritual reasons for believing that "Resurrection is the true gate of Life." This appears to us inevitable from the Divine record of man's creation, and sentence. God evidently did not create man immortal, either in the whole or in part. The Scriptures tell us he formed man out of the dust of the ground, breathed into him the breath of life, and he, the man, became a living soul, or creature. Our argument is, that man could not be immortal, for he was threatened with death, in case of transgression, and a deathless being cannot die! But man did transgress, and God passed the sentence of death upon him, closing with the solemn words, "Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return." Provision had been made for Immortality in the mysterious Tree of Life. But this was either despised, or neglected, by our first parents while they were innocent. But after they had sinned God drove them out, and placed Cherubim and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the Tree of Life. What is the truth here taught? Mercy to a guilty race. God will not allow an immortal sinner in his universe. All evil is limited and must come to an end.

The united testimony of Scripture, both the Old and New, goes to prove that man, not merely his body, is under sentence of death. And the entire experience of humanity confirms the fact. Enoch's and Elijah's translations, as exceptions, thus far, only prove the rule. The New Testament, written since the resurrection of Christ, tells the same story as the Old, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," Rom. v. 12. "It is appointed unto men once to die." Seeing then that man dieth and giveth up the breath of life, and that from Bible records the great bulk of the saints of God, under all dispensations, are under the dominion of death, we are shut up to the fact that resurrection is the true gate—nay, we may add, for the sleeping saints it is the only true gate of Life.

We are not called upon to decide the question, how far the Old Testament saints understood the question of resurrection. Some of them, like Job, Abraham, and the Prophets, evidently grasped its truth, and fell asleep in faith that they should rise again. But, by Jesus Christ, this grand truth has been clearly revealed. He is the resurrection and the life, the abolisher of death, and the revealer of Immortality. But the Divine order of resurrection must be maintained: Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming.

Nothing short of Divine power can raise the dead—it is the act of omnipotence, and he who is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, will exercise it at the time appointed by the Father. Then he will come again to receive his disciples to himself, and to open that closed gate within whose gloomy portals now sleep his loved ones. Then they shall come forth and enter on their everlasting life, clothed in immortal youth and beauty; like Jesus made glorious and deathless they shall die no more, being the sons of the resurrection. These are the some of our reasons for believing our topic. They accord with the uniform teaching of Scripture, notwithstanding a noted parable and a few figurative texts, that apart from, and in direct opposition to, the uniform teaching of the whole Bible, have been made to carry another construction. The grand model has been given us by the Redeemer and Life-giver himself, who took our nature, died for our sins, and was buried: but as he entered the gloomy domain of death, and rendered his human spirit to the Father, it was with the Divine promise before his closing eyes —"Thou wilt not leave My soul in Hades—nor suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption—Thou wilt show Me the path of life." That path opens by this gate, this glorious resurrection, the true and only gate of life, out of which he that was dead has come. And in due season, all his now sleeping saints shall follow. "For now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that sleep." 1 Cor. xv. 20.—Thomas Vasey, in Bible Standard.

Communications.

To the Brethren and Sisters of Like Faith Scattered Throughout the State of Ohio.

Cannot something be done towards forming an organization in Ohio, by which to further the plan of presenting the glorious truths that we cherish. Have labored some of late in Union and Knox Counties, and find an opening in various places, where the truths we advocate are but very little known. I see by a letter in THE RESTITUTION from Brother Woethee that there is a Brother Wesley McIlroom that has organized as "Churches of God" six congregations, one at Frankfort, in Harrison Co., one in Noble Co., one in Guernsey Co., two in Hocking Co., and one in Jackson Co. Also Brother W. refers to a Brother and Sister Wilson, of Rendville. I also saw a letter from a Brother F. J. Davis, in Vinton Co. Then there are other brethren of like faith. Brother D. C. Robison of Knox Co., is an able minister of the word, but has been prevented from preaching on account of his health, could not teach and preach both and support his family. But in his last letter to me he says our labors there have opened the eyes of some of the leading members of the Disciple Church, and he is, by the help of the Lord, going to occupy their pulpit a part of the time, and says, write to those brethren mentioned and see if we cannot get up a conference somewhere in Ohio.

Now brethren, what shall we do? The evidences of the near coming King are very strong. The work to be done when he comes is of great importance, and a preparation for that day, "The Lord's Day," or Seventh Day of the Great Week will soon take place. Shall we be among the company that shall hear some humble part under the benign reign of that mighty King, when he shall reign in righteousness. Oh, that we may be found honoring our Lord and Master by proclaiming that it is the goodness of God that leadeth men to repentance, instead of terrorising, by going to hell, representing a lake of fire when they die or pretend to die. Others teach that the Lord is coming to burn up the world at his immediate coming. I am strongly in favor of the Lord being faithful to fulfil his word; therefore let us prove all things by that word, not undertake as some do to say the statements of his word are an interpretation when they don't agree with their interpretation. I would be glad to hear from the brethren in Ohio, I expect to return there in a few days.

Yours in hope,
JOHN T. ONELEY.

THE TARES AND THE WHEAT.

But this harvest, be it understood, is after the gathering of the elect race. This harvest takes place in the consummation of the age, but the age does not end when Christ comes in the clouds to raise from among the dead his sleeping saints, and to change and transplant his living ones, but when he comes with them to Mount Zion. It is when he comes, attended with his redeemed and holy people, or with the armies of heaven, to fight against and destroy his enemies, and the enemies of Jerusalem, and establish a new order of things, that the age is consummated. Then will be the harvest; then will the tares be separated from the wheat. But by the wheat we cannot understand the true church, the "Church of the first-born," those who are called by Peter "an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession:" for they will have been previously gathered into the Savior's presence, and will accompany him at the open manifestation, at the gathering of the tares and the wheat. There is also a difference in the method of gathering between this company and those of the harvest set forth in this parable. When the little flock of kings and priests are gathered, Christ comes into the clouds and calls them up and receives them unto himself. When the harvest of the tares and the wheat are gathered, the reapers are angels. Then the calling up of the little flock takes place before the resurrection and judgment of the wicked; but in this harvest the wheat is gathered after the tares. In verse 30, we read, "In the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather up first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn." By the wheat here must be understood those who accept of Christ, and receive grace and adoption, after the gathering of this elect number, during the period that the angel proclaims an eternal gospel to all who dwell on the earth. For the number of these elect does not limit the number of the saved. These are called to wonderful privileges and blessings; but their exalted position does not exclude others from the King's favor and a place in the kingdom. A great multitude besides these will enjoy the blessings of salvation.

This parable must, therefore, have a reference to the end of the period which intervenes between the calling up of the chosen rulers and the Lord's descent with them to take the kingdom; and, consequently, to the saints and the sinners then on earth. J. Kelly, who has devoted much attention to prophetic truth, believes, as we do, that this parable has no reference to the Church. But he would restrict it to the Jewish nation,—to "the followers of Christ, and the followers of antichrist" at the end of the age. From the expression, "the field is the world," we think it was designed to have a wider application; still it may have a special reference to the God-fearing remnant of Israel, and their open and avowed enemies. Then others, who would not restrict it to the Jewish nation, nevertheless think that it does not refer to the heathen, who are in darkness, but to those nations who have gospel light, or to a state of things where there are Christian privileges, which they think is evidenced by the fact that there is good seed as well as bad, wheat as well as tares. But this view overlooks the fact that this parable deals with a state of things at the consummation of the age, and that by the time the age is consummated, all the nations shall have had the gospel of the kingdom preached to them.

But it seems to us a sad misapprehension of clearly revealed truth to suppose that the end of this dispensation is the end of the world's history. In the next age people will be born, and will grow up, and follow trade and commerce as now only on more righteous principles, and under a perfect and righteous government. We are now living in what Scripture designates the times of the Gentiles. Those times began long, long ago, but there will be a limit to them. The termination of the treading down of Jerusalem, or the oppression of Jerusalem by Gentile power, is the termination of the times of the Gentiles. But the closing of these times is the beginning of the next dispensation. And in the next dispensation Jerusalem is to be occupied, yea, possessed, by God's ancient people, who will then have become a nation again, yea, the greatest nation on earth. Palestine throughout all her borders will be inhabited, and every where will prosperity and peace and happiness prevail. There have been very remarkable histories of different countries in the past; but the future of Palestine will form a history more remarkable, and at the same time of deeper interest to the race, than the world ever knew. If Judah and Israel, therefore, will be nationally revived at the close of the present age, or rather at the beginning of the next, and as a nation will become wonderfully prosperous, far surpassing all other nations, then the end of this age cannot be the end of human history as some teach. The world to come, or the age to come, is an unmeaning phrase, if the termination of the present dispensation is the termination of human existence, or man's existence on the earth in mortal flesh.

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WESTHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of the coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the wisdom and immense wealth employed in [illegible] enterprises, the miracles of modern invention, railways, telegraphy and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research, covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and concise style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

In brief it is a book covering the entire Area, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events, it discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great thinking Hand in working out the purpose of Divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE VAIL UPON THE HEART OF THE JEW.—Part 2.

That vail is a triple one. There are three mistakes, of the first order, that keep the Jew in mental bondage and religious unrest.

1. The first is speculative, and pertains to the philosophy of religion. It involves the denial or surrender of the supernatural element in Divine revelation. Modern speculation has made sad havoc among the Jews. They want a rational, as distinguished from an authoratative, religion. There is a true, a Biblical, a Christian rationalism. Revelation is addressed to the human intelligence, and no man can be asked to believe in anything or anybody, unless good reasons can be urged for such faith. But the rationalism of modern thought discredits altogether both the necessity and the possibility of a Divine communication. Revelation is reduced to reflection, and inspiration is identified with intuition and the patient travail of human thought. With that tide of speculation the Jew is drifting. The reconstruction he is attempting is based on a denial or elimination of the miraculous, a reconstruction from man upwards, and not from God downwards. He interrogates the voice in his own soul, instead of appealing to the ancient oracles of the Word of God. From the authority of Scripture he appeals to the authority of natural reason. He has allowed himself to be beguiled by naturalism. He has been drawn not into materialism, nor into irreligion, but into a refined and ethical scepticism, so far at least to regard all religion as dealing mainly with ethical precepts, as the product of moral intelligence, and not as grounded upon a revelation of God, and from God to man.

Ethical culture represents the idea of religion in the young and aggressive school, an intrusion upon the Jewish soil of modern science and speculation. Religion is no longer denounced as imposture. It is not condemned as an illusion, or branded as the device of priestcraft, nor looked upon as destined to be outgrown. The latest thought accepts it as an original and permanent factor in human life and history, as constitutional and indestructible for man. But it identifies religion with this impulse, the upward look of the human soul. God remains the Great Unknown, pavilioned in impenetrable darkness, withdrawn in eternal silence. Everything is natural, nothing is supernatural, except as everything has its supernatural ground of being in the one eternal, universal force that "works for righteousness."

The God of modern science is impersonal. Man cries for God, but God speaks not to man; man builds his altar, but there is no answering fire from above—that is the agnostic creed. Religion is necessary, but it is only the creature's attempt to reach and to read the riddle of the unknown. And that is the philosophy under whose guidance the Jew is attempting to reconstruct the faith of Abraham, of Moses, and of David. There could not be a bolder venture; but like the fancy of perpetual motion, and the problem of squaring the circle, it involves a palpable contradiction. The denial of revelation involves the burial of religion; and nowhere is this more incontrovertible than in dealing with the Old Testament. Here, if anywhere, the supernatural is initial and controlling; its religion is rooted in the covenant which God has been pleased to make with man.

This modern science of religion would save the Divine sonship of man while sacrificing the Fatherhood of God. But can there be sonship without fatherhood? Must not fatherhood precede and evermore condition sonship, both in the order of thought and of time? These questions are pressing, and they cut the current agnosticism at its tap-root. What kind of a house would that be where the children are calling and seeking all day long and the weary night through, while the parents are invisible and silent? Is that man's posture and doom in the universe? Then is his nature the most painful of all anomalies; then is his reason the most cruel of all endowments. More blessed far, on such a theory, are the lilies of the field and the sparrows on the housetop.

"But what am I?
An infant crying in the night:
An infant crying for the light;
And with no language but a cry."

Does that tell the story? Must that cry mock me all my life long? Is there no mother's heart, no father's ear to respond to it? Believe it who will, I cannot so stultify the intelligence within. I cannot believe in such an exception to the law of correspondence. Shall there be hunger and no bread; thirst, and no water; lungs, and no air; eyes, and no light: the cry of an infant, and no Father? Reason compels a negative answer. The conception that man's search for God is spontaneous and native, that religion is necessary and permanent, carries in it the implication that God may be found, and that he both waits and longs to be discovered. Religion vanishes when revelation is denied or surrendered; "for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The Jew cannot reconstruct his religion on assumptions that make God impersonal and discredit faith in supernatural revelation.

2. The second mistake is critical, dealing with the estimate placed upon the Old Testament writings. The surrender, at the bidding of philosophy, of the supernatural element in revelation, of the idea that God seeks man and has spoken to him, compels a reconstruction not only of the old religion, but of the documents on which it is based, and to which it appeals. If the miracle must be eliminated, the myth must take its place; and the myth requires time for its creation, currency, and its general credence. It is not surprising, therefore, that the new and most radical criticism has found ardent disciples in the Jewish church, to whom it seems the bursting of the long-bolted prison doors. The Old Testament is regarded as the product of a late age, and the patriarchal history as mainly legendary. Genesis is a collection of myths. Exodus is allegorical and poetic. Leviticus is the priestly code of Ezra's time. Deuteronomy is the pious forgery of Hilkiah in the reign of King Josiah. Such is the theory of Knonen and Wellhausen. It makes the myth the mighty factor of religious history. In this theory the modern Jew discovers his door of escape from ritual bondage. For if the ceremonial law is a purely human enactment of a late day, imposed a thousand years after the supposed legislation of Moses, it is plain that it can have no claim to present recognition, and that its continued authority should be earnestly resisted and resented. In such a case the usurpation should not be tolerated another day.

This theory, just now dazzling the uninitiated, has tried its methods, under the ablest scholars of the present century, upon the New Testament, and failed. Strauss substituted the myth for the miracle, and Baur followed with propounding the famous tendency theory, and applying it to the origin of the Christian documents and of the Christian church. But the attempt to reconstruct Christianity on the assumption that the Gospel history was the invention of a later age, and that the resurrection of Christ was the dream of a demented woman, or the impression of a few imaginative souls, has miserably come to nought; and the attempt now making to reconstruct Judaism without the living Abraham as its patriarchal head, and without the living Moses as its great law-giver, is an equally hopeless task. A method that has broken down in the first problem to which it addressed itself, should at least moderate its tone, now that it has shifted its point of attack. Claiming to be inductive and historical, it assumes by its denial of revelation the very question in debate, and mutilates the testimony so as to make it fit the assumption. It lays down its plan as to how the Old Testament religion must have originated, and then coolly proceeds to cut Moses and the prophets to pieces, patching selected remnants together so as to suit the plan. And there is nothing in the history of speculation to match its watchword, that the myth is the creative energy in religious history. The heroism of the ages, we are summoned to believe, has its source and secret in a legend, a sort of fairy tale of the ancient time! Not in that way is history made, not in that way can it be read and understood.

Facts, not fancies, are sovereign. Men, not thoughts, have ruled the world. Ideas never cramped the sceptre until they became incarnate in living prophets. Personality is the central, subtle, sovereign force in history. Until a great thought is voiced, in oral speech, or on printed page, it creates not so much as a ripple, and it inaugurates a revolution only when it finds a mighty advocate. You might as well ignore Washington in a history of the American Revolution, or Napoleon in a survey of modern Europe, making their names legendary, or representative of ideal tendencies, as to eliminate Abraham and Moses from the history of Israel. You might as well think of a circle without a center, or attempt to outline it with compasses poised in air, as account for the mighty sweep of Jewish ideas and institutions without their fixed historic points of departure in patriarch and lawgiver. It would be a mockery of all truth and righteousness to suppose that men could thus be moved by fables. Abraham and Moses must have been as much more real in their personal elevation than Sakya-Mouni and Mohammed, as Judaism has been a loftier religion and a purer teacher of morality than Buddhism or Islam. The truth is, the so-called higher criticism is radically and philosophically misleading, in substituting the legendary for the historical, the ideal for the personal; and the Jew will find it only a delusion and a snare. That way lies the Desert, not the Promised Land.

3. The third fatal mistake is more strictly religious—the abandonment of the Messianic hope. It may be, and this is my own interpretation of the fact, that the darkest hour must precede the dawn, that despair must be the forerunner of faith, that the seed of Abraham must cease to look forward before they will turn to him whom they have pierced. They have waited so long that hope has worn itself out. It is surprising that they have not long since given up their expectation. But the Messianic idea is too deeply imbedded in ritual, psalm, and prophecy, to be eliminated from the Old Testament. It is the backbone, and the pulsing heart, of the ancient faith. Its excision means death. Whatever you may expunge from the Old Testament as incidental or apocryphal, the Messianic hope remains untouched, the earliest and ruling thought of the entire dispensation. Abraham walked by its light. The dying Jacob gave utterance to the faith in the land of Goshen. Moses was its heir and prophet. David gave it larger expansion, and added to its splendor in many a royal psalm. The prophets knew no other theme, and caught the deeper mystery of the passion. And the hope was always personal, centering in the seed of Abraham, the prophet like unto Moses, the royal descendant of David, the suffering Son of Man. The ideal Messiah is the invention of despair, and the refuge of unbelief. The old way of reading the law has involved the Jew in painful bewilderment, and scepticism can give no rest; he needs the faith of Abraham, who saw Christ's day, and he must read Moses anew, without the vail upon his heart, until the glory of Jesus Christ bursts upon his weary and waiting eyes.

But is the vail only upon the heart of the Jew? Are there no veiled hearts here? Ignorance is a vail, indifference is a vail, indecision is a vail, prejudice is a vail; these are the things that perplex and paralyze the souls of men, and block the way of many into the kingdom of God. God speaks to you, but you will not answer. God invites and pleads, but you will not come. God stretches out his hands to the seed of Abraham, but we frown upon their advance, or are indifferent to their perplexity. My heart goes out after the Jew. Two thousand years of hereditary prejudice, during which time he has been an object of scorn, and contempt, and oppression, hedge his way. I can appreciate his bewilderment as he asks "Can this Gentile faith be the true religion, when its professed disciples despise and crush the sons of Jacob?" I am afraid that, were I a Jew, I should answer that question as he does. Germany drives him beyond her boundaries. Austria tells the world that marriage with a Jewess is an unpardonable social offence, and the shameful ostracism is not confined to Europe. Shame on us, the Founder of whose religion had only the purest Jewish blood in his veins! Shame on us whose heritage of Christian liberty was secured for us by a son of Benjamin, a pupil of Gamaliel, Hebrew of the Hebrews, a Pharisee of the Pharisees! Can we ever pay the debt we owe to Paul "of the seed of Benjamin?" Are we not crucifying Christ in our treatment of his national kinsmen? I can understand the Jew's perplexity and hesitation, for we have done our best to keep the vail upon his heart. But I cannot understand —and this is the practical application of my thought—how any man, who has had a praying mother, and who has lived in the open light of Christ's Gospel, can be indifferent or hostile to Christianity. The Jew I can excuse; you I cannot. For the Israelite, conversion to Christ must be the hardest of all things; for you and for me it should be the easiest and the earliest, and the sin of rejection in us is a thousand-fold more inexcusable and wicked than it can be in the lineal descendants of Abraham. Nay, I behold the unconverted Gentiles barring the path to the cross for the sons of Israel, and I can understand the strange logic of the Epistle to the Romans, that only when the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in will the hardships of Israel give way. They have been scattered to the ends of the earth; they have been ground between the millstones of race prejudices; but they have maintained their lineage and blood, and they have never ceased to be proud of their traditions. The future has its mission for them, but our hands must break the bars and beat down the gates that have hitherto kept them back. Even in their exile, they are beloved for the fathers' sake, and their conversion can be nothing less than life from the dead, the herald of the millennial reign.—A. J. F. Behrends, D. D. in Israel's Watchman.

THE JEWELS AND THE PROPERTY.

"For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face: now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity; these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Cor. xiii. 12, 13.

Prophecies and tongues were to cease, and knowledge to vanish away, but love would never fail. It was possible to speak with tongues of angels, to resolve deep mysteries, even to remove old mountains, and yet not to have that love divine from which the spices blow. How transcendent in beauty celestial that holy thing which suffers long and is kind. "Love envieth not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, does not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." The 12th chapter of this Epistle contains a wonderful account of ancient supernatural worship, in the overflowing wealth and fulness of a creative epoch. They sang, and prayed, and prophesied under miraculous afflatus. The inspiration descended from above, and the worship ascended to its unseen fountain-head. No liturgy or litanies elaborated by the intellect and the devout heart, but God's Holy Spirit blew the divine music through the human organ pipes, and shook the harp-strings of the mortal, until there was solemn gladness or triumphant rapture. Well, the manifold gifts are certainly gone, though we may fail in assigning any satisfactory reason for their cessation. It is possible that the miraculous gifts were mere temporary scaffolding for the erection of the stately Christian edifice. If this will not suffice, then we may say that the beautiful woman in her splendid attire grew vain, haughty, and arrogant; and God stripped her of her misused jewels. But a great lady may lose all her jewels, and yet her estates remain inviolate. The jewels are gone, but the property remains. "And now abideth faith, hope, love; these three, but the greatest of these is love."

We have seen a theory to this effect, —that the gifts were to remain until the will of God was thoroughly made known in a completed authoritative canon, and that when such object was secured that perfect state of things arrived which Paul anticipated,—in noble manhood and clear vision. This theory, however, will hold no water, and is manifestly inadequate. The gifts have long been gone, and the canon has long been completed, but we do not yet stand face to face with absolute reality. We are still children who can see but a little way, and stammer in telling what we see. Our knowledge is partial and our utterance is broken. The truth is, we are still in that condition of childhood portrayed by the Apostle, and see but in a glass darkly,—the imperfect mirror of the ancients must always be borne in mind,—and besides seeing truth dimly, we see many things in the glass which it were well we had never seen; we conceive as children and articulate as children, but nevertheless we believe in a time when we shall see clearly and speak distinctly. In the age of ripe manhood, standing face to face with radiant truth and divinest reality we shall know even as we are known. We walk by lamp-light in a dusky place waiting for the supreme sunrise,—the golden splendor of a day which begins with glory.

Our old divines have given us many weighty sayings, but some of them were only smart and epigrammatic without any depth or cogency. One of the latter kind had reference to the passage before us. "Faith shall be lost in sight, and hope in full fruition, but love shall be eternal." To this we make answer, in the first place, that faith and hope are in the essential structure and belong to the very constitution of man. If we were on the shore where all the nobles of a greater age gather in immortal beauty and regal power; if we were in the City of God where no outside luminary is needed, but all the surpassing light flows direct from his own face, there would still be something to hope for, and something to believe; testimonies to be received by credence, and glories to be looked forward to with desire and expectation. Man is a progressive being, and who can set a limit to his advancement? Certain it is at any rate, that while he advances, climbing one eminence after another in the sublime country, faith and hope must be his companions on the road.

But we answer in the second place, —that the saying is very loosely tacked to the apostolic statement. The apostle is not saying, "there are three sisters; two of them immortal and unfading;" he is teaching something the direct contrary. He is teaching that there are three sisters in one holy family; all eternal; all abiding. They all have the force of eternity in them, and the bloom of immortality upon them; but the youngest is transcendent in grace and beauty,—the greatest and fairest of the three. Faith blossoms into hope, hope ripens into love, and love is the perfect fruit in the Paradise of God. "Now abideth faith, hope, love." Some one might perhaps say, "If love be the perfect fruit, are not the two former graces in some sense superseded and lost?" To which we reply, —there might be something in that if we only looked for our harvest and vintage. But we want the golden grain and the purple grapes while the ages roll on, and therefore the process remains eternal. The sisters are all of the divine and they abide for ever and ever. When impostors frame theories of ethics and religion, they betray themselves by outraging the philosophy of mind and life, and the scientific laws and conditions of our common humanity.

God who built the structure has provided us with a religion in strict correspondence with our nature; and Christ received into the heart brings with him solemn harmony. We must believe; even men of the world have to live by faith in the life which borders upon death. As thought is the working power of the understanding, so faith is the working power of life. The men who dream of living by reason are the most absurd of creatures, for such a thing is utterly impossible. Each man—profane or holy—has his theory of life, and his purpose in life; and his spirit goes forth towards his ideal, and his soul cleaves to the things which are desired. Find out what a man is pursuing, get the direction in which he is drifting or driving, and you discover what his faith really is. Without faith none of us can live, the wheels of life would stand still, and the business of the world stagnate, if we did not receive the testimony of each other, and with a still deeper faith every man pursue his own ideal.

God who knows the principles of action with which he has provided us, gave us something glorious to believe, and made the evidence commanding. "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "We are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

To speak for a moment of Christ rather than of Christianity,—we may say that in the majesty and range of his power, in the wisdom and penetration of his doctrine, in the sanctity and radiance of his life, such a being was far beyond the conception of our race. His voice is the voice of a God who utters authentic tidings, and he opens immortal wings for our shelter and pavilion. He brings the everlasting kingdom near to us, and supplies the education and training for rank and dominion in his house and his court.

We must live by faith; the difference being simply this,—that those who trust in the flesh and in the world are perishing along with their idols; whereas faith in the Son of God replenishes with life eternal, and the city of God is open to receive the living.

We cannot do without hope. It is a wondrous charm, idealizing and transforming common things. No man can live entirely in the present,—the artisan, the sailor, the merchant,—all who fight with forces of land or sea, are painting some ideal shore where they may anchor and be done with strife and toil and tumult. God has given us something to hope for. Christian hope lays hold upon the sure promise, confirmed by divine oath, that by these two immutable things we might have strong consolation. Our citizenship is in heaven from whence we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, to change the body of our humiliation, and fashion it like unto his own glorious body, according to the energy of his working. The sublime translation, the city of God, the perfect rest, the eternal communion, the stainless glory, the vision of God, no language may portray.

The men of this world, though they could not live their own distempered life even without hope of some kind, have no hope beyond the present shores; for the future is to them but darkness without moon or star. They neither know where they start from nor whither they are going; their scheme has neither beginning nor consummation. We, on the contrary, have a defined terminus, a goal where all things good and fair shine forth in perfect development, and in glory beyond the chorus of the imagination.

We cannot live without love. The most brutal would be shocked or offended if we were to say, "Did you ever love any one? did your eyes ever grow brighter, or your face kindle, when you saw the face or heard the footstep of some dear one?" Sad and dreary as things are, how much worse the world would be were the light of love not shining even in very dark places, where the holiest light has never penetrated, but nature remains raw and void.

Now God has given us such a revelation of the fulness and infinity of his love in the person and work of his dear Son, that our hearts are turned to God in Christ with ineffable desire. "We love him because he first loved us:" and because he is worthy of all worship and adoration. We remember the beautiful invocation: "O daughter.... forget thine own people and thy father's house, so shall the king greatly desire thy beauty, for he is thy lord and worship thou him." Hence we try to forget our own people in the flesh, and that house of fallen nature from which we were rescued by distinguishing love, that the king may have desire and pleasure in our spiritual beauty, and that all our worship may be given unto him.

Without disparaging the first-born sister, we may certainly say that she is masculine, goes along with grand solid steps, and will admit of no trifling. Unbelief is drunken and wavering, reels and staggers, but faith has the firmness of a rock. Her voice is, "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Whether fighting the enemy in active valor, or enduring wrath passively, or soaring to the throne eternal, she always has confidence and boldness. She obtains promises, stops the mouths of lions, works righteousness, inherits a kingdom, and rises within the veil.

Hope is more ethereal—if not so comprehensive—for unlike faith she cannot look backward. She has no eyes behind, but looks steadily forward—with eyes brighter than the morning star—to the supreme splendor of the great gathering; and sees in the center the object of all high and holy desire,—even him who is "fairer than ten thousand and altogether lovely." Her lamp is of purple, and her wings of unconquerable strength are of blended colors finer than the trailing sunlight in western skies. And the grace and lustre are combined with invincible force. There is the assurance of hope,—it is an anchor of the soul sure and steadfast. There is a sea much wider than the great deep of the natural world, and where the tragedies are still more awful. We all have to do business therein, and find by experience the bitterness of its salt waves, and the force of its tempest. Truly we need an anchor that is "sure and steadfast," and we have one in divine hope. The wind may blow vehemently, and the waters rise proudly, but this anchor will hold the vessel.

Love, the generous and godlike, the greatest of the three, is the very element and atmosphere of life in the Son of God; of life in the power of the Spirit. Though in perfect harmony with her sisters, she can find considerable rest and enjoyment even in the present. Her rosy warmth and perfume are spread over all things, veiling or transforming; she covers a multitude of sins, and awakens springs of life even in the wilderness. Love is the perfect fruit in the supernatural country to which we belong; in its exercise we discover that we have passed from death unto life; and we lay hold, in measure, of the perfection of that God and Father who spreads impartial sunshine over good and evil, and sends his rain upon the just and the unjust.

Nor is the beautiful one shrinking, for she is bold even in the day of judgment. When convulsion rends the rocks asunder, and disparts the old mountains; when natural and supernatural terrors abound; when thrones disappear and the nations tremble, the perfect love which casteth out fear shall give us quietness and assurance for ever.—C. Greenwell, in Rainbow.

Obscure Heroism.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of the daily routine of home life, and imagine we could be far happier in other scenes. We think of life's great battlefield, and wish to be heroes. We think of the good we might do if our lot had been cast in different scenes. We forget that the world bestows no title as noble as father, mother, sister, or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances for heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care of the sick, may all seem as nothing, yet who can tell the good they accomplish? One slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if our harvest is one we will be proud to garner.—Free Banner.

THE RESTITUTION.

NUMBERS of the children of Abraham according to the flesh are beginning to clearly see that the prophecies concerning the Messiah are fulfilled to the very letter in the person and history of Jesus Christ, so far as humiliation and suffering are concerned; and also to see that those predictions, that relate to their own restoration to the land promised to their fathers, depend for fulfilment, upon his return from heaven to earth. We commend the careful reading of a few articles, prepared expressly for THE RESTITUTION by Bro. J. Cameron, of Edinburgh, Scotland, to our Hebrew friends; especially, as it is the object of the writer to show the accurate correspondence between prophecy and history as applicable to Jesus of Nazareth.

As we commend the articles of Bro. J. Cameron to the unprejudiced consideration of our Jewish friends, so we direct the attention of professed Christians to a communication of Bro. Jobbin, the first part of which will be found in the present number of our paper. It contains some very close and much needed warnings to those who have named the name of Christ. How sad it is to think how many dead branches are becoming severed from the Heavenly Vine in these closing hours of Gentile times. Alas, alas, to think that fuel is preparing for the fires of judgment in this way. Multitudes are "departing from the faith," and "the love of the many is waxing cold." How important it is for us all to heed the admonition of the Apostle, "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." Brethren, though we are in the world, let us not be of the world.

Natural and Spiritual.

The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

No man can call Jesus, Lord, but by the Holy Spirit; hence, those not receiving Jesus Christ as the Son of God are carnally-minded, are sinful, because they believe not the testimony God hath given of his Son. To reject the doctrine of Christ being the "only begotten Son of God" is to be without God, and without hope in the world. No man, says Christ, can come to me except the Father draw him, and God does not draw souls to himself but by the way of faith in Christ's name, and obedience to his command. This brings peace and rest to the weary. One who knows nothing of the emotions of the heart as the result of the consciousness of being made acceptable to God, in being conformed to Christ's death, ever bearing about in the body the marks of the Lord Jesus Christ, must be a person with a selfish and worldly disposition, a sinful person, loving pleasure and being conformed to the buggarly elements of the present evil world, delighting in the present arrangement of things; politically, ecclesiastically, socially, etc., that now permeates human circles with their influence.

Those who are being entangled now in the net of the elements, are they not living in pleasure? Those who live in pleasure, are they not looking to the things that are seen, and temporal, and are passing away, and so living in sin, and is it not because they are dead to a consecrated life to God? Moses chose affliction with the people of God rather than the pleasures of sin. Did the apostle call looking after the interests of the Egyptian kingdom "pleasures of sin?" Then how careful we should be lest we should be found justifying ourselves in loving those things that Moses forsook.

Those who love the present order of things, in the love of the Father in such an one? Is not the life rather conformed to the will of the powers that be, the carnal mind consenting? Though one submit to power, yet it is not necessary to be conformed to, or like the power. The pleasure-seeking man, the worldly man, fleshly-minded man, is estranged from God.

The carnal or fleshly-minded man is not, and will not be diverted from selfish intents. Is our garment unspotted from the political or ecclesiastical element? Look again; be sure about it. "One is your Master, even Christ." No power but that of God can draw the mind away from the course (age) of the world. What do you limit yourself to, as the legitimate right of one whose citizenship is in heaven? In other words, what particular methods that are endorsed by those who are "careful for many things," do you consider yourself free to leave with them to look after?

It seems to me that in your answer will be manifest either your liberty in Christ, or your choice to "be careful for" everything. All who are ignorant of the Scriptures, and as a result ignorant of the power of God, are carnal, and "the natural man receiveth not," because they are spiritually discerned, they are the things of the Spirit of God.

The things that are in the world are earthly, are temporal, and are changing, passing away. Still the senses are affected by them, the life is controlled by those things that are for but a moment. The element of attraction in the world overpowers the element of resistance in the man; the result is, the resistence is lost, or merges into the beggarly elements of the world. The man no longer resists but is conformed to, or like the powers that control, and God allows it.

Such an experience is a state of death to the noble and higher claims upon his soul, mind, heart, and strength. A carnal mind is enmity against God and proves itself so, by its rebellion against the law of God, for it is not subject to the law of God neither indeed can be. To be carnally minded is to be sinful, it may be solely the result of ignorance, or it may be partially the result of having rejected truth, which makes the creature more to be abhorred. A carnal mind as the result of unbelief is the most solemn thing to contemplate. A carnal mind and sin are closely associated, a carnal mind is the root and sin, the fruit upon the tree of unrighteousness, the planting of Satan. A carnal mind is set against a spiritual mind, is opposed to righteousness because its strength comes from a root of an opposite nature, you cannot graft a righteous branch to an unrighteous tree expecting good fruit from the branch, all unrighteousness is sin, and the end of sin is death. The mind attracted by the flesh and drawn toward, and fastened upon temporal things, and continued, worketh death, because they who seek comfort from earthly sources will meet with disappointment and sorrow, which tendeth toward death; to be filled with the sorrow and cares of the world is sin, the command being, "Be not overcharged with the cares of this world." Sin is the transgression of the law, and to transgress the law, is to be unholy, unjust and evil, all unrighteousness is sin, to him who knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin, even so the fulfilling of the law is to be free from sin and to be righteous, or holy, just, and good. To fulfill the law is to love God with all thy soul, heart, mind and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself, Christ being the end of the law for righteousness to every one who believeth. Righteousness and a spiritual mind, are associates, they hold no fellowship with a carnal mind and iniquity, the spiritual mind is the friend of God. Faith in God and love for God and hope towards God produces good works, or the fruit of righteousness; a spiritual mind is the root of righteousness; the mind attracted toward God through his word and works tends to spirituality, to be spiritually minded is life and peace, the end of faith is salvation, "eternal life;" while "the sorrow of the world worketh death, Godly sorrow worketh repentance that needeth not to be repented of," because such sorrow is the fruit of a spiritual mind and tends to or worketh life. Contemplation of God's works, excites to faith: "the heavens declare his glory, and the stars showeth forth his handiwork, day unto day uttereth speech, night unto night showeth knowledge," and is a power as an argument in favor of the existence of the true and living God, such knowledge should be an element tending when uncontrolled by Satan to consider the claims and needs of others and thus be led to do right. Work righteousness, when faith enters through a belief of the gospel, further knowledge is revealed, that "Christ Jesus is of God made unto us wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification and redemption, that according as it is written, he that glorieth let him glory in the Lord."

Oh to be spiritually minded, to be like Christ, ever more and more like him in all things, to be transformed completely by the renewing of our minds toward him, concerning him who was in all points tried as we are, yet without sin.

The Sphere and Official Power of the Christ and His Ability as Revealed in God's Word.

"O God of fathers and Lord of thine own mercy, thou who didst create all things in the use of thy word, and in thy wisdom didst fit man to become sole lord of the persons and things created and which have come to pass by thy fiat, and to sway the cosmos in holiness and righteousness, and to judge in uprightness of soul, grant me the wisdom that is seated beside thy thrones, and reject me not as of no value among thy servants."

These are the opening words of the prayer of Solomon in "The Wisdom of Solomon," chapter 10, verses 1, 2, 3 and 4. This, he says, is the prayer he offered when a young man, and which God answered in such a wondrous way. It is a part of Solomon's confession of his experience, and as the prayer proved acceptable to God, we can safely conclude that the conceptions of God's plan and purpose in creation stated therein are truthful and intelligent. I have quoted it therefore as a text upon which to suspend the following argument which I am about to make; and I assume that the prophecy and potency of God's purpose in regard to man as herein stated has been realized in the man "Jesus the Christ," and that he is the embodiment of the wisdom here spoken of as "seated beside God's thrones" and the manifestation of it to mankind in his life and teachings.

What then is the sphere of the authority committed to him and what his official power? The term "cosmos" here used is elsewhere (Gen. ii. 1) defined to be "the cosmos of the heavens and the earth." This then is the sphere or scope of his official power and with this is it coextensive, no more and no less. As "a son of man" he "inherited" this promise of "potency and power" and having fulfilled "the conditions" he has "realized" the promise of "sonship" and become "a Son of God" in fact, "a first-fruits" too of those who had "fallen asleep" in the good hope of it. His sphere of rule then is the cosmos of the heavens (the canopy) and the earth—not heaven itself as is commonly taught. David in his antetype as "king" and Solomon his antetype as the embodiment of God's wisdom conferred. Notice the language of the prayer as quoted above says God's thrones not throne. David's throne was one of God's thrones. God put him upon it because he saw fit and because he was a man after his own heart. Read God's talk with Samuel in regard to this particular throne, when he was about to delegate the official power belonging to it to another. Read the prophets who follow, especially Hosaias and Jezekiel. Read what Luke says about the legitimacy of this Son of David, and where, when and how he is going to rule. Read Christ's own parable of God's vineyard and "his son and heir." Read the first and second chapters of Hebrews and learn how the angels have been made subject to him as instrumental agencies in subjecting the whole cosmos of the heavens and the earth to him. Read the ode of Moses, Deut. xxxii., and learn the fact that God first subjects this same cosmos of the heavens and the earth to a certain number of these angels pending its subjection and theirs to the rule of the Son.

Read Paul's epistles and the Gospels and learn how Jesus the Christ has committed and distributed the work of this subjection of the cosmos to his saints. Learn from the Psalms and other portions of the oracular word of God the fact that to those weak, mortal men God through the Christ has graciously granted the ability (not power merely) to wield all the forces which we commonly denominate natural laws through the agency of higher spiritual laws which control them. Learn from the Christ's life how this is done. Go on from your first baby-step of "miraculous" wonder to some intelligent comparison of the ability which the Christ exemplified under his spiritual endowment from on high. Learn how he stilled the storm, whether of the elements or of the passions of men, how "he spake as never man spake," how he awoke the dead to life again as well as healed the sick.

Don't be satisfied with mere staring wonder at the fact. Learn that in doing these things he was but beginning to assert his high prerogative of "Sonship" offered to Adam under the simple condition of obedience, an obedience which he failed to conform to, but which Jesus the Christ did conform to, and therefore obtained. Think then what "swaying a cosmos" signifies, and what "the spiritual weapons of our warfare" are. Enlarge the horizon of your "all things" when you next think of the "all things are yours." Learn that "walking by faith" is not walking in the dark, but "in the light," in the illumination of blind eyes that have been opened, and of a "darkened understanding" that hath been "lit up" with light from on high. Don't forget that the language of faith was, is and always will be, "I have believed, therefore have I spoken." This is not the language of credulity either. We never believe anything in the ordinary affairs of this life except upon evidence of some sort and a careless credulity is sooner or later invariably punished. Just so in spiritual things. The exhortation is to be "wise as serpents, harmless as doves." One must be able to discriminate between the lies of Satan and the truths of God. There is plenty of counterfeit truth in circulation too that looks all right to the careless and credulous, who pass it along without so much as suspecting its worthlessness. Then we all of us prefer to have its spurious character determined after we have used it and passed it along. We wouldn't "like to be found dead with it upon us." But many a foolish generation that thought and reasoned thus has been so found and what will they do "in the searching examination of the great day?"

To review and sum up let us examine this coin of God's own mint, this extract from the wise man's prayer of his youth and, as it is a genuine coin, mark some of its other genuine characteristics as well as those immediately bearing upon our theme.

And first the recognition of the new familiar fact of the "Fatherhood" of God; second the fact not so universally recognized and accepted that he is the Lord (controller) of his own mercy; third that he created (was the author of) all things "in the use of (ev not dia nor ek) his word;" fourth that in his own wisdom he fitted man to become sole lord of these persons and things so created and which have come to pass by reason of this fiat that went forth; fifth that man was and is by this fiat destined "to sway the cosmos" (of the heavens and earth) "in holiness and righteousness." Now cosmos means an order of things arranged according to harmonic law or laws. To sway a cosmos then implies a knowledge of and control of the laws according to which it is constituted. Think of how little man yet knows of the laws of this cosmos and how his knowledge and comprehension are to be enlarged in the wisdom and mercy of God when "his truth has full course to run and be glorified." Notice too that this enlargement comes only with holiness and righteousness; sixth that man is to judge, "For all judgment hath been committed unto the Son of man because he is a son of man." Here again the realization is in uprightness of soul (organic form, no ghost business) "in the true image" in other words, no cringing, crawling, sycophantic serpent business. Observe we have reached the six "creative perfections." There are no more. A sixth is a double major in music and there is nothing in this cosmos without number.

Now who is "The Christ" and what his ability? He is first a "son of man" and therefore an heir presumptive to this aeon or "rule," a partaker of flesh and blood in common with all of Adam's race on his mother's side and therefore "flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone;" but "a first begotten" and "an only begotten on the Father's side, and therefore by his very birthright "enabled" by this birthright to rise to the realization of his high calling in God. But even "the Christ" must fulfil law, because he is born under law, must "be tried in all points as we are" and reach the harmonic "third" before he can realize the "heirship" and "sonship." He must moreover "exemplify" and "manifest" and "bear witness" to the fact of this "divine enablement," in short "fulfil" even before Pontius Pilate "the good confession." "Art thou a king?" Answer: "Thou sayest it." "The Christ" means "The Anointed King." David as king was "God's Anointed." Jesus as a "Son of David" was heir presumptive to David's throne. David's throne had in it the "promise and potency" of universal empire. This promise and potency was typified and partially realized in the glorious reign of Solomon his son. But the full realization of faith must still look forward to in the "full sonship" and in the real Zadqeem (the One Alone Who Saves) of whom that Solomon was merely a type, the actual "royalty of righteousness," the full "endowment from on high," the full investiture with the divine ability which could not come to mere flesh and blood, but which must have its appropriate organic instrumentality, namely "the spiritual body," and this we find "Jesus the Christ" as "The First Fruits" was the first to receive, that he might be "first in all respects," we are told, because to him belongs "the headship" of the whole new organic body, the energizing principle of which is spirit-life not soul-life, eternal life not mortal life, and, moreover, emphatically the real not the imaginary "ghost" life of heathenish superstition, "the beginning," "the foretaste," "the first-fruits," the "bonus on the contract," "the earnest penny," of which the truly "regenerate" receive now in the flesh as "an assurance of the destined realization of the full "promise and potency" in God's "due time" under his "Covenant of Grace," when "this Christ" will have asserted his great "official power" with which he has been "invested" by "The Father" and in the final "distribution" of it among "the saints in light" will rule as "King of kings" and "Lord of lords" "until he shall have put all the enemies under his feet; (the last enemy abolished is death; for he hath put all things under his feet; but manifestly he is excepted who put all things under his [death's feet] when he said all things have been made subject;) when therefore all things have been subjected by him, then will he, the Son, subject himself to the One who made all things subject to him, that God may be all in all." This then is the "official power" of the Christ and his ability to assert it is the divine "energy" of spiritual life with which he has been invested "without measure," by "his and our Father."

CHAS. GARDNER.

How Can We Judge One Another?

What right have we to judge? Can we look down deep into human hearts and see the workings of their inner consciousness? Can we see the trials, the struggles, the cravings for sympathy, justice and appreciation? Can we see unkind words, disappointed hopes, unsatisfied longings for happiness which have warped and twisted the developing character? Are we able to discern the slumbering desire for goodness and purity, which needed only a word perhaps to start it into life? Are we so omniscient that we can discern the motive which governed and created by all these circumstances, has caused the result which is before us?

Can we do all this? No! We cannot, and we have no right to judge. A judge gives a criminal the benefit of every doubt, takes into consideration all the circumstances of the case, his former character, the provocation, and the motive which prompted the crime. Do we do like-wise in our judgments of each other. Do we give them the benefit of doubts? Do we take into consideration all the human nature there is in us, that we are not one of us perfect? Do we realize that each one has traits of character that need rounding off and bringing into shape, that we are all only children in the school of life? that these mistakes, failures as we call them, are all necessary to our growth? No! we do not. We look at deeds, forgetting all about causes and motives, and think we would have done thus and so. Don't be so sure. The very things which we condemn in others and gaze upon with such cold critical eyes, were we placed in the same circumstances, surrounded by like influences would work out the same results in us, and perhaps even worse. We have circumstances to thank not our own superior qualities. There is less bad in people than we will admit. Few do evil for the mere love of it. They make mistakes, are thoughtless, or perhaps out of the purest kind-heartedness and the best of motives, do something that evil minds construe into some dreadful wrong.

Let us then be kind and considerate and remember that we are all children of one Father, that each wants charity and justice, and that "with what measure we mete it shall be measured to us again." There is room and dire necessity for all the charity and forgiveness that we can give to our weak, erring fellow-beings. It needs must be heaped up and running over, love without measure.

Please say to the brethren scattered, that if the Lord wills, I will be at Macy, Miami Co., Ind., on the Fifth Sunday in May, and will preach wherever the brethren there may decide. Any of the brethren who desire my labors will write to me at Galesburg, Kan., up to May, 24, after that direct to Macy, Ind. All are invited to come, as I would be glad to meet many of our friends, and have a good and pleasant time with them once more in mortality. Perhaps this will be our last, as Gentile times are closing. The Lord will soon come. Yours in hope.

The Midnight Chorus.

"A little child shall lead them."

It was midnight when the northern train rushed into the station at U——, usually so busy and bustling, but now comparatively quiet and deserted.

There was a delay of some minutes, but no one got out. Many of the travellers were half asleep. Others were settling themselves comfortably in their wraps and rugs, preparing for their long night journey before them.

Suddenly the silence was broken by a loud, harsh voice from one of the carriages beginning to roar out a profane and ribald song. What the words were I am thankful to say I do not know, but they were bad enough to horrify every one who heard them.

All the passengers were shocked and indignant. They would gladly have silenced the vile insolent singer, but how was this to be done?

Hark! another voice is heard, sweet, clear, and child-like; the voice of a little girl, distinctly singing the words,

"Glory to thee, my God, this night,
For all the blessings of the light;
Keep me, oh, keep me, King of kings,
Beneath thine own Almighty wings."

Only a few notes were sung, when the hint was taken, and another voice joined, then another and another. Manly basses and tenors threw in their deep tones with all their strength, and soon a full and powerful volume of song to the glory of God—"the voice of a great multitude"—poured forth, and the voice of the profane singer was heard no more.

Joyful with an angel's joy must that happy child have been, as with clasped hands and streaming eyes she murmured, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

And deeply moved was many a heart, as they joined in this triumph of good over evil, of love and reverence over scorn and hatred, of Christ over Satan.

Surely "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou has perfected praise."

This little incident, in its touching beauty, is like a picture, full of suggestions. It speaks for itself. Still we may for a few moments dwell on one, at least, of its lessons.

How far better is it to act, than to deplore!

Many of the passengers were probably saying, "Why don't they stop that horrid man?" "What a shame to let us be annoyed in this way!" How shocking! How disgraceful!" All these protests, and hundreds more, would not have been of the least use. The godless singer would still have shouted on, offending the ears and corrupting the minds of them who heard.

But when the hymn begins, what a revulsion it creates! When the youthful singer sounded the first trembling note, she little knew the electric thrill it would send through many hearts. She little dreamed that her feeble touch could awaken such a burst of praise.

Here, then, is a heart-cheering lesson even to the faintest and feeblest believer. Do not waste time in moaning, deprecating, and lamenting; but, with child-like love and hope, lead the way to better things. Sound the first note of and trust God for the result.—E. Wakeham, in British Messenger.

"Glory to Thee,"

BERLIN, May 16.—An uneasy feeling has been created in Berlin by strong articles in tonight's issues of two semi-official papers dealing with the proposed mobilization of the two French army corps. Die Post points out in very vigorous language that the mere probability of any two French army corps being called out forces every French General to have his corps ready to obey the mobilization call at the shortest notice. "Thus," says Die Post, "by an apparently innocent device, ordering the mobilization of two army corps, but leaving the selection of these corps undecided for a while, Gen. Boulanger will place the whole French army on the qui vive. When he does mobilize two corps he thus will have the whole army so far ready as in four days to be able to pour five army corps across the defenseless German frontier." After pointing out the ease with which the French army, once ready for war, could make an excuse to attack unprepared Germany, Die Post asks whether Germany must not also begin to arm by calling out not only two but several army corps. "Yes," it answers, "we must in such an event mobilize our army; moreover, we must summon all the serviceable horses and all the trained soldiers from Reichsland. For once the French are in Lorraine and all the horses in the annexed provinces will be seized. With the horses probably will also go over to the French army a large part of the men of Alsace and Lorraine whom we so carefully trained to fight."

Will you help us by getting one or two Trial Subscribers?

Any one knowing the present address of John Baylor, who used to live at Willow Point, Texas, will confer a favor on us by sending it to this office.

We have received a money order of $2.00 from Auburn, Cal., with no letter of instruction. Will the person sending it please give his order and we will fill it promptly.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed specially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

The Vandalia R. R. has changed its time table, but too late to be corrected in our regular column this week. The mail train goes South at 6:25 a. m. and North at 12:3, p. m. and the Express goes South at 2:10 p. m., and North at 10:12 p. m.

The corrected table will appear in our next issue.

Read our book list—The Emphatic Diaglott reduced from $4.00 to $2.50. Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Bible, for $1.50. Smith's Bible Dictionary only $1.50. Views and Reviews in Eschatology—the last work of J. H. Pettingell—for $1.00. Do not fail to secure this book, it is good, and worth double the price asked for it. Tracts for distribution by the pound for 80 cents.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

London papers call attention to the extreme and growing pauperism of the East End Jews. The total number of Jews in the Metropolis is astonishingly small, being estimated at 46,000. Of these no fewer than 14,850 received aid last year. Figures which are accepted by the Jews themselves as authoritative, show that last year, every third Jew in London was actually in receipt of poor-relief, every second Jew belonged to the regular pauper class, and every second Jewish funeral which took place in the Metropolitan area was a pauper funeral.

New Orleans has 171 churches, which is a larger supply than is generally credited to the gay city. The Baptist head the list with fifty churches, the Methodists are second with thirty-six churches, and the Roman Catholics third, with thirty-five churches.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Illinois Conference will convene at East Plum River, Ill., Friday, June 3, at 3 o'clock p. m. and continue over the following Sunday. Teams will be in Lanark to convey the brethren from a distance to the meeting. A general invitation is extended to all.

SONG OF PRAISE.

Air: "Still with Thee."

When Eloquent music with devoting radiance beaming,
Pours on my waking soul its ecstacy,
Then let my song as incense upward streaming,
Rise to thy throne, oh God, unceasingly.

When through the burning noon and evening waning,
With borrowed strength from thee I toil along;
My heart and voice are undeath uncomplaining
To render thanks and praise to thee in song.

When weary eyes in deepening shades are closing,
Silence and darkness have no dread for me.
In quiet confidence I am reposing,
My lowly lullaby, my song to thee.

A Chapter in Jewish History of Real Interest to the Jews.—No. I.

בני בכרי ישראל
"Israel is my son, my first-born." Ex. iv. 22.

מזרה ישראל יקבצנו
"He that scattered Israel will gather him." Jer. xxxi. 10.

וכרתי את־בית ישראל ואת־בית יהודה ברית חדשה
"I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31.

In the year of the world according to the received Hebrew chronology, 3788, that is, about forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, there appeared in Judea a singular personage in the character of a public teacher. A historian of the time gives the following minute account of the circumstances:—

"In the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene, Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."

He was a native of Judea, and was the son of a priest named Zacharias. His singularity consisted in his assumption of the prophets' garb, rough sackcloth of camels' hair, fastened with a girdle of leather; while his food was a large winged grasshopper termed "locust," with the "wild honey" found in the hollow trees and rocks of the wilder part of Judea bordering on the salt sea and the southern part of the river Jordan where it flows into that lake. But another element of his singular character consisted in his message to the people, "Repent, for the kingdom of the heavens is at hand;" and yet another in his practice of baptising his converts in the Jordan and neighboring waters, for the remission of their sins.

A writer of that time who had been in the service of the Roman government as a tax-gatherer, wrote an account of many things that took place in connection with the mission of this teacher, as well as other matters which followed. He tells us that because of his practice just referred to he was called John the Baptist. He mentions that great multitudes out of Jerusalem and Judea went to him and were baptized, confessing their sins. Even many of the Pharisees and Sadducees, two of the learned sections of the Jews, came to his baptism. His reception of them was peculiar. He addressed them in the following remarkable terms as narrated by the historian already referred to,—

"O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance: and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

Another historian of that time who had been originally a fisherman at the sea of Galilee, and a native of that district, gives us some information as to this last point in John's address to the Pharisees and Sadducees. The idea seems to have been entertained that John the Baptist was the Christ, at least was able to give some information concerning him. This historian records that while John was prosecuting his mission, a deputation of priests and Levites was sent down from Jerusalem with the inquiry, "Who art thou?" His answer was, "I am not THE MESSIAH." They asked, "What then? Art thou Elijah?" He replied, "I am not." "Art thou that prophet?" He answered, "No." "Who art thou then? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?"

"He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias. And they which were sent were of the Pharisees. And they asked him, and said unto him, why baptizest thou then if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet? John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you whom ye know not; he it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose. These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing."

After a short mission of only a few years, John was arrested and put in prison by Herod Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, because he had questioned the lawfulness of Herod's marriage with his brother's wife Herodias. Shortly afterwards he was beheaded at the instigation of Herodias through a hasty oath taken by Herod to his step-daughter.

The person pointed to by John had by this time appeared in Galilee, and was engaged in proclaiming the same message introduced by his forerunner, John the Baptist, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand." Unlike his predecessor, however, he entered the synagogues, and the houses of the people, and taught in the streets of their cities, and even in the courts of the temple at Jerusalem. On one occasion in the synagogue at Nazareth in Galilee, he stood up to read. "And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. And he began to say unto them, This day is the Scripture fulfilled in your ears. And all bare him witness and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth."

Having thus applied this prophecy to himself, it need not be matter of wonder that in more private intercourse with those he met, he claimed to be the Messiah, or that he was so recognized by those who became his followers. And all the more so seeing that he taught his followers that "the meek should inherit the earth," just as David, King of Israel, had declared in one of his Psalms (xxxvii. 11), where it is added that the meek "shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." And again that he taught that the kingdom of the heavens should become the inheritance of the poor in spirit, and also of those who suffer persecution on account of righteousness. He also taught regarding the necessity of this righteousness in the following terms: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one title shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Let it also be noted that, besides such teachings as these, the claimant of the Messiahship made such promises to his followers as the following: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

It cannot be doubted that this implied the strongest conviction on his part that he was the destined Messiah pointed out by the prophets, to gather the twelve tribes from their dispersion, and to reinstate them in the land of their fathers. In short that he was the Messiah, and that not in any mere Gentile political sense, but in the true and Scriptural sense described by the prophets.

It may easily be understood that he laid himself open, by those teachings, and especially by the fact that many had accepted him as the Messiah, either by the few in a true and spiritual sense, or by the many in a merely political sense—to the suspicion of the ruling authorities. There must have been a large number besides his true disciples who looked upon him merely as a political deliverer, and who might be easily stirred to rise in revolt against the Roman power. This appears to have been the conviction entertained by the authorities, for the second historian mentioned gives us the following information on this point, "Then gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we? for this man doeth many miracles. If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation."

Soon after this they found means by bribing one of his immediate followers to have him put under arrest and taken before the recognized authorities, both Jewish and Roman, and put on his trial. By means of false witnesses a charge was attempted to be brought against him of offering to work a miracle in temple-building. The witnesses alleged that he had said, "I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days." The high priest well knowing that this was not the point at issue in the case, put the question, "I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Messiah, the Son of God," and he answered in the affirmative, "Thou hast said." But he added these remarkable words with an evident allusion to the prophecy of Daniel, "Nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." He thus again, under the most solemn circumstances, asserts his claim to be the Messiah, and to be the person who should fulfil one of the most descriptive Messianic prophecies in the Scriptures. He was then taken before the Roman governor of Judea and charged with sedition and claiming to be the Messiah. The witnesses said, "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ a King." The first part of this charge was without foundation, and the Governor, like the high priest, put the real question at issue in plain terms from the Roman point of view, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" He acknowledged the truth of this charge, but in such terms as convinced the governor that he had no design to use human military force for the carrying out of this claim. The governor thereupon desired to release him, but the chief priests taunted him with the cry that if he let this man go he was not the friend of Cæsar, the Roman emperor. Upon this he was given over to the Jewish authorities and put to death. The mode of execution was the Roman—that by crucifixion. The recorded account contains the following significant circumstance regarding the accusation upon which he was condemned: "Pilate wrote a title and put it on the cross. And the writing was, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews. Pilate answered, What I have written I have written." It would doubtless be thought by the Jewish authorities that this catastrophe was a crushing blow to the pretensions of this claimant of the Messiahship. He himself had not so viewed it. On several occasions he had predicted his arrest, condemnation and death, and had also added that "on the third day he should rise again from the dead." The historian already quoted asserts that this prediction was fulfilled to the letter, and that on several occasions he afterwards appeared to his more immediate followers. One of these, addressing an assembly of Jews at Jerusalem shortly after the event referred to, quoted a prediction by David, king of Israel, in one of his Psalms to this effect, "Thou wilt not abandon me to the grave, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption. Thou wilt make known to me the path of life." He affirms that this could not refer to David, whose sepulchre was with them to that day; but that God had, through David in that Psalm, spoken of the resurrection of the Messiah.

It is worthy of mention here that the very charge attempted to be brought against this claimant to the Messiahship about destroying and building the temple in three days, had reference to his death and resurrection. The historian who records the saying puts it in these terms, "He said to the Jews, Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up. Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he spake of the temple of his body."

THE BELIEVER'S STATUS.—Part 1.

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace; In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. John xvi. 33.

These are the last words of Jesus to his disciples, before he went out to meet the religious rabble sent to arrest him. What precious words they are. They manifest such depths of love, such tenderness, such intimacy and sympathy that they seem to draw one close to his side. In the preceding chapters he has been lifting them to a higher plane of religious life, by making them acquainted with their privileges, as chosen ones, and friends of God; and preparing them for the trials awaiting them after his departure. Because they were his, the privilege of using his name was granted them, chap. xvi. 6. "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." Here was an inexhaustible supply or the grace to draw from, providing only, they ask in his name.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." We learn from this language that although one other trial awaited him, such was his assurance and such his favor with the Father, that he actually announced the victory before the final conflict—before the sacrifice was made. He had overcome, and hence they could overcome, "be of good cheer." He had finished the work given him to do, chap. xvii. 4, and knew it; and no uncertainty hung over his future. On their part, so far, they had kept the Father's word that he had given them. They were not of the world, even as he was not of the world; and all this through the word received and kept. I wish to impress this fact on the mind of the reader, that their standing—their status—was well defined. They were not of the world, even as he was not of the world. There was no difference in this respect. They had been begotten of God, by the word of truth, James i. 18, and hence were of God, not of the world. 1 John iv. 6. It had not always been thus with them; their state or condition had been changed—they sustained a new relationship to God, and to the world. A positive legal transfer had taken place; and the benefits arising out of peace with God through the Lord Jesus Christ were as absolutely theirs, as was the wages of sin when they were of the world. It only remained for them to be bonofoorth kept from the evil of the world, v. 15, and to this end the Son prays the Holy Father, that he would keep them through his own name. And so assured is he that the Father will grant his request, that tells him that he has already given them the glory, that the Father had given him, v. 22. In neither case was the glory in actual possession, but it was his and their's nevertheless.

As an estate is not divided until all the children are of age, although for a long time willed to them, so it is in reference to the glory given by the Father to the Son, and he to his disciples. How well this was calculated to cheer them. Be the tribulations ever so great, or the clouds ever so dark, they knew it would soon be over, and then the glory given to them would be revealed in them. One would almost envy them the satisfaction these gracious words could give them, together with the distinct understanding between the Father and the Son in reference to their destiny. But there is no cause or room for envy. Those who like them have received and kept the Father's word are in precisely the same case with them; for in his sublime prayer for them, he says, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Surely the child of God has food here that the world knows nothing of; for, above the billows that threaten to whelm him, he can hear the words of Jesus, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world;" and again, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also." Mark the language! "I will come again, and (will) receive you unto myself." This was said of them when their light of faith had only just commenced.

In Matt. xix. 28 the outside destiny of the Apostles is set forth in these words: "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. This grand decision in their case was based upon something they had already done. They had left all and followed Jesus, when he gave them the Father's word. And be it further noted that this decision was announced—the award was made long before the possibility of being unfaithful had passed. They were regarded as overcomers, then, just as Jesus was, while in mortality, and, it being true that the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son, will he stultify himself by future actions? Nay, Verily.

By no means would I be understood as claiming that Jesus is here introducing a new principle in the economy of God. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob believed and obeyed God and received absolute promises—promises that must be fulfilled, for God is true. David also, and the rest of the cloud of witnesses enumerated in the fourth chapter of Hebrews will certainly be made perfect. They believed and obeyed God, and those were the only conditions to be complied with. The eternal spirit passed upon their cases thousands of years before their resurrection. I say Jehovah has decided their cases and published his decision to the world. And I ask who can believe, after all that, that they will be put on trial to see if they be worthy to be made perfect? Who can believe that the Apostles will be put on trial to ascertain if they be worthy to sit on the thrones of Israel? These worthies all had faith and God supplied the keeping power. 1 Pet. i. 5.

We can further see the exalted position of the believer set forth in Rom. iii. 22-24. It states that he is justified freely by God's favor, "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." And in Rom. v. 1, the Apostle says: "Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." And in the 9th verse it is added, "Being now justified by his blood we shall be saved from wrath through him." To justify is to make right, or to declare right. But as we see no act and hear no word from God direct when a person believes, how shall we know that God justifies him? In this way: God offers to justify freely, all who have faith in Jesus. We believe that he is true to his word. In fact one cannot believe in Jesus without believing this also; for there would be no object or inducement to faith without it. Well then, God declares the believer justified right; and the believer has attained to the righteousness of God by faith; i. e., he has become righteous, by means that God has appointed, not man. And having attained to this blessed state the Apostle asks, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies." Rom. viii. 33. No one can lay anything to their charge if the eternal God has absolved them, and he has. They are free from sin, Rom. vi. 18. The truth has made them free, John viii. 33. They are free from sin as soon as they believe and obey the word of truth from the heart, and this proves that God has taken cognizance of them and their actions, and changed the relations of the two parties to the covenant. "There is therefore, now, [seeing there is nothing charged against them] no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." Rom. viii. 1.

At this point in the believer's career, all will admit that a judicial inquiry would be the most improbable thing imaginable, because God has declared there is no ground for it; he, of his infinite knowledge, has declared there is no charge against them; and therefore they cannot be tried. As grand juror, and judge of the believer's status his decision is published to the world. We are bound to acquiesce.

I now dare affirm that this is ever after, the Believer's Status. It was his belief that placed him where he is; it was his faith that caused his obedience, and his faith and obedience was all that was required of him in order to the remission of his sin; and when free from sin he is free indeed! Was this glorious result achieved yesterday? Yes. Has any change taken place since? No. Then he is a believer today; he is in Christ Jesus today; he is free from sin today; there is no charge against him today; there is no condemnation to him today; it is not possible that he can be the subject of a judicial inquiry today. And this is true of every day until he cast away his confidence. It is the Believer's Status we are discussing now. When he ceases to be a believer we dismiss the subject, as he himself is dismissed from the body of Christ.

The question might here be asked, when, and how does a man cease to be a believer? I answer, that man may mentally assent to the truth as it is in Jesus, and still not be in Christ Jesus. The faith of such does not work by love,—does not induce obedience; they have not the spirit of Christ, and are none of his. They walk after the flesh and not after the Spirit. If a believer lapse into that condition, he is no longer a believer; he is no longer free from sin; no longer justified; no longer free from condemnation; he is an unbeliever in the Bible sense of the term.

The reader is now invited to consider another passage in the 8th of Romans, at the 14th verse, we read, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.... and, if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him that we may be also glorified together." It is worthy of note that they are not constituted sons at some future time, but when they submit to be led by the Spirit of God. They do not become heirs of God at some future time, but when they become children, and they remain heirs as long as they remain children. And they remain children as long as they are led by the Spirit of God, no longer. All God's children belong to Christ, and they have his Spirit. "But if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, his case, too, is decided then and there. It is this: "He is none of his!" If we wish to follow the destiny of the man who has so grieved the Spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead, that he will no longer dwell with him, we cannot do better than consult the words of Jesus himself in John xv. 5, 6:—"I am the Vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me he is—What is the blessed Master about to say?—If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them—withered branches—and cast them into the fire and they are burned." When, then, one does not abide in Christ, Christ does not own him. He is not regarded as one whose case is undecided; he is cast forth as a branch and is withered. He at once ceases to be a son of God, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ. And when Christ comes for those who are his, he does not come for severed and withered branches. 1 Cor. xv. 23.

The Status of the believer is further illustrated by Gal. iv. 6, 7: "And because ye are sons, God has sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father; wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God, through Christ." It must be observed, that real, legal transactions have taken place. The adopted Son of God is a rightful claimant of the inheritance; he is actually entitled to a portion of the all-things Christ is heir to; a joint heirship means that every time.

I next quote from 1 John v. 11, "He that hath the Son, hath life." This may be strong meat; but it reads just so; and we are obliged to conclude, that, by virtue of his new relation to God and to Christ, life, unending, imperishable life, has already been awarded to him who hath the Son, or who is in Christ. It is the same as saying he is an heir of God; God's will bestows it, the right to it has been given him; it is already reckoned as his; because we read in Col. iii. 2, 3, 4, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth, for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." As it says your life is hid with Christ in God, it cannot be withheld from them.

Paul in writing to Timothy says, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Whatever others may say or think, Paul knew and said there was a crown laid up for him, and for all who loved the appearing of the Lord.

We saw from Gal. iv. 6, 7 that God sent forth the spirit of his Son into the hearts of the Galatian believers, crying Abba, Father, because they were sons; and in Eph. i. 14 we are told that the church at Ephesus were, after they believed, sealed with the holy spirit of promise, which was the pledge of their inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possessions. Just to think of the goodness of God. He does not have the adopted ones to rest alone upon his naked promise, he graciously gives them the first installment of the Spirit,—the firstfruits—as a pledge of what is to come, when the purchased possession is redeemed. He also seals them, puts his stamp upon them—marks them as his by the Holy Spirit of promise, and even this is not all, an heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him, he actually anoints them to their high office, 2 Cor. i. 21.

Yes, indeed, the Father in heaven is in earnest; he has a desire for the work of his hand; and his condescension, and his adoption of means to our infirmities are surpassing great. What infinite pains he has taken to sustain the believer in his conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil, that we cast not away our confidence of reward. The idea of a judicial investigation to see if the bestowment of the firstfruits of the Spirit, and the sealing, and the anointing, and the adoption of, was an infinite mistake, must be founded in error. God makes no mistakes.

In the 4th chapter of John, and at the 13th and 14th verses we read these words of Jesus to the woman of Samaria:—"Whosoever drinketh of this water [from Jacob's well] shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, but that water I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." This beautiful figure, I apprehend, conveys the same idea as that by the words of the Spirit in 1 Pet. i. 23, "Being begotten again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." The germination of this incorruptible seed is assured when received into good and honest hearts, and by and by, when corruption puts on incorruption, it is the direct result of incorruptible seed. In recurring to the words of Jesus at the well, he it observed that the language used is very positive: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." There are no contingencies here, except the drinking. Only partake of the water of life, and it will be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life. To fully realize that, is to be inexpressibly happy in the thought of the grand result announced in advance.

M. JOBLIN.

Dear Restitution:

By request of brethren I submit a short report of my last work in Kansas. After my return from the north, held several meetings with the brethren at Bitter Creek. April 11, went to Geuda Springs, hired a hall and began a course of lectures. Brethren Vickery, Randolph and others came down, and helped to increase the interest in the meetings. Gave five lectures, and then had to stop on account of rain, which all were glad to see, as it has been very dry.

We nevertheless had awakened quite an interest, took four subscriptions for the paper, and distributed a goodly number of papers and tracts to those whom I think will read them.

April 25 I bade the brethren of Bitter Creek farewell, and started homeward, coming by the way of Millerton, where I received the papers and books sent me by Bro. Underwood. Visited the brethren there and held one meeting. Owing to the prevalence of the measles we thought it best not to continue.

May 2, said good by to the friends, with the promise to return in September. Drove to Wichita the same day, and visited Bro. Isaac Miller, formerly of Walkerton, Ind., and John Hinman, the only brethren I know of in the city of Wichita.

As this was the first opportunity I had of seeing the "Salvation Army," I concluded to improve it, and in company with Bro. Miller, went to their hall. There was a large crowd, with some of the baser class, for though Kansas is prohibition, some in the hall were intoxicated, and one fellow let his bottle drop on the floor.

The boisterous conduct of the crowd did not in any way disturb the Army, for with a big bass drum and half a dozen tamborines they could drown the noise of the crowd. I sat an hour in amazement to see men and women of apparent intellect, and all ages, swaying up and down the rostrum, with heads thrown back, beating their instruments and throwing their arms in the wildest manner. If I could have imagined myself in some heathen land, it would not have seemed so strange. But to see them acting so with Bible in hand—well, I went out, not caring to witness the sight again.

May 4, bought my ticket for Ligonier, Ind., arriving at home May 6, and found my family all well. I left Kansas in full faith that good seed has been sown, and as prevailing Providence, I expect to go back in September and look after the result of my labors. The brethren in Kansas were all very kind to me. My address is now Ligonier, Ind.

Your brother in the one hope.

Poetry.

IN THE WINE-PRESS ALONE.

In the dusk of our sorrowful hours,
The time of our trouble and tears,
With frost at the heart of the flowers,
And blight on the bloom of the years,
Like the Mother-voice tenderly hushing
The sound of the sob and the moan,
We hear, when the anguish is crushing,
"He trod in the wine-press alone."

How sudden soe'er the disaster,
Or heavy the hand that may smite,
We are yet in the grace of the Master,
We never are out of his sight;
Though the winnowing winds of temptation
May forth from all quarters be blown,
We are sure of the coming salvation,—
The Lord will remember His own.

From him, in the night of his trial,
Both heaven and earth fled away;
His boldest had only denial,
His dearest had only dismay.
With a cloud o'er the face of the Father,
He entered the anguish unknown:
But we, though our sorrow may gather,
Shall never endure them alone.

We bend in the human frail fashion,
And sway 'neath the weight of the rod,
But swift to its blessed compassion
Still hastens the help of our God.
And the sigh of the sybrit faint hearted,
Goes up to a song to the throne,
Such strength to its need is imparted:
"He trod in the wine-press alone."

And therefore be known to the utmost
The pangs that the mortal can bear;
No mortal hath pain that the Master
Refuses to heal or to share.
And the cries that ascend to the Loving,
Who bowed him for us to atone,
Are hushed at the gentle reproving,
"He trod in the wine-press alone."

The Bible, and the Jewish Nation.

Scientists who insist that there are thousands of worlds beside this, and that this compared with the rest is a very small and insignificant one, find fault with the Bible because it treats mainly of this world, or the inhabitants of this earth. Leaving the question as to worlds innumerable, for it is quite beside our object, it is sufficient to remark, that the design of the Bible is the redemption and advantage of the human family; so that the real question is, whether its teachings and provisions are adapted to that end. Will mankind be led to salvation and happiness if they follow its instructions? Since the condition and needs of man are taken into account, and an adequate redemption is provided and set forth, including the restoration of all things, is not Divine wisdom manifested in confining the Scriptures to the race who are the subjects of this redemption and restoration? Other races and other orders of intelligent beings are referred to, as they have had to do with the Adamic race; but the family of Adam are the people for whose benefit the Bible was written, and therefore, it deals almost exclusively with them. We have their fall a while after the first pair were created; we have God's dealings with them, his attempts to rule and their dejection and rebellion; we have their redemption from the penalty annexed to the first transgression, and the purchase with the blood of Jesus of a people who shall be gathered out of the nations for his name and his glory, and who shall be kings and priests with the Christ in his rulership of the world when he takes the dominion from the present rulers. Let the design of the Bible, and the unity of the plan of the Bible, be studied with an unprejudiced mind, and let proper regard be paid to the laws of language, and the divine inspiration and authority of the Bible will not fail to be seen.

Every attentive reader of the Scriptures must have noticed what a large proportion of the Old Testament is devoted to a history of the Jews, and what a little is said of other existing nations except as they had to do with the Jewish nation. Great and powerful nations are passed over with comparatively little said of them. Of all the peoples who figured in the history of those times, none were so prominent as the Israelitish people; and of all countries, of all lands, no land in importance, in deep and thrilling interest, equalled the holy land, the land promised to Abraham and his descendants. Where can we find the explanation to this? Only in the kingdom which is promised to them. This explains numerous things which if not taken into the account, must remain mysterious. It is surprising that so many scholars and theologians overlook this fact, and still more surprising that so many, after the fact is pointed out to them, turn away from the subject with prejudice because it seems to exalt the Jew more than the Gentile.

Some sceptical writers, with some knowledge of the fact that God attempted to establish a kingdom among the Jews according to his own will, but which after a considerable trial was set aside, urge this as an objection to Divine revelation, especially to the Bible conception of God, as they regard it as an evidence of failure. But this is proof that they have only a very imperfect knowledge of the subject in all its parts, as set forth in Scripture, or they would see that what they call a failure is no more than a delay. God has always treated his people as free moral agents, and though he foresaw what the result would be, he saw it would be wise to set up a kingdom among them, and proclaim himself as their Ruler, so that they might bear the responsibility of his rule, through their not accepting it, was withdrawn. After repeated trials and long forbearance with their defection, it was withdrawn. Then at the first advent of Jesus, the kingdom was again offered to the nation if they would repent; but refusing to repent, their fall, or disobedience, was made the occasion of salvation being offered to the Gentiles; and so the kingdom was taken from them, and its restoration was deferred till the Christ should appear the second time. They knew not the time of their visitation, and their house was left unto them desolate. Before the first advent the tabernacle of David fell, the mitre was removed, and the last who wore the crown had it taken from him, and the once highly favored people were compelled to go under Gentile power; and since the treading down of their city by Titus, they have become widely scattered and sorely chastised. But the end of Gentile domination, which is now near, will be the hour of their redemption. God will yet fulfill his covenant respecting them. As a people, they are now under Divine chastisement, but when the King returns at the consummation of the age, they will be convinced of their unbelief, will repent, and will accept him as the Messiah. And foreseeing all this, God has marvellously preserved them during the long ages of their dispersion and being cast off from the Divine favor. Though scattered every where among the nations of the earth, God has kept them distinct from all. And shortly the wisdom of all his dealings with them will be seen, and his ways will be justified before the world.

Dear Restitution:

Please find herein money order to pay for three months. A dear friend and neighbor of mine has furnished me THE RESTITUTION for some time, and I like it better than any paper I ever read, and shall ever feel thankful to my friend for lending me his paper. This paper, together with his kind teaching, has opened to me the way of eternal life, and thanks be to God for it. By the help of the Lord I intend to obey his word from this on.

Yours in hope, C. M. W.

[The above letter shows the good we all may do, by simply handing a copy of THE RESTITUTION or a good tract to some friend, and calling his attention to its contents by a few words spoken in love. Brethren and sisters, sow the seed, the Lord will soon come, the harvest is ripening for the sickle.]

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Indiana, D. V., will convene at the Antioch Meeting House, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, Marshall County, Ind., commencing at two o'clock, on Thursday, June 9th, 1887, and continue over Sunday following.

The reason for commencing Thursday instead of Friday, as heretofore, is this: A large amount of very important business has been mapped out to be transacted, and we will need more time.

Those coming by the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R., or by the Vandalia R. R. will leave the cars at Plymouth, where conveyances will be on Thursday to take them to the place of meeting. Those coming by the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago R. R., or the "Nickel Plate" R. R. will leave the cars at Argos, and inquire for Robert Railsback. It will be a great accommodation to residents at the place of meeting if those contemplating attending this meeting will notify the Secretary at Plymouth, Ind., of the fact, and the direction they will come from, and the probable time of arrival.

A large number of the brethren and sisters have been personally requested to prepare papers upon various subjects, to be read before this conference. These papers will be used as the basis for considering these different subjects, and where the authors of the papers are present they will lead the discussion.

What our people need more than anything else, is system in our work. A large majority of our members are well versed in Scripture and are able and willing to do valiant service for the Master. All that is needed is a plan of operations whereby each one shall be assigned certain work to do. The brethren and sisters are willing to work and will only be too glad of an opportunity of leading some precious one into the fold of Christ, and thereby save a soul from death and add a star to their crown. We want therefore to take such action at the June conference as shall finally result in giving everyone some specific work to do, so that at the great harvest time we may all come bringing in the sheaves. A few can't do this work and do it as it should be done. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom, we therefore urge every one who loves the Lord and loves his cause, to not only come to conference but to come so as to be there at the beginning of the meeting. The committees, to whom will be referred the different branches of the work, will be appointed at the first meeting.

Able ministers will be present on Thursday and one of the best, if not the best sermon of the conference will be preached on Thursday night. Every church in the state will of course send delegates: but we not only want the delegates but we want a large representation from each church in addition to the delegates. We also want the brethren and sisters, who reside where we have no organized church, to come. We also extend a very cordial invitation to the brethren in other states to be present with us and assist us by their good offices and prayers. To all who cannot come, please do as Paul did, write us a letter of good cheer. Now brethren let us all pray from this time until the close of the conference, that we may have an interesting and profitable meeting, and that much good may be done in the name of our dear Redeemer.

R. S. DWIGGINS,
Pres. Ind. Conference.
A. R. UNDERWOOD,
Secretary.

The 30th Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, in the Christian Church, at Watson, Allegan County, Mich., commencing Thursday evening, June 2, 1887, and continue over Sunday. All lovers of the truth are cordially invited. Those coming by the G. R. & I. R. R. will leave the cars at Martin, and those coming by the M. & O. R. R. will leave the cars at Fisk. Teams will be at each place to convey all who may come to the place of meeting. Those coming with their own conveyances may inquire for G. B. Myers or James Pellett. For further particulars address the writer at Menden, Michigan.

H. L. PERRY, Sec.

There will be a Grove Meeting held at Watkins' Great Flowing Well, three miles southwest of Story City, Story County, Iowa, commencing on Friday, June 10, 1887, and holding over Sunday. Let all who can bring covered wagons and tents. Those of the Gospel faith are especially invited to come, as we expect Gospel preaching, and a good time. Those coming by rail will stop at Story City, where you will be met and conveyed to the ground. Come, brethren, help us by your presence, and let us leave our cares and labors for a day, to enjoy this meeting and serve our Master upon the beautiful prairies of Iowa.

Baalbec.

Everything at Baalbec is colossal. The area is larger than that of the Temple at Jerusalem. We may begin with the walls, which are half a mile round, and of such height and depth as are rarely attained in the most tremendous fortress. When from within I climbed to the top, it made me giddy to look over the perilous edge to the depth below; and when from without the walls I looked up at them, they rose high in the air. Some of the stones seem as if they must have been reared in place, not by Titans, but by the gods. There are nine stones thirty feet long and ten feet thick, which are larger than the foundation stones of the Temple at Jerusalem, dating from the time of Solomon, or any blocks in the Great Pyramid. But even these are pigmies compared with the three giants of the western wall—sixty-two, sixty-three and a half, and sixty-four feet long! These are said to be the largest stones ever used in any construction. They weigh hundreds of tons, and instead of being merely hown out of a quarry which might have been on the site, and left to lie where they were before, they have been lifted nineteen feet from the ground, and there embedded in the wall! Never was there such Cyclopean architecture. How such enormous masses could be moved is a problem with modern engineers. Sir Charles Wilson, whom I met in Jerusalem, is at this moment in Baalbec. Standing in the grounds of the Temple, he tells me that in the British Museum there is an ancient tablet which reveals the way in which such stones were moved. The mechanics were very simple. Rollers were put under them, and they were drawn up inclined planes by sheer human muscle—the united strength of great numbers of men. In the rude design on the tablet, the whole scene is portrayed to the eye. There are the battalions of men, hundreds to a single roller, with the task-masters standing over them, lash in hand, which was freely applied to make them pull together, and the king sitting on high to give the signal for this putting forth of human strength en masse, as if an army were moving to battle. A battle it was, in the waste of human life it caused. These temples of Baalbec must have been a whole generation in building, and have consumed the population of a province and the wealth of an empire.—Dr. H. M. Field.

Notice.

A third edition of my book, "The Gospel of the Kingdom," is called for; and to expedite their sale I offer the first 300 cloth-bound, 278 pages, at 50 cents a copy or ton for $4.00. Please send orders at earliest convenience to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Indiana.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "8" and reads "Jny8" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1888. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE COMING AGE,
—IN—
Nature and Proximity.
—BY J. P. WHITNEY.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar forces, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 25, 1887. NO. 20.

THE RESTITUTION,

Terms--TWO DOLLARS A YEAR

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months thereafter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a fixed belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for salvation.

THE BELIEVER'S STATUS.--Part 2.

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace; in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. John xvi. 33.

This absolute certainty of pardon, of liberty, of sonship, of peace, of the Fatherhood of God, of being heirs of God, and joint heirship with Christ, of crowns laid up for them, and of being like unto Christ at his appearing, and appearing with him in glory, and of reigning with him upon the earth, was what gave the apostles and their converts the strength and courage to overcome and to joy even in tribulation. Just listen to the beloved Paul and Silas as they sing praises to God at midnight, while their feet are fast in the stocks in the jail at Philippi, and their backs smarting with pain from the many stripes laid on them before being locked up at night. Listen to the glowing language of this same apostle in Rom. viii. 35-39: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? as it is written, for thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us; for I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." There are no uncertainties here, no dread forebodings here; no fearful looking for of judgment, here. Every act of his life as a Christian, and every word from his pen are eloquent with faith in Jesus' word, "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation."

But we pass to other Scriptures that define the believer's status. From Rom. iv. 7, we read thus: "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered." Yes, indeed, they are blessed. They are blessed now. I would not barter this blessedness for all the gold of Ophir, or all the world calls great. It is the fruit of the Spirit; it is love, and joy, and peace, and long-suffering, and gentleness, and goodness, and faith, and meekness, and temperance; and, thanks to the God of all grace, "against such there is no law," Gal. v. 22, 23, and therefore, they cannot be brought to trial; and if they were, must of necessity be discharged.

Perhaps the reader is mentally enquiring if I do not claim a good deal in reference to myself in the previous paragraph? Is he asking if I claim to be perfect? Does he ask if love be always in the ascendant? Does he come to ask me if I am always joyful, and peaceful, and long-suffering, and gentle, and good, and faithful, and meek and temperate? Alas, no, my friend. Would to God it were always thus with me. But it is not. But notwithstanding delinquencies all along the line, I claim to be in Christ, and therefore, am free from condemnation. I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing, yet I claim to be a Christian because Paul was one under precisely the same circumstances. See Rom. vii. 15-23 inclusive. He discovered a law in his members warring against the law of the mind, and so have I. He says, "That which I do, I allow not; for what I would, that I do not, but what I hate that do I. If, then, I do that which I would not; I consent unto the law that it is good. Now, then, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find, then, a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me; for I delight in the law of God after the inward man, but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." That is my experience, exactly. The apostle then adds: "Oh, wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from this body of death?" Then follows the answer to his own question: I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. [I shall be delivered from it]. "So, then, with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin; there is, therefore, now, no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Here too, I stand beside the apostle. Here, too, stand all who are in Christ Jesus. And, like Paul, they should know that they shall be delivered from the body of death; and they should know, too, that they shall be delivered through Jesus Christ our Lord. Have they believed the Gospel and obeyed it by baptism for the remission of sins, and thus put on Christ—baptized into his death? Then they are of the number to whom there is no condemnation; "for," says Paul, "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free." Free from what Paul? "Free from the law." Free from what law, Paul? "Free from the law of sin and death." Most exalted privilege for Paul; and yet by God's favor all who are in Christ Jesus stand beside him,—stand free from the law of sin and death.

In order, if possible, to make this matter clear I invite the attention of the reader to Rom. iv. 8: "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." To impute is to reckon, or count, or charge. And it must be borne in mind that the man to whom the Lord will not impute or charge sin, is a Son, an adopted Son of God; a member of his family, having all the rights and immunities of a child. He is free from the law of sin and death, as we have already seen, but amenable to the rules of conduct enjoined upon each member of the household of faith, love being the motive power of obedience. For this elect company, this household or family, the Heavenly Father has graciously instituted a family throne of favor, a throne where only the children may obtain forgiveness for their trespasses, and find favor to help them in time of need. See Heb. iv. 16. So that there are no long, running accounts to be settled, at some future time. Between a kind father and loving children there will arise occasional interruptions of the usual happy intercourse, through misdemeanors; but the very nature of the case demands short reckoning. Unless the child speedily becomes an outlaw, that is to say, as long as a child is regarded as such, constant intercourse forbids long standing difficulties; and the dependence of the one on the other, will not allow differences to remain unsettled. These reasons apply with double force to the Family of the Father in Heaven; hence the rich provision made to meet the case. The household of faith, have, in the person of their Lord and perfected Brother a High Priest—a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, as they occur every day, always, until sins through frailty vanish along with corruptibility. See Heb. ii. 17. This High Priest has himself suffered, and is therefore able to succor them that are tempted; "Let us therefore," says the apostle, "come boldly unto the throne of grace." Knowing our frames and remembering we are but dust, these provisions have been made, and we are invited to avail ourselves of them boldly; not presumptuously, nor cringingly, but as children tenderly dealt with by a merciful father. The injunction is, first of all, "sin not;" but, "If any man—[justified man, no other has an advocate]—sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." It is by these heaven appointed means the believer maintains his heirship, retains his sonship and keeps his title clear. The neglect of these means piles up unpardonable sins, till the past uncovered, and the present, unforgiven, he is cast forth as a branch. As faith, reformation and baptism, followed by justification, sonship and heirship, transpired without a grand assize, so does the casting out for doing despite to the Spirit of Grace, and the neglect to seek pardon for trespasses.

But the good God has not yet exhausted his means for the benefit of those who are heirs of salvation. The angels are employed to minister to them, see Heb. i. 14. "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for, as we ought, but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Rom. viii. 26. Such infinite pains are taken to enable the believer to overcome the world as Jesus did, that nothing but the grossest indifference and the basest ingratitude, the utter distaste of God and goodness, and the most unconquerable love of the bad, and the total absence of love for him who died on his account, would allow him to neglect the means of grace within his reach. The society of the faithful now, even, would be distasteful to such an one, and he would go out from them because he was not of them.

In Rom. v. 8, 9, we read: "But God recommends his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us; much more, then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him; for if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." God's Son was given to die for us while we were sinners; but that is nothing to be compared to what he will do for us as justified ones—we shall be saved from wrath—saved by his life.

To prove that God takes cognizance of every act that goes to make up the character of his elect ones, and decides in advance that they shall participate in his great salvation, I invite attention to Luke xiv. 14. "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Then the just have a resurrection not participated in by others, or else it would read, "recompensed at the resurrection, or, at the resurrection of the just and the unjust;" but no, they are to be recompensed at the resurrection of the just—a special resurrection of just ones. In John v. 28, 29 this subject is further elucidated. It reads thus: "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of judgment." Two resurrections are here distinctly brought to view: the resurrection of life, and the resurrection of judgment. The resurrection of just ones is proof that they are just, and are then ready to be recompensed for their labors of love and acts of charity while still in the flesh. The resurrection of the just is the resurrection of life—then resurrection at that time and with that class is proof that they have been judged worthy of it and endued with it.

It it be asked, on what principle a resurrection of just ones takes place, I answer, on the principle enunciated by Paul 2 Tim. ii. 19, The Lord knoweth them that are his; and that is all sufficient. Dead or alive he knows them. What! asleep in Jesus and he not know them? Is it not preposterous to think so? I would just as soon doubt they were asleep in Jesus, as that he knows them. If he does not know them, can he know they are asleep in him? Ah! but they are known; the apostle's words show that, for he says, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." He certainly knows them. Said Jesus, "my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me is greater than all, and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." John x. 27, 28, 29. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but raise it up again at the last day." John vi. 37.

Having now referred to a few of the soul inspiring truths which define the believer's status, I now invite those who believe them, after the apostolic fashion: "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." God has not given us the spirit of fear, 2 Tim. i. 7. We have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear. "Abba, Father," has taken its place. Rom. viii. 15. With a dread uncertainty before a man, he must be fearful; and the fearful man cannot draw near in full assurance of faith; "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment." What, then, is the matter, John? Ans. "He that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 John iv. 18. The secret is out. Fearful ones, the spirit in John knows what ails you. Perfect love would certainly dispel the cloud that hovers over you. In order to perfect your love you must make use of John's recipe: "We love him, because he first loved us." His love was manifested by what he did, and what he promises to do. Fearfulness and uncertainty in reference to the outcome on your part proves that in many things you do not half believe God; if you did, you could say with Paul, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day;" and with Peter and the elect ones scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia, rejoice even now, with joy unspeakable and full of glory. 1 Pet. i. 8.

What more can I say to the fearful ones? I will say: "God is able to make you stand," Rom. xiv. 4. He is able to build up? Acts xx. 32. Are you willing that he should? He will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able. 1 Cor. x. 13. Do you believe it? He is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Jude 24, and what more could you ask? Have you really committed anything to his care? That's the question. If you have, he is as able to keep it for you against that day, as he was for Paul. 2 Tim. i. 12. Are you persuaded of this? If not, why not? Ye did run well, who did hinder you, from realizing the present blessedness of the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin? Jesus speaks to you that you may have what you are now a stranger to—peace. Just believe—with all your hearts as you once did, that faith, reformation and baptism ensures pardon and peace and sonship, and heirship, and freedom from the law of sin and death;—believe that no one can lay a charge against the believer, believe there is no law against such; and oh! believe the words of Jesus: "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment, but is passed from death unto life," and there the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. And when he who is your life, shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

Restoration of Israel.--Concluded.

Did not Zechariah, Haggai, and Malachi write their prophecies after the return from Babylonish captivity? And did they not then still predict a future restoration? The restoration when they returned from Babylon does not correspond with that predicted by the prophets. There is a wonderful contrast between them. It is impossible to make the former answer to the predictions of the latter without doing the utmost violence to the language of the Bible. It cannot be done without treating God's word in a way that but few would dare to treat man's word. There is quite a lengthy list of blessings to be possessed and enjoyed at the future restoration which were not bestowed at the restoration caused by Cyrus.

When the kingdom is restored, the promised King will then be over them; but no king in the Davidic line was set over them when they came from Babylon. When the kingdom is restored, all the tribes will be united; but when they came from Babylon, the two and the ten tribes were not united. When the kingdom is restored, there will be seen a thorough change in the nation and an acceptance of the Christ, and all will become righteous; but that did take place when they came from Babylon. Various prophecies portray a great and terrible battle between the Jewish nation gathered in the Holy Land and some Gentile nations around, and a remarkable deliverance by the Lord, the Redeemer, who shall appear on the scene, when the kingdom will be restored; but neither did they take place when Cyrus gave them their liberty to leave Babylon. When the kingdom is restored, there will be a dreadful slaughter of the enemies of Israel, as the result of Divine interposition in their behalf; but no one can claim that this occurred when they were let go free from Babylon. There was, indeed, a colony, insignificant in its dimensions, still subject to Persia, established, with dependent princes: but this was no fulfilment of the prophecies relating to their restoration and supremacy as a nation, under one King of the royal line of David.

Now it seems to us impossible to examine impartially all the foregoing evidence without arriving at the conviction that the dispersed nation will again be restored and settled in the land of their fathers. Today there are more Jews in Jerusalem than have ever been known to be there at one time since the overthrow of the city by Titus. Of late thousands on thousands have immigrated there and to other parts of Palestine.

Several years ago a terrible persecution was instituted against the Jews in Russia, and Austria, and Roumania, which resulted in great oppression and the destruction of considerable property; and Germany in some measure cherished and manifested the same bitter spirit. This persecution may have arisen from several causes, partly perhaps from their nationality, partly from their religion, but mainly from their enterprize, their shrewdness, their business tact, their grasping avarice, and their accumulation of wealth. The hardships and sufferings to which they were subjected, caused multitudes to flee from those countries and seek a home in the land of their fathers. And strange to say, some who immigrated to America, hoping to find shelter and security in that country which makes such a boast of freedom, were sent back again. But in this there was no doubt an overruling providence, as the day seems near for the re-establishment of the Jews in the Holy Land. The terrible manifestation of this envious, malignant, cruel, and persecuting spirit, has been used by Jehovah as a means of creating discontent with their state of exile, and an ardent desire to find a place of rest in the land of promise. And one thing very favorable to their return is, that the Turks, though holding the land of Palestine, are more merciful and lenient toward the Jews than those of Greek and Romish Churches.

Preachers and writers do not question that the threatenings in the prophets are to the Jews; yet strange to say, the blessings that are promised, and which are sometimes found in the same passages that contain the threatenings, they apply to the Gentiles. "Can any thing be more absurd," asks one writer, "than to explain the prophecies which foretell the calamity which is to befall the Jews in a literal sense, and those which speak of their future felicity in a spiritual and mystical sense?" To support a theory, some will wrest Scripture from its connection, and discard the grammatical sense of the language. Many of the promises in the prophetical writings, which belong peculiarly to Israel, are wrested from them and applied to Christians, or Gentile nations. But care should always be taken in applying Scripture, to examine its connection and ascertain to whom it was spoken and to whom it belongs.

"Dispersed as they are," says Clarke, "they are still a distinct people, a nation within other nations. Like drops of oil floating on the water, but never mingling with it, so the Jews are found every where floating drops of national life in the midst of other nationalities." Milman says, "However opposite the institutions, the usages, the manners of the people among whom they dwell, whether the government be mild or intolerant; the Jews, equally inflexible and unsocial, maintain their seclusion from the rest of mankind." And what is this for? For what end, in the order of Providence, are they thus preserved through so many hundreds of years but that when the times of the Gentiles shall have ended, they may again form themselves into a nation which so many Scriptures predict?

So clearly, and in language so definite and strong, is the return of the Jews and their establishment again as a nation taught in Holy Scripture, that many writers of eminence acknowledge this truth, who have not received the Pre-millennial doctrine, or whose attention, from some circumstances, has not been drawn to the consideration of it. It is indeed singular that any should receive the one truth without the other, as the two are so closely united; but there is the fact existing in numerous instances.

MUTUAL REPRESENTATION.

Christ in heaven represents believers on earth; believers on earth represent Christ in heaven. His appearance in the presence of God for them, and their appearance in the presence of men for him, are the two aspects of the union between the Head of the Church and its members. In his representation of them they have the unspeakable advantage of his personal and official perfection; in their representation of him there is deficiency at the best, and often sad imperfection. Yet, as there is none but him to appear before God for them, so are there none but them to appeal before men for him. This mutual representation is a holy and wonderful reality in the economy of grace, not an adjunct or accident but an essential element of its constitutional life. Let us then look at it earnestly, that we may see its meaning with some degree of clearness, and try henceforth to give a somewhat better and brighter representation in the sight of the world of what our glorious Representative is in the sight of God.

Our Lord left his character in the keeping of his friends. Just think of it! As the reputation of our holy and ever-blessed Life-Giver is left to the guardianship of his followers, what manner of men should they be! With what honor have they been invested! What an unspeakably precious charge is theirs! And how determined should they be that, so far as they are concerned, no spot should dim the lustre of the word "Christ!" "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world," is his word to the Father respecting his apostles. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth," is the last word he spake to those apostles themselves just before he ascended to the Father. Now, although official apostolic succession is an absurdity, fellowship in apostolic testimony respecting the Head of the Church is a glorious truth. The links in this golden chain of witnesses are all unbroken. Apostolic succession is a reality, in the case of every man of apostolic character, holding apostolic doctrine, and making it the chief joy of his life to honor the Lord Jesus. The spirit, the mind, the disposition of the Savior, is the pattern for the every-day life of the saved. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "I in them, and Thou in Me," is the condensed expression of this sacred mystery, by the Lord himself, in that marvellous prayer which introduces the believer into the holy of holies, the very presence chamber of our Father in heaven. And this expression is no accidental association of words, brought together by the force of the Great Intercessor's love to his Father and his followers, but the declaration of a profound truth hidden from former ages, but contemplated from the time—or rather the eternity—when God resolved to make redeemed men living temples of the Holy Spirit.

And it is this indwelling of the Spirit that enables Christians to represent their Lord. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. iii 16, 17. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own," vi. 19. "Ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people," 2 Cor. vi. 16.

From these premises three things are so obvious that we can hardly imagine an intelligent eye failing to see them; or, at any rate, when they are named we are sure of the concurrence of every thoughtful reader who wishes his religion to bear the apostolic test.

1. A mere passive assent to the truth of the Gospel is not a representation of Christ. Such assent is, of course, a necessity, and therefore has not the slightest claim to merit or virtue of any kind, far less to be considered that religious life which moulds character and makes one a witness for Christ. By "necessity," in this connection, we mean that to deny the truth of the Gospel is simply to fly in the face of all history, sacred and secular. No sane person will do this. But assent to the incontrovertible implies no change of heart, and such assent has been given times without number by men of whose character a decent heathen would have been ashamed.

2. Nor does a profession of belief in Jesus as the Redeemer prove the possession of the representative qualifications. If all who are known as "Communicants," or "Church members" were in reality what those words should imply—light-bearers, reflecting the light of Christ—what a splendid testimony "Christendom" would bear to the Son of God! The world could not resist such testimony. All nations would yield to the irresistible evidence of such a constellation of stars! But alas! things have been done in the name of Christ which for horrible cruelty have never been surpassed by the most atrocious deeds of Oriental despots. Enormous wrongs, outrageous villanies, wholesale murders have been perpetrated, avowedly for the glory of the Redeemer, by priestly monsters who ostentatiously proclaimed that they were his only loyal servants—the ministers of the true Church! Had not the Gospel been divine, a real living message from the living God, it would have perished long ago amidst the suffocating abominations through which it has lived. It has thus lived just because of the immortality that dwells in its heart. If you ask me for the best evidence that Christianity is from God, I reply—Its existence today! The grand miracle of the ages is the continuance of the doctrine of Christ among men after all that the pseudo guardians of his name and truth have done to make both odious to the nations. The captivity of Judaism in Babylon was a trifle compared with the captivity of Christianity in Rome.

3. It is likewise clear that the preservation of the Redeemer's character was not entrusted to the world's secular governments. The hands of kings and courtiers have seldom been clean enough for such a sacred trust; and, besides, the Lord will not depart from the fundamental law of his Church—"Ye must be born again"—to secure the patronage of the purple. We will pay Cæsar his taxes, provided he does not tax us beyond our ability, which he is frequently inclined to do—for secular government is an expensive luxury—but we must not leave in his royal hands the guardianship of our Master's honor. Neither personally nor by proxy can he be trusted in this holy matter. What then? We must do this ourselves! Yes, brother, you and I must represent our absent Lord by living in his life and walking in his steps, and thus we shall be his living epistles, "known and read of all men."

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

Lake Linden, a mining village in Northern Michigan, was almost entirely wiped out of existence by fire one day last week, and 2000 people are left homeless in consequence.

A collision occurred on Thursday last between two steamships of the White Star Line, in which the Celtic crashed into the Britannic, killing five or six passengers, and injuring about a dozen others.

The condition of affairs in the East is very much like a smothered fire, liable to burst out with destructive fury at any moment. The national antagonism in Europe is, politically, an "irrepressible conflict," to be finally settled on the battlefield sooner or later. The Oriental Question is a Gordian Knot that diplomacy can never untie. Like Alexander, the Northern Autocrat will probably soon cut it with the sword.

ISRAEL AND PALESTINE.

The eminent leader of the Hebrew Christian movement in Russia has recently visited his Christian friends in London, who have been taking a deep interest in his work. On his return to Russia he wrote the following letter to John Wilkinson, missionary to the Jews in that city.

"By the grace of our Heavenly Father I arrived yesterday morning home safely and found my wife and family all well, and keeping near to Christ our Lord. All the brethren rejoiced on account of the love the Lord bestowed upon me all along the journey which I undertook for the sake, and in the name o. our Lord Jesus, to whom be glory forever, and for the sake of his ancient people of Israel. I found at home many letters from Jews of different places in Russia, all lamenting over the sin of their forefathers in rejecting the Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, and requesting me to show them the way of light, to help them out of the darkness of the Talmud, and to initiate them into the Temple of which Christ is the foundation, also to send them New Testaments, and my addresses in the Hebrew and Russian languages. I spent a week in St. Petersburg, where I introduced myself to those high in office, and into whose hands the interests of the Lord's work are entrusted. They received me very kindly, and encouraged me by promising to help on the cause as much as lies in their power, and to enable me to distribute the New Testaments in all Russian towns inhabited by the Jews, and to permit men authorized by me to teach our brethren the pure gospel of our Lord. The prohibition to baptize is only temporary, because many break away from the Greek Catholic Church, and the Government is anxious not to add another sect of baptized Jews, which could influence the Gentile sects, against the will of the Government and the Church. They told me distinctly that they were pleased with the work which is quietly carried on among our Jewish brethren, and that only through it the Jewish question in Russia would be solved, to the joy of all those who seek the welfare of Israel, and who are waiting for the second coming of our Lord. Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH RABINOWITZ."

In effecting his work of removing the veil from the heart of his ancient people, God is opening up the way for enlightening their minds by having the New Testament translated into the Hebrew language, in order that Israel may come to the knowledge of the Son of God as the Mediator of the new covenant. We copy the following from a very late monthly.

"Delitzsch's Hebrew translation of the New Testament continues to be a wonderful missionary agency. It has now found its way to the Jews in Siberia, and has there entered on its mission conquering and to conquer as it has done in the Eastern provinces of European Russia, where no less than 30,000 copies of the work have been scattered among the Jewish people. The Jews of Siberia are reading the translation with avidity, and a movement has been inaugurated among them that much resembles that in Kischneff in Bessarabia. These Jews are but little acquainted with the Talmud, and are, for this reason, thought to be more open to gospel influences. The Testaments are sold and distributed from the city of Tomsk."

From another journal we quote a very interesting account of the influence the gospel is exerting on the heart of a Jewish Rabbi in a town in Hungary now a part of the Austrian Empire. Surely the heart of Israel is beginning to turn to the Lord. The extract is as follows:

A RABBI'S TESTIMONY.

In the neighborhood of Peath there is a small town called Tapio Szele, containing a proportionately large Jewish population. This small town has, of late, attracted the attention of the Jews of Central Europe, by the fact of the Rabbi of the Jewish congregation of Tapio Szele having published a pamphlet, in which he expresses himself favorable to the Christian doctrine of salvation. The pamphlet bears the title, "My Testimony (Mein Zeugnis): by L. Lichtenstein, District Rabbi of Tapio Szele, Budapest. Printed by Victor Hornyansky, 1886." Dr. Bloch, a Jewish member of the Austrian Reichstag, has published in the Mayence Israelit, an article in which he impeaches Rabbi Lichtenstein, for what he calls his traitorous utterances. From that article we extract a few passages taken from the pamphlet in question; and it should be remarked that Dr. Bloch and the editor of the Israelit have such an intense horror of the name of Jesus, that whenever the writer of the pamphlet uses that name, the Israelit puts five dots in the place of it. The passages quoted are as follows: "What makes me hesitate in writing these lines is the fact that my testimony in favor of Jesus appears to me so simple, so clear, and self-evident that, were I to forbear from bringing it forward, the very stones would bear witness. What is the foundation corner-stone of the sublime Christian doctrine, the dew from heaven that comforts the poor, anxious, tortured and despairing, yet believing heart, and causes its innermost chords to vibrate in compassion at the sight of the sufferings of others? It is none other but Jesus. And Jesus is the veriest tower of truth, the glorious treasure of heaven, the proudest ornament of creation. Jesus is the noblest son of man that ever lived upon earth. He is the incarnation of right and justice, the Savior of the world, the Messiah of the world. As the mighty ocean receives within its bosom all the brooks, streams, and rivers of the earth, thus do we find all the most sublime and Divine virtues embodied and blended in celestial harmony in Jesus, of whom Moses says, 'The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken.' For the law was given to only Moses, but grace and truth have come unto us by Jesus Christ.' John i. 17."

We conclude these extracts by giving a letter written from Palestine by D. D. Patterson, Editor of The Jews of the Morning, who is now visiting the Holy land, and who, among other matters writes about visiting the scenery east from Jerusalem, for the May number of the above named paper. Surely the time to favor Zion even the set time is just about come. That we are now living in the last generation of the "Times of the Gentiles" is susceptible of very clear demonstration. The "Times of Restitution" are at the very door. The redeemed church will soon be crowned, Israel will soon be restored, the nations will soon enjoy righteous rule, deliverance will soon come to a groaning creation. May our God hasten along that age of glory. The following is the letter alluded to above:

MOUNT OLIVET.

The day is lovely and with feelings of deep reverence we start for the sacred Mount Olivet. Passing the Damascus gate we soon reach the brook Kidron. Here Christ in sadness of soul trod. Here he sighed for his Zion. Here he travailed in agony for us. We cross the Kidron and enter the "solemn shades of Gethsemane."

The garden is enclosed by a high stone wall, and within, the sacred spot and the trees, including the trees of agony which occupies the center of the garden, is all inclosed by an iron railing. The trees indicate great age. We knelt before God, and wept. Ah, here I received an evidence which told me, in as it were, tones of thunder, that Jesus in this very vicinity groaned for a mortal race. Nor would I yield up this evidence for all this a thousand worlds like this would offer. My soul exclaimed, Precious Redeemer I know thee better now, yea, and I love thee more. With a mind concentrated we leave the garden and proceed up the Mount. To the right as we ascend is the Jewish cemetery, extending from the Kidron half way up the mountain. Jews of past ages lie here, and Jews from all countries have come to Jerusalem to die, that they might here be buried. Up a little higher we rest beneath the shade of an olive tree, and look down upon the finest picture we ever gazed upon. There at our feet, so to speak, on the one hand is the valley of Jehoshaphat, on the other the Pool of Siloam, and beyond is the valley of Hinnom, and the mountains about Jerusalem appear in all their loveliness. As a learned Jewish rabbi to me a day or two ago (the man who could stand on the side of Mount Olivet and look around and then deny the Bible or the Savior, he must be dead in him of little account." In fact the Scripture is the best guide book we can have for the Holy land. We might have mentioned that the Russians have built a tower on the top of the Mount and have placed a large bell within it. The bell was hauled up the mountain side by 500 women, they (the Russians) are now building a magnificent temple immediately above the Jewish cemetery. A French prince has a palatial residence and enclosure just above the temple. It is wonderful how people of all nations are flocking hither.

To return. We ascend to the summit and go over to take a view from the other side. As we pass along,

"I could but think where Moses stood
And view'd the landscape o'er."

But here we stand on a far more glorious spot. Here prophets have prophesied. Here Christ often walked and prayed, and moreover the scene from this point is more transporting. There, lying just before us now, is the Dead Sea with its dark blue waters, and there is the valley of the Jordan and the river winding its way toward the sea. Yonder are the mountains of Moab, and the hills on the which Moses stood to view the landscape o'er," which are really but the bank of the Dead Sea, for their summit is a vast tableau or rather it constitutes one vast plain. You see the Dead Sea is evidently an indentation of the earth's crust, for it is nearly 1300 feet lower than the Mediterranean sea. There also at our feet is Bethany. Oh, what sacred memories rise up, rather well up in our mind. The sun shines out strongly; yet the sky overhanging this favored land is of a deeper blue than anything we ever witnessed. The distant hills are of a darker hue than the sky. The nearer hills are variegated. The plains are clothed in beautiful verdure. The picture is grand. Words cannot describe it. We kneel on the top of the mountain and in tears remember Zion before God. It is a hallowed moment.

Returning we rest beneath the shade of a locust tree. Again we cross the brook Kidron which is nearly dried up at the present season, and passing over the reputed mound of Calvary, of which we will hereafter speak, we return home to our quiet room to ponder over the scenes of the day.

"THE DEVIL AND HIS FAMILY."

"I speak that which I have seen with my father; and ye do that which ye have seen with your father. They answered and said to him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham. But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham. Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they unto him, We be not born of fornication, we have one Father even God. Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father ye would love me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Why do ye not understand my speech even because ye cannot hear my word. Ye are of your father the devil and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it. And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not." John viii. 38 to 45.

Here is a divinely drawn picture of this the largest family upon earth. Its father a murderer, in apostate from the truth and the inventor of lies. And in him the truth does not exist. His children or family proclaimed by themselves among men as scribes by occupation, and Pharisees by profession of great regard for the law of God. By Jesus they are classified as the children of the devil; because they come to him with protentious questions, in the hope of finding a ground of accusation against him. John viii. 6. Because they accused him of bearing witness of himself and therefore of being an untruthful witness; they knew not whence he came nor whither he was going; they judged after the flesh; they were from beneath, they were of this world; they claimed the, never were in bondage, that they were the children of Abraham, and the children of God.

The real ground or point which determined the paternity of these men was their disposition to kill him for telling them the truth as he had heard and seen with his Father. Jesus had simply one thing to affirm concerning himself. This one thing was that he was the Son of God. He had only one reliable witness to offer in demonstration of this claim. "I speak, said he, that which I have seen with my Father." This shows that the revelations which Jesus gave of the Father were not discovered but seen by him. They prove that the Father had taken him into partnership with himself, and the demonstration that this partnership was real consisted in his doing the works of his Father. The evasion of the only fair conclusion to be drawn from the sayings of Jesus was therefore, the grounds upon which he affirmed that they were of their father the devil. No murder was ever committed without a motive or reason by him who did the deed. This motive therefore, resulted from a rejection of the first principle in the law of God, viz: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and all thy strength, and all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself." Love worketh no ill to thy neighbor. It is therefore the fulfilling of the law, and the absence of it is the breaking of the law. The devil therefore is he who first evaded the meaning of God's revelation, and then disobeyed it. His large family now living, is composed of those who know not God, and who obey not the gospel which he sent by his Son Jesus Christ, and his chosen apostles, of all that they saw and heard. The rejection of the paternity of Jesus is the turning point which determines the paternity of every one who is favored to have his testimony. For to as many as received him, to these gave he the right, or favor of becoming the children of God John I. 12. On the other hand he who rejects the record that God gave concerning his Son, hath made him a liar, every rejector, is therefore a child of the devil, and exposed to the judgment written concerning the devil and his angels.

Neither the rejector nor the neglector of this great salvation can possibly escape the righteous condemnation of him who sent it. The reasons for these conclusions are transparent. Jesus affirms in this connection, "I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." The one who rejects Jesus therefore, rejects the light of the world, and the light of life specially given to it by God. It is impossible therefore for him to be acceptor and rejector of God's favor at the same time. The rejector thus judges himself unworthy of the light, and also of the life, and cannot have either of them.

Again he says "If ye believe not that I am the Son of God, ye shall die in your sins." Here it is affirmed indirectly by Jesus that they were perishing in their sins. I have supplied the words Son of God as his claim was rejected by those to whom he was speaking. The rejector of the divine paternity of Jesus is therefore still in his sins and exposed to the death due to these sins.

Again the rejector of the Son is a rejector of the freedom which the Son alone can give, for God hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father who sent him.

This family of the devil claimed to be children of Abraham but they rejected his heir. They claimed that God was their Father, yet they rejected him whom God honored. They professed to listen to him, but simply listened with the view to catch but not to understand. Wherever therefore today the words of Jesus are not read with an honest, earnest purpose to understand and do them, there we have the spirit of those children of the devil, the spirit of evasion, indifference, neglect, or which in any way by tradition, or any other cause renders of none effect the claim of Jesus, to be the Christ the Son of the living God, the light of the world, or where men who profess to believe and obey him, but yet are living in sinful practices, there we have the members of this large family, lying not safely, but securely in the arms of their father the devil, whose works beyond mistake show the spirit they are of. The paternity of every man is determined by himself just as certainly as the fruit of a tree determines the kind of tree. Jesus affirms that the tree is known by its fruit. The absence of fruit proves the tree barren, while the quality and quantity determines the value of the tree. When therefore a man claims to have God for his Father but does not bear the fruits of righteousness, peace and joy, his claim is not sustained. If he bring forth the fruits of strife and division he is a liar and of his father the devil. The offering of an excuse for the existence of such fruit only serves to confirm the truth of the relationship. A righteous man cannot be found practicing unrighteousness nor a peaceful man engaged in strife. A diligent servant is not found in a state of idleness. A loving son does not neglect his parents. The real character is determined by the habitual and spontaneous and not by the accidental and the artificial. A good tree may have some unripe, imperfect or abortive fruit upon it. These determine the rank or degree of goodness but not the goodness itself. A vine may have many of these imperfections arising from a great variety of causes, but so long as they are not the dominant but only the subordinate they certainly lower the rank but do not change his state from good to bad.

Every branch in me, said Jesus, that bears fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. But the branch which bringeth not forth fruit is removed. The bringing forth of fruit is therefore the proof of being in the true vine. Fruit is borne upon the vine every season but is not found upon it in the state of ripeness at every part of the season. Yet the practised husbandman knows very early in the season whether the branch be living or dead. As soon as the fruit season has passed the branch, if vital, begins to prepare for the next season's fruit. The vitality of the vine and the branches are thus prematurely engaged in the formation of fruit or in the elements necessary for the production of fruit. There is no such thing as rest in the living vine or fruit tree, no more can there be rest or the stoppage of work in the case of him who has been made alive by the living voice of Jesus Christ. The eternal life spring of water has been struck in his affections. These have been overcome by love and are therefore changed from hatred to love. They therefore produce the fruit of the spirit which is love, joy and peace. But in the production of fruit the husbandman is the first cause. He produces the vine and the vine produces the branches and the branches produce the fruit.

A perfect husbandman therefore must succeed in producing fruit. He does not wither the branches but simply removes them, after they have ceased to live. They have ceased to let the vitality of the true vine flow through them. Every effort of the husbandman and also of vine were directed to the production of fruit. The obstruction began in the branch refusing to bear. This obstruction arises from the branch acting in opposition to the will of both the husbandman and the vine. Disobedience therefore is the cause of barrenness, and barrenness will be visited by removal. This barren branch has therefore denied obedience to the husbandman and cut off its connection with his vitality, and the husbandman cuts it off from the vine. He therefore who began by being planted or grafted into the true vine and afterwards turned away and despised him shall be cut off and consumed. Let all therefore who have obeyed the husbandman and put on the name of Jesus Christ, his true vine, take the utmost care to abide in him and bring forth the fruits of righteousness which are to his glory and praise.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Indiana, D. V., will convene at the Antioch Meeting House, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, Marshall County, Ind., commencing at two o'clock, on Thursday, June 9th, 1887, and continue over Sunday following.

The reason for commencing Thursday instead of Friday, as heretofore, is this: A large amount of very important business has been mapped out to be transacted, and we will need more time.

Those coming by the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R., or by the Vandalia R. R. will leave the cars at Plymouth, where conveyances will be on Thursday to take them to the place of meeting. Those coming by the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago R. R., or the "Nickel Plate" R. R. will leave the cars at Argos, and inquire for Robert Railsback. It will be a great accommodation to residents at the place of meeting if those contemplating attending this meeting will notify the Secretary at Plymouth, Ind., of the fact, and the direction they will come from, and the probable time of arrival.

A large number of the brethren and sisters have been personally requested to prepare papers upon various subjects, to be read before this conference. These papers will be used as the basis for considering these different subjects, and where the authors of the papers are present they will lead the discussion.

What our people need more than anything else, is system in our work. A large majority of our members are well versed in Scripture and are able and willing to do valiant service for the Master. All that is needed is a plan of operations whereby each one shall be assigned certain work to do. The brethren and sisters are willing to work and will only be too glad of an opportunity of leading some precious one into the fold of Christ, and thereby save a soul from death and add a star to their crown. We want therefore to take such action at the June conference as shall finally result in giving everyone some specific work to do, so that at the great harvest time we may all come bringing in the sheaves. A few can't do this work and do it as it should be done. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom, we therefore urge every one who loves the Lord and loves his cause, to not only come to conference but to come so as to be there at the beginning of the meeting. The committees, to whom will be referred the different branches of the work, will be appointed at the first meeting.

Able ministers will be present on Thursday and one of the best, if not the best sermon of the conference will be preached on Thursday night. Every church in the state will of course send delegates: but we not only want the delegates but we want a large representation from each church in addition to the delegates. We also want the brethren and sisters, who reside where we have no organized church, to come. We also extend a very cordial invitation to the brethren in other states to be present with us and assist us by their good offices and prayers. To all who cannot come, please do as Paul did, write us a letter of good cheer. Now brethren let us all pray from this time until the close of the conference, that we may have an interesting and profitable meeting, and that much good may be done in the name of our dear Redeemer.

R. S. DWIGGINS,
Pres. Ind. Conference.

A. R. UNDERWOOD,
Secretary.

The 30th Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, in the Christian Church, at Watson, Allegan County, Mich., commencing Thursday evening, June 2, 1887, and continue over Sunday. All lovers of the truth are cordially invited. Those coming by the G. R. & I. R. R. will leave the cars at Martin, and those coming by the M. & O. R. R. will leave the cars at Fisk. Teams will be at each place to convey all who may come to the place of meeting. Those coming with their own conveyances may inquire for G. B. Myers or James Pallett. For further particulars address the writer at Mendon, Michigan.

H. L. PERRY, Sec.

There will be a Grove Meeting held at Watkins' Great Flowing Well, three miles southwest of Story City, Story County, Iowa, commencing on Friday, June 10, 1887, and holding over Sunday. Let all who can bring covered wagons and tents. Those of the Gospel faith are especially invited to come, as we expect Gospel preaching, and a good time. Those coming by rail will stop at Story City, where you will be met and conveyed to the ground. Come, brethren, help us by your presence, and let us leave our cares and labors for a day, to enjoy this meeting and serve our Master upon the beautiful prairies of Iowa.

O. H. WATKINS,
A. J. EYCHANER.

The Illinois Conference will convene at East Plum River, Ill., Friday, June 3, at 8 o'clock p. m. and continue over the following Sunday. Teams will be in Lanark to convey the brethren from a distance to the meeting. A general invitation is extended to all.

M. M. MITCHELL.

Poetry.

MY HEART IS IN CANAAN.

My heart is in Canaan, my heart is not here,
My heart is in Canaan, its fountains anear;
Its fountains anear; I see their bright glow,
My heart is in Canaan wherever I go.
O mountains of Canaan I sing to your world,
The birth-place of Jesus! the center of earth!
Fair city of Zion, the place of my King,
I pray for the triumphs your triumph will bring.

I pray for the time when your stones shall be laid,
Your windows of agates most precious be made;
When God your afflicted shall comfort again,
And fill all your valleys and mountains with rain.

My heart is in Canaan, my heart is not here.
My heart is in Canaan, its fountains anear:
Its fountains anear, I see their bright glow.
My heart is in Canaan wherever I go.

A Chapter in Jewish History of Real Interest to the Jews.—No. 2.

בני בכרי ישראל
"Israel is my son, my first-born." Ex. iv. 22.

מזרה ישראל יקבצנו
"He that scattered Israel, will gather him." Jer. xxxi. 10.

וכרתי את־בית "ישראל ואת־בית יהודה ברית חדישה
"I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31.

There is another phase of the death and resurrection of the Messiah, which we find intimated in a remarkable prediction by Isaiah the prophet. In this we have not only the revival from death with an extended season of prosperity following it; but also the death itself invested with the character of a sacrifice for sin. The prophet says: "It pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors." This seems to be what is briefly expressed by the angel Gabriel to Daniel the prophet, when he speaks of Messiah the Prince being "cut off but not for himself," and also plainly answers to a prediction by David in the Messianic Psalm (xl.) concerning the priesthood of one there spoken of as David's Lord.—"The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek." Is not this the great Antitype of the remarkable institution of sacrifice for sin which was established by God himself from the beginning of the world, and which constituted one of the most important parts of the Divine service in the nation of Israel under the law of Moses?

This phase of the death and resurrection of the Messiah also finds illustration in the predictions concerning sacrifices in the future. Let a few examples suffice. Isaiah the prophet intimates:—"Arise, shine: for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. . . . . All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory."

"The sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people. The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him."

And Jeremiah:—"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness. For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually."

And Malachi:—Chap. x. "From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts. Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, as in former years."

It is evident that while the sacrifices of the past foreshadowed the great sacrifices of the Messiah, the sacrifices of the future shall be a commemoration of that sacrifice.

It is well also to bear in mind that sacrifice for sin has a twofold bearing, national as well as individual. There is to be made with Israel a New Covenant, an important provision of which is the blotting out of the national sin of Israel. This covenant is predicted by Jeremiah in these terms:—

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they broke, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

Concerning the Old Covenant, it is recorded in the Second Book of Moses that "he wrote all the words of the Lord," and builded an altar, and sent young men of the children of Israel who offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moses took half of the blood and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words. This was the Old Covenant for the confirmation of which blood was necessary; and so also shall it be with the New Covenant. The Old Covenant contained provisions for the reward of obedience and for the punishment of disobedience; the New Covenant shall contain a provision for the remission of Israel's national disobedience, at the same time as it provides for their enlightenment in the knowledge of God. For this end the Messiah "poured out his soul unto death;" in the shedding of his blood as "the blood of the covenant." This blood is also effectual for the forgiveness of every individual who accepts the Messiah as God's appointed King, and submits to him as his Lord and Master.

But it is time that some answer be given to the question—Who is this great one calling himself the Messiah, the King of Israel? In these remarks even his name has not yet been mentioned. Another historian of some of the events of that period gives the following account of his parentage and birth:—

"The angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David: and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

"And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria. And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem: (because he was of the house and lineage of David:) to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child. And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds."

The first historian quoted records the following circumstance connected with the infancy of this personage:—

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. When Herod the King had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it was written by the prophet, And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

"The angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt: and was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son."

It will be observed that this child was to be named Jesus, which in the Greek in which those historians wrote, is Iesous, and in the Hebrew Joshua. This name is significant and means "he will save." One of the historians already quoted expressly says it was to be given to him "because he should save his people from their sins." There can be no doubt that the primary reference here is to the people of Israel in their national captivity, with a secondary reference to individuals both of the Israelites and of the nations.

There is little recorded of this personage till he was about thirty years of age, when he began his public ministry. One incident may be here given:—

"His parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover. And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast. And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it. But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance. And when they found him not they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him. And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them; but his mother kept all these saying in her heart. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."

An important event in the outset of his mission may also be given:—"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

It is not recorded that John had any subsequent interview with this claimant of the Messiahship, but the following incident is worthy of mention:—

"When John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me."

His own account of his Divine Sonship is recorded, and is in the form of a disputation with the Jews. It is as follows:—"It was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication, and it was winter. And Jesus walked in the temple in Solomon's porch. Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ tell us plainly. Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me. But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one. Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him. Jesus answered them, Many good works have I showed from my Father; for which of those work do ye stone me? The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy, and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God. Jesus answered them, Is it not written in yor law, I said, Ye are gods? If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the Scripture cannot be broken; say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God? If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him. Therefore they sought again to take him; but he escaped out of their hand, and went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode. And many resorted unto him, and said, John did no miracle, but all things that John spake of this man were true. And many believed on him there."

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.

The idea that the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew is a resurrection scene has caused, and, wherever this mistaken notion is entertained, still causes perplexity and confusion. It is a parabolic representation of what the Son of Man will do with the nations of Christendom, the nations professedly named after him, when as King he sits upon his glorious throne. The popular teaching that this Scripture refers to the resurrection of all the dead, we have more than once shown to be utterly untenable. From Burlington Wale's Closing Lays of Christendom, we quote part of his exposition of the later parables of Matthew. Referring to the two opinions respecting the meaning of the phrase, "this generation," Mr. Wale says:

"But we contend that neither meaning would be right. Let the reader observe, that the verse occurs in each of the three Evangelists, after and immediately consequent upon the 'unequalled tribulation' mentioned by Matthew and Mark, and the fulfilling of the times of the Gentiles, as mentioned by Luke. And if we have shown, as we think we have, that tribulation is yet future,—it follows that 'this generation' which is to be in it, and pass through it, must be yet future. And that the words 'this generation,' whatever be the grammatical difficulty, must refer to the generation then living when these events take place. The words themselves do not occur in either of the Evangelists in connection with the predicted destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem. Taken in connection with the exposition we have given, this verse constitutes the only difficulty. If the reader rejects this application of the words 'this generation,' and insist upon limiting them to the Apostles' age, the difficulties are multiplied tenfold, and are literally insurmountable.

"Note.—The 'unequalled tribulation' is produced by the unrestrained actions, iniquity, and lawless passions of evil men. The retributive judgments which follow upon the great tribulation, come down from God.

"The 25th chapter of Matthew stands closely connected with the 24th; the contents of both being uttered by our Lord at the same time as parts of the same continuous discourse. This chapter ought properly to have begun with the 45th verse of the previous chapter. After telling his disciples that as it was in the days of Noah so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be, the Lord gives a solemn word of warning as to the conduct of his servants, his ministers, during his absence, the period between the two Advents, 'Who then is a faithful and wise servant whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them their meat in due season (to feed them ministerially). Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the intemperate, the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth'—then—at that time when he comes to punish the unfaithful servant,—not during the whole period of his absence, but just on the eve of his second Advent, then shall the kingdoms of heaven—i. e., Christendom—be likened unto ten virgins; then at the time when the King comes, all the wise and foolish alike, will slumber and sleep. All will be indifferent to the coming of the Lord,—wrapt in drowsy self-indulgence. For fifteen centuries, that is from the fourth to the nineteenth, the Church lost sight of this 'blessed hope,' as for twelve centuries she lost sight of the doctrine of justification by faith, and now, though it has been brought before the Church somewhat prominently for the last fifty years,—it is regarded by many with indifference, and by some with hostility.

"This first parable describes the ecclesiastical condition of Christendom, when he comes; 'they all slumbered and slept'—the same crisis is upon them all; the awaking will not be till the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven. But there is this important difference between them when they awake to the fact that the Lord is near: the wise have oil in their vessels with their lamps,—the others have lamps without oil;—the form of godliness without its substance or its power. And let the reader observe that their preparedness for the marriage supper consisted not in what they did but in what they had.

"The second parable of the talents gives us Christ's judgment when he comes, upon ministerial fidelity.

"'After a long time'—eighteen centuries at least—the Lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them. Whatever faculty or talent is bestowed upon a man as a servant of Christ he is responsible for;—for its right use and exercise; it is not his own. This is the true idea of stewardship; the gifts are not his own, they are bestowed by Christ, and on the principle of stewardship he is responsible for their proper use. These gifts are bestowed in different proportions, on different individuals, one, two, five talents.

"Every professing minister of Christ comes under the responsibility of a minister of Christ to Christ. But what is he responsible for? That he is a constituted custodian of the word of God, the Bible. This is the 'one talent.' He professes to be a faithful expositor of the Book; the minister who makes this profession, and yet hides, conceals, dilutes, or explains away any portion of it, because it is unfashionable, or unpalatable to the age in which he lives, is the wicked and slothful servant, whose doom is recorded here, while the faithful servant has further gifts and service conferred upon him in the age to come. These are the rewards of service super-added to salvation.

"The third parable is national and secular, and represents the judgment, or judicial decision of the Son of Man upon the nations of Christendom. 'Before him shall be gathered all' the nations, i. e. all the nations which constitute Christendom, or call themselves Christians, not the whole of the human race. This is the constant use and meaning of the phrase in the Gospels and in the Epistles. It is the judgment of the 'living' nations. Nothing is said of, nor reference made to, the resurrection of the dead. The sheep and the goats are in the same fold, the nominal and actual subjects of the King. He separates them; man cannot, any more than he can separate the tares from the wheat, or the bad fish from the good.

"Note. This chapter gives us the judgment of Christ upon the nations of Christendom under the form of a set judicial assize. It describes in the first parable his judgment upon the professing Church, part saved and part shut out in the outer darkness; in the second, the rewards of ministerial fidelity and the punishment of the unfaithful minister cast into the outer darkness. In the third, the judgment of the entire nations of Christendom; the separation of the true from the false, and the latter consigned to everlasting punishment (Kolasin, abscission, cutting off). It is a parabolic representation of the termination and issue of the present system of things, and of Christ's estimate of and judgment upon it. We learn from it (1) that the motive determines the value of the action: 'Ye did it not to me.' (2) The 'brethren' of Christ are those who hear the word of God, and keep it. (3) That it represents Christ coming as a 'King' to judge the nations which bear his name, are nominally his subjects, i. e. Christendom. (4) That the 'throne' he is represented as occupying is the throne of his own power and personal glory, (verse 31). The throne which he occupies now is his Father's throne, Rev. iii. 21. The throne he will rule from during the Millennial age is the throne of his father David, Luke i. 32. The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. David never occupied a throne in heaven, and Christ never occupy d a throne on earth; and certainly David never reigned in human hearts. The 'throne of David' must therefore mean the centre or city from which David ruled, that is Jerusalem; and the promise points to that day when the law shall go forth from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—Rainbow.

CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 150 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. The book is now ready so that by June 1, we will be able to fill all orders so far received and all new ones. We want some good live brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 75 cents each, singly; 6 copies for $4.00; 12 copies, $7. 20. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

Publisher's Notes.

Will you help us by getting one or two Trial Subscribers?

We have received a money order of $2.00 from Auburn, Cal., with no letter of instruction. Will the person sending it please give his order and we will fill it promptly.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed specially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

Read our book list—The Emphatic Diaglott reduced from $4.00 to $2.50. Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Bible, for $1.00. Smith's Bible Dictionary only $1.50. Views and Reviews in Eschatology—the last work of J. H. Pettingell—for $1.00. Do not fail to secure this book, it is good, and worth double the price asked for it. Terms for distribution by the pound for 60 cents.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

Poetry

THE IVY POEM.

The Ivy in a dungeon grew,
Unfed by rain, unwatered by dew,
Its pallid leaflets only drank
Cave moisture foul, or odors dank.

But through the dungeon grating high
There fell a sunbeam from the sky,
It slept upon the grateful floor
In silent gladness evermore.

The Ivy felt A tremor shoot
Through all its fibres to the root,
It felt the light, it saw the ray,
It longed to blossom into day.

It grew, it crept, it pushed, it clomb,
Long had the darkness been its home;
Yet well it knew, though veiled in night,
The goodness and the joy of light.

It reached the beam, it thrilled, it curled,
It blessed the warmth that cheers the world;
It grew towards the dungeon bars,
It looked upon the moon and stars.

Upon that solitary place
Its verdure threw adorning grace,
The smiling birds became its guests,
And sang its praises from their nests.

By rains and dews and sunshine fed,
Upon the outer wall it spread,
And in the day beam roaming free,
It grew into a stately tree.

Would'st know the moral of the rhyme?
Behold the heavenly light and climb.
To every dungeon comes a ray
Of God's illimitable day.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. Thomas.—No. 12.

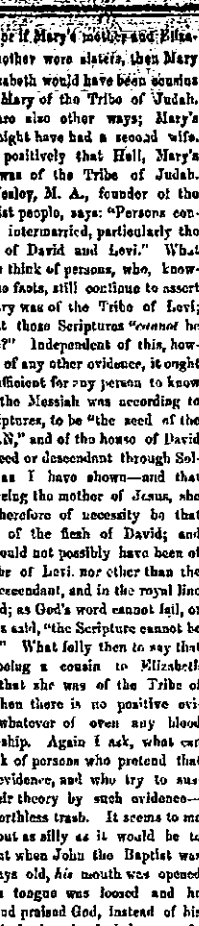
"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

They say that Jesus must have been begotten by Joseph, because Joseph was in the Solomon line of the tribe of Judah; but that Mary was not. Their own words are as follows: "But Mary was of the Tribe of Levi,' Luke i. 36; therefore the statement in Matt. i. 18, cannot be genuine. This statement, Luke i. 36, is not truthful if he was begotten of the Holy Spirit!" This foolish, presumptuous denial of the Scriptures, as not truthful, and "cannot be genuine," is a pure assumption based upon the fact that Mary's cousin, Elizabeth, was of the Tribe of Levi, when it is well known by the Josephites and all others, that intermarriages between the Tribes of Levi and Judah were quite common, and therefore Mary's father and mother may have both been of the Tribe of Judah, as I have no doubt they were, and yet if Mary's father's sister was the wife of Elizabeth's father, who was of the Tribe of Levi, then Elizabeth would have been of the Tribe of Levi and cousin to Mary, and yet Mary of the Tribe of Judah by both father and mother, or if Mary's mother and Elizabeth's mother were sisters, then Mary and Elizabeth would have been cousins and yet Mary of the Tribe of Judah. There are also other ways; Mary's father might have had a second wife. I prove positively that Hell, Mary's father, was of the Tribe of Judah. John Wesley, M. A., founder of the Methodist people, says: "Persons continually intermarried, particularly the families of David and Levi." What shall we think of persons, who, knowing these facts, still continue to assert that Mary was of the Tribe of Levi; and that these Scriptures "cannot be genuine?" Independent of this, however, or of any other evidence, it ought to be sufficient for any person to know that as the Messiah was according to the Scriptures, to be "the seed of the WOMAN," and of the house of David—the seed or descendant through Solomon, as I have shown—and that Mary, being the mother of Jesus, she must therefore of necessity be that woman, of the flesh of David; and hence could not possibly have been of the Tribe of Levi, nor other than the blood descendant, and in the royal line of David; as God's word cannot fail, or as Jesus said, "the Scripture cannot be broken." What folly then to say that Mary being a cousin to Elizabeth proves that she was of the Tribe of Levi, when there is no positive evidence whatever of even any blood relationship. Again I ask, what can we think of persons who pretend that this is evidence, and who try to sustain their theory by such evidence—mere worthless trash. It seems to me just about as silly as it would be to hold that when John the Baptist was eight days old, his mouth was opened and his tongue was loosed and he spake and praised God, instead of his father Zacharias who had been made dumb until the day of that event; or about as silly as to hold that all men die because of their own sins instead of Adam's sin, and other like absurdities. But, the Bible being true, I shall prove conclusively, in a way that amounts to actual demonstration, that Mary, as well as Joseph, was of the Tribe of Judah, a descendant of David, of the Solomon line. I shall do this by submitting the genealogical tables of both Matthew and Luke in connection exactly as they put it; and carefully examining and comparing them, thus showing their remarkable agreement in affording ample and positive proof, in connection and harmony with the third chapter of first Chronicles, that Joseph, Mary and Jesus, were all flesh and blood descendants from David through Solomon and all in his line, clear down to the birth of David's Royal Son and Lord; just exactly according to God's covenant with David, above examined. But this will only show the flesh of Jesus, the material of which he was made, not the mental organism or mind. This will show that he was the seed or flesh of David, transmitted as "the fruit of his loins according to the flesh;" Acts ii. 30; first into the makeup of Solomon, then of Rehoboam, Solomon's son, and so on down until it became "the woman," Mary, from whose seed or germ and flesh, by the Power of the Highest, which "came down from above," was elaborated the "prepared body" of Jesus with a wonderful mental organism; by which Power he was constituted not only the Son of David as to the flesh, but also the unique or only begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth, as to the spirit or moral powers; thus being the word made flesh.—God manifested in flesh. The seed or ovum, the human germ, within the ovarium in the uterus of Mary, was evidently impregnated and vivified by the Power of God, thus producing a human embryo developing into a foetus which being nourished and built up by the blood of Mary, ultimately became the "prepared body" of Christ. Heb. x. 5. Jesus was therefore in body or nature human; but in origin, mind, spirit, disposition, character and power, he was divine—Son of man, Son of God. His own therefore, was in the will and purpose of God.

Again; Josephites say, "Whoever will read critically the genealogy of Jesus as given in Matthew and Luke, will find that they are as wide apart as the poles." Let us see. We shall find when we come to examine it carefully, that this is another mistake; which, however, is one of their chief reasons for rejecting these chapters as spurious interpolations. We shall see that the wonderful harmony as to the genealogy of Christ, and as to Mary being of the Tribe of Judah, and a descendant from David through Solomon, is the strongest evidence of genuineness and truthfulness; and therefore when Josephites say "these Scriptures cannot be truthful," they contradict Jesus who said "the Scripture cannot be broken." John x. 35.

GENEALOGICAL TABLE,
founded on both Matthew and Luke, and exactly as they put it.



It has been said as follows: "If you turn to Luke iii. 23, and onward, you will find that, while Joseph came of the royal line, as Matthew testifies, Mary came of that obscure one beginning with Nathan." Now this is a mistake, another misunderstanding. First, let me say that the two genealogical records, are simply, as Matt. i. 1, says, "the generation of Jesus Christ the son of David the son of Abraham." Luke does not mention this, just as he omits other things which Matthew tells, and as Matthew omits things which Luke tells. It is not the generation of Joseph, or Mary. Lut of Jesus.

There was only one Royal line—the line of Solomon. Both Mary and Joseph, according to both Matthew and Luke, descended from David through the Solomon line, by Jechonias, Salathiel and Zorobabel. Any person by carefully comparing this table with Matthew and Luke for a few moments, will see that it is exactly as there recorded: the left hand column or Solomon line being that of Matthew from David down, and the right hand column or Nathan line, being that of Luke from David down; (or in other words; Luke's line up to David). But the careful person cannot fail to notice that the Nathan line from David down ends with Neri; being then merged, all one, with the Solomon line, by the marriage of Jechonias with a daughter of Neri, and their son Salathiel, and his son Zorobabel.

Then by the two sons of Zorobabel, Abiud, (Matt. i. 13), and Rhesa, (Luke iii. 27), there were two other lines of descent started, Joseph being of the Abiud line, and Heli and his daughter, Mary, the mother of Jesus, being of the Rhesa line; but all in both these lines, came through Zorobabel and Salathiel, according to both Matthew and Luke; as can be easily seen in two minutes by any one. Matt. i. 12, 13; Luke iii. 27. No person can fail to see that both these lines, all below or after Zorobabel, descended through him from David, in the royal male line of Solomon. This fact has been strangely overlooked. It is a remarkable fact that only one person by the name of Salathiel or Shaltiel as sometimes spelled, and only one Zorobabel, or Zerubabel or Zerubbabel, as sometimes spelled, (which means born in Babylon) can be found in all the Scriptures, and these in the Solomon line, as shown by the above table, and through which line therefore, of necessity came Joseph, Mary and Jesus as to the flesh; and it will also be seen that Salathiel was the son of Jechonias, a descendant of David through Solomon; (corroborated by 1 Chron. iii, 16-17).

It is true, Luke says, "Salathiel was the son of Neri; but Matthew says "Jeconias begat Salathiel," which agrees with 1 Chron. iii. 17. As both Matthew and Luke's records are true, therefore Luke must have meant that Salathiel was the grandson, otherwise the son by law of Neri, by his mother, the daughter of Neri and wife of Jeconias. If Jeconias "begat" Salathiel as in Matt. and 1 Chron. then he was the natural son of Jeconias, and could only have been the grand-son of Neri. So also in Luke it is said that "Joseph was the son of Heli." But Matthew says "Jacob begat Joseph," and as both statements are true, it follows that Luke meant Joseph was the legal son, or son-in-law, of Heli, by his marriage with Mary, Heli's daughter; which is in perfect harmony with the fact stated by Matthew, that "Jacob begat Joseph;" Joseph thus being of necessity the natural son of Jacob, and the son-in-law of Heli. Josephites say there is no evidence that Mary was the daughter of Heli, that it is only assumed. But any person can see, except they shut their eyes to the light and refuse to think, that the fact is proved by the above; for as Joseph was the natural son of Jacob, then he could not be the natural son of Heli; it follows therefore that he was the son-in-law of Heli, and that Mary his wife was the daughter of Heli. This is proof that cannot be denied or get over, without rejecting the sacred record. But in addition to that, the Jewish Talmud, which contains the body of the Hebrew laws, traditions and explanations, says Mary was the daughter of Heli. Again the learned Dr. Barrett says that "in the writings of the Jews, the mother of our Lord is called "Mary the daughter of Eli (Heli) of the royal family of David;" and that "Joseph the husband of Mary being the nearest kin to Heli, the father of Mary, he was espoused to her according to law. He was the natural, that is by birth, son of Jacob, and the legal son of Heli, or as we call it, son-in-law, hence called by Luke, the son of Heli, in virtue of being Mary's husband." And then again, the Dictionary of the Bible, got up with the aid and sanction of Kitto, and many other learned men of various countries, says, "The two lines descend from Solomon and Nathan. David's sons, they unite in Salathiel, and again in Christ. Joseph was the legal father of Christ, and of the same family connections with Mary;" and in speaking of Zorobabel, it says, "From him both Joseph and Mary descended." (See also Religious Encyclopedia). So that the Messiah was a descendant of David both by law, and according to the flesh. Hundreds of similar testimonies could be added, if it were necessary, corroborating the fact thus proved by the record itself. But let the reader take notice that although there is abundance of corroborative testimony from the ablest and most learned writers who have carefully looked into this and other disputed points, yet it is the Scriptures, "the sure Word," upon which we depend as positive proof. Let the reader again take notice, that the above record by Matthew and Luke being true, it follows therefore that it DOES NOT MATTER, nor is it necessary to prove that Mary was the daughter of Heli, or some one in the other line, so long as both lines as given by Matthew and Luke, come through Zorobabel and Salathiel, descendants from David through Solomon. As before said, writers have strangely overlooked this important fact. Neither does it matter in the least, who was the wife of Jechonias, so long as he himself was of the royal line. I repeat, that no person can fail to see these facts, that if Joseph was begotten by Jacob as Matthew says, chap. i. 16, and yet was the son of Heli, as Luke says, chap. iii. 23, then his wife, Mary, must have been Heli's daughter, which made Joseph son-in-law to Heli, and hence both records true and in harmony. And so again, if Jechonias begat Salathiel, as Matthew says, chap. i. 12, and 1 Chron. iii. 17, and yet Salathiel was the son of Neri, as Luke says, chap. iii. 27, it follows that he was either son-in-law or grandson of Neri; son meaning descendant, as in many other cases. See 2 Kings xvi. 1, 2.

The learned Dr. Barrett in his elaborate dissertation on this subject, from a MS. in Trinity College, Dublin, shows clearly that in 1 Chron. iii. "A verse is transposed (showing how and why it occurred) a thing not unfrequent in the sacred writings, and that the text therefore, of verses 18-22 inclusive, should be read in the following order: verse 18, And the sons of Salathiel; Zorubabel and Shimei; and the sons of Zorubabel Meshullam, Hananiah and Shelomith their sister," etc., including Pedaiah, sometimes called Rephaiah, which was "Rhesa," and Obadiah, which was "Abiud;" giving sufficient evidence as to how the changes and mistakes occurred—some Hebrew words and names being very different in the Syriac and Arabic, etc. He thus shows that instead of Zorobabel being the son of Pedaiah, he was his father, and that Zorobabel was the son of Salathiel; agreeing with Ezra iii. 2, 8, and v. 2; Neh. xii. 1; Haggai i. 1, 12, 14, and other Scriptures—as many as eight places.

The following questions (with several others which are answered above) have been asked me by a person in Glasgow, Scotland. 1st. How does Luke give so many more generations between Jesus and David than Matthew does? 2nd. How do you account for Matthew's discrepancy, when he says that between Jechonias and Jesus there were fourteen generations, yet he only mentions twelve?" I answer, that Matthew speaks of natural sons, properly such by way of natural generation. But Luke speaks of both natural and legal sons, that is, he includes those who were legally sons of one who had died and his brother had taken his widow and raised up sons to the deceased brother, and whose name they bore as his legal sons, and also sons-in-law by marriage, as in the case of Neri and Heli. Besides, Matthew, for some unknown reason, left out some, which fact can only be determined by close careful examination and comparison of the Scriptures in many places, one illustration being the leaving out of Joakim between Josias and Jechonias, as corrected in the margin, Matt i. 11, and 1 Chron. iii. 14-16, Joakim being the father and Josias the grandfather of Jechonias. This accounts for the above discrepancy in Matthew. Joakim and Jesus being included make the fourteen generations. It will be noticed that Luke does not use the term "begat," as he included putative sons as well as natural.

No reasonable person who has faith in God and the Bible, should expect this subject to be so plainly revealed as to deprive superficial quibblers of any chance to object and refuse the truth. There is not a single Bible truth so plain that it cannot be objected to and rejected by those who are so disposed. It has been wisely permitted that the Bible as a book should contain what may be properly termed a small "human element;" that is, mistakes of various kinds, as the results of the human agency employed by its Author.

Again; It should be borne in mind in the examination of the genealogical record as given in 1 Chron. etc., and by Matthew who commenced with Abraham and came down; and Luke who commenced with Jesus, ontending it clear back to Adam, and the promise relative to "the seed of the woman," the great variation in the spelling of names, and that a person is frequently called the son of another, when he is the grandson, or even a lower descendant—son in many places meaning simply descendant—and son meaning son-in-law; and father sometimes meaning father in-law. Hence Isaban is called the son of Nahor, because he was his grandson. Gen. xxix. 4. It is on this principle that Christ is called the son of David.

There are many instances where the children male and female are called the children of their father's brother. "Moses said if a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother." Matt. xxii. 24; Deut. xxv. 5. Again; it was evidently intended and necessary that Joseph also should be a descendant of David. As the husband of Mary, Joseph was legally one with Mary. The two were made "one flesh" by marriage. By both Joseph and Mary being "of the house and lineage of David," all the natural and legal rights and requirements of the Jewish law in the case, were met and made complete, without clashing or interfering in any way with Christ's supernatural begettal. Hence we see the necessity of the two genealogies—of Joseph as well as of Mary, both being given to show the one object as worded by Matthew, viz, "The generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham."

THE COMING AGE, —ITS—
Nature and Proximity.
—By J. P. WESTCOTT.—

This is a religious book of unpretending moral tenor. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point absolutely to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research over the a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are now at hand.

In brief it tells us very clearly the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand is the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the will of the Unseen Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistable power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

Instructive Reading for the Young.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 1, 1887. NO. 21.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months thereafter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the ideal "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the desideratum of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. A full, hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion are pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for admission.

A Chapter in Jewish History of Real Interest to the Jews.—No. 3.

בני בכרי ישראל

"Israel is my son, my first-born." Ex. iv. 22.

מזרה ישראל יקבצנו

"He that scattered Israel will gather him." Jer. xxxi. 10.

וכרתי את־בית ישראל ואת־בית יהודה ברית חדשה

"I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31.

After a short but busy life of only a few years, occupied in preaching and teaching, he the Messiah, was put to death in the circumstances already related.

Shortly before that event took place he told his followers that he was going to leave them, to go to his Father, but that he would come again. After his resurrection from the dead, he appeared to his disciples on several occasions and after a few weeks, having led them to the Mount of Olives to the east of Jerusalem "they asked of him, saying, Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And, while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

In carrying out their mission those men proclaimed the resurrection of their Master, and his exaltation to the right hand of God. One of them referred to the latter as the fulfilment of Psalm cx.—"The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." On this occasion three thousand professed their belief in the claims of the "despised and rejected of men;" and were baptized. The following is the full text of the part of the address referred to:—"Ye men of Israel, hear these words, Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand. Until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom they have crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul; and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

On another occasion the same preacher addressed a gathering at the temple, near Solomon's porch, in the following terms:—

"Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk? The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus: whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of Life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses. And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all. And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers. But those things, which God before has showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled. Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord: and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear the prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."

"And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now eventide. Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand. And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes, and Annas the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem. And when they had set them in the midst, they asked, By what power, or by what name, have ye done this? Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel, If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole; be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus. And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it. But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves, Saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it. But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus. But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye, for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. So when they had further threatened them they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done. For the man was above forty years old, on whom the miracle of healing was showed."

Having again appeared in the temple in carrying out their mission, they were again arrested. We read:—

"Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadducees), and were filled with indignation. And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison. But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life. And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought. But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, and told, Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within. Now when the high priest and the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow. Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people. Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: for they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned. And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them, saying, Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us. Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, we ought to obey God rather than men. The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him. When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them. Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space: and said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to your selves what ye intend to do as touching these men. For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he also perished, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God. And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ."

At this time it is recorded that "the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith."

CHRIST'S METHOD OF TEACHING.

Jesus of Nazareth, soon after his baptism, and his fasting and temptation in the wilderness, appeared before the Jewish people in the character of a religious teacher. His assumption of this character was sua sponte, of his own accord, without license or appointment by any earthly authority, and, to the outset, without followers. He belonged to no religious school then known among the Jews, had no connection with the ecclesiastical authorities of that age, and, at the commencement of this ministry, was not even known to them. He was simply Jesus of Nazareth, and, so to speak, set up for himself, acting wholly upon his own motion, and his own responsibility, without the supervision, advice, or support of anybody, and without being educated in any institution of learning. He sought no commission from priest, Levite, or Sanhedrim. He was himself his own authority, and had no resources other than those existing in himself. His residence at Nazareth did not commend him to public attention, and his earthly parentage was no help to him.

The truth is, that Jesus suddenly burst upon the Jewish nation as a new, original, and peculiar light, self-moved, self-called, and self-appointed to the task which he had undertaken. Although he had a forerunner in John the Baptist, the people generally had no adequate idea of the person whom John announced. They did not understand the full import of John's ministry as we do in this age. They were excited by the preaching of John, and some of them thought that perhaps he might be "the Christ" who was to come; but they failed to see this "Christ" in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. Such, in brief, to human seeming, were the circumstances under which the great career of Jesus was inaugurated.

And, after Jesus had entered upon this career, he had no hall, academy, or place to which he resorted at stated periods, and where he delivered lectures to the people. He sat in no professor's chair. He was rather a travelling preacher, going from place to place without a fixed habitation anywhere, and spoke to the people as he met them. He went where they were that he might speak to them. He made three successive circuits through the villages and cities of Galilee, was occasionally in Samaria and Judea, and attended four annual passovers at Jerusalem. When, by reason of his miracles, he had become widely known, crowds were sure to meet him wherever he went; and to them he spake, according to the circumstances of the moment, sometimes in the street, sometimes in private houses, sometimes in the synagogue, sometimes on the shores of the lake of Galilee, sometimes in the temple at Jerusalem, sometimes to a single individual as in his conversation with the woman of Samaria, and sometimes to a large multitude. The migratory character of his ministry gave him an opportunity for intercourse with the people which he otherwise would not have had.

Twelve disciples of his own selection were associated with Jesus in the relations of special intimacy. These disciples accompanied him in his missionary journeys. To them he talked more frequently and fully than to any other class of persons. His design was that, with the exception of the traitor Judas, they should be his apostles and the preachers of his Gospel after he had personally left the world. They were humble and unimportant men, and in themselves imparted no strength to his cause. What they afterward became was due to what they received from him. Their relation to him is the one great secret of their significance to mankind. He taught them that they might be the teachers of others.

The preaching of Jesus was purely ex tempore, without any preparation beforehand other than that supplied by his own perfect knowledge of God and man. He does not, in order to say what he did, seem to have studied in the usual sense of this term. He had no need of doing so. The words of truth and wisdom came forth from his lips spontaneously, and apparently without the slightest effort to find either thoughts or words. He spake as the occasion required, and always met each occasion at once, when presented to him, without any delay or hesitation. He never took time to think what he should say. He knew upon the instant what to say, and said it. Brevity of utterance was one of the characteristics of his ministry. What he said, though loaded with the material for thought, was not diluted with an unnecessary multiplicity of words. That which is the result of art acquired by men, was with him perfectly natural.

Jesus never spake as if doubtful or uncertain as to the truth of what he said, or as if stating mere conjectures or opinions that might be true, or might be false. Though dealing with the gravest questions relating to God and man, he never implied the possibility of mistake on his part, and always assumed that his utterances were to be accepted as absolute laws binding upon the faith, the conscience and practice of men. He, indeed, spake as if he were divine as well as human, and as if it was the duty of men to believe what he said, and do what he commanded. "But I say unto you" was a very common preface to what he was about to say. The people noticed that he spake with authority, and not as the scribes.

No utterances ever heard in this world were more completely marked with the elements of absolute positiveness, than those which fell from the lips of the Great Teacher. His words, in respect to all the matters embraced therein, give us a positive philosophy; and what we are to do with them is to ascertain their meaning and then believe them. We cannot do so too implicitly. Faith resting on his words need raise no question as to the safety of its foundation. He is "the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

The colloquial and conversational method of teaching was a conspicuous feature of the ministry of Jesus. No small part of that ministry consists simply in conversations between him and others. He talked with the people and they with him. He asked them questions and they asked him questions. He heard their answers, and they heard his. His interview with the woman of Samaria, as recorded in the Gospel of John, is a fair example of this method of teaching, whether he was instructing his disciples, or speaking to the people, or dealing with the scribes and Pharisees, who, as a class, were hostile to him, watched him with a critical and jealous eye, and sought to catch him in his words. There was in him no taciturnity or studied reserve that repelled familiar approach. Anybody could speak to him with no sense of embarrassment. He was accessible to even the humblest person, and always ready to hear any one who desired to speak to him, and just as ready to respond to any question that might be asked him. This attitude on his part naturally gave to his ministry the conversational character, and also impressed upon it that miscellaneous variety in the topics of discourse which appear in the Gospel narrative.

The style of Jesus, in the words used, was that of common life in that age, without the parade of scientific formulas, and without the technical terms and phrases of human philosophy. Common words were abundantly sufficient to convey his ideas; and because he used such words the common people could and did understand him. He spake to them in a style with which they were familiar; and this is one of the reasons why they heard him gladly, and were so strongly impressed with what he said. Those who preach his gospel will do well, in this respect to imitate his example. It is a great mistake in them to speak to the people, as if talking to a school of scientific experts and trained dialecticians. The language of common life best befits the Christian pulpit. It is always good enough for popular instruction, and is the only language which ordinary minds will so understand as to feel its power.

The parable was one of the common methods of Jesus in conveying truth to others, seldom interpreted by him, but always so drawn in its recitals as to be self-interpreting in respect to the point he meant to impress upon others. The Kingdom of God, as embodied in his mission and work, was in this way simplified to human apprehension. Sometimes pungent rebuke was given in the form of parable. How clear the distinction between the penitent sinner and the self-righteous moralist, as set forth in the parable of the publican and the Pharisee—the one smiting his breast, not so much as lifting up his eyes toward heaven, and asking God to be merciful to him as a sinner, and the other thanking God that he was not as other men, and parading his good works before the Almighty? The Jewish lawyer who wished to know who was his neighbor, had his question promptly and fully answered in the parable of the Good Samaritan. The parable of the Prodigal Son sets forth the sinner in his estrangement from God, the same sinner when coming to himself and penitently returning to God, and also God in the abounding clemency of grace toward the returning penitent. The parable of the Talents and that of the Ten Virgins explain themselves at sight. Jesus knew how to make parables tell on human thought and feeling. The study of his parables cannot fail to impress one with the pertinency to the end he had in view, and will certainly disclose their great spiritual force.

So, also, tender invitation and entreaty, accompanied with the richest promises in the event of compliance therewith, are scattered all through the ministry of Jesus. He invited all classes to come to him that they might have life, with the assurance that by so doing they would have life. Looking out upon this sinning and suffering world he said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." His promise reads thus: "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

Jesus always assumed his own absolute and all-sufficient competency to be the helper of humanity in the great matter of our salvation from sin and its curse. He proclaimed himself to be the Savior who had come into the world "to save that which was lost," and "to give his life a ransom" for sinners. No feature of his ministry was more prominent or constant than that of invitation, addressed to men in all conditions of life. God, as he tells us, had sent him to earth upon the errand of love; and wherever he went he preached the love of God, and preached himself the expression and medium of that love. He is, in respect to our supreme wants, the best friend this world ever had, and the only friend that is clothed with the power of salvation.

Jesus, however, knew how to be severe as well as tender and affectionate in dealing with men; and this feature strongly appears in his terrible denunciation of the Scribes and Pharisees of that age. He called them hypocrites, binding heavy burdens for other men's shoulders, but not willing to touch them with one of their fingers. All their works they did to be seen of men. They made broad their phylacteries, enlarged the borders of their garments, and loved the uppermost rooms at feasts, the chief seats in the synagogues, greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, "Rabbi, Rabbi." They shut up the kingdom of heaven, neither entering themselves, nor suffering others to do so. They devoured widows' houses, and for a pretense made long prayers. They strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel. They tithed mint, anise, and cummin, but omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith. They made clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but within were full of extortion and excess. They were like whited sepulchres, beautiful without, but within full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness. They were serpents, a generation of vipers, in respect to whom Jesus said: "How can ye escape the damnation of Hell?"

The Scribes and Pharisees of that age, considered as a class, were, according to this picture, sanctimonious religionists, but in reality base and wicked men. Jesus understood their character, and denounced them and warned his disciples against them. They were filled with the intensest wrath against him, because he thus exposed them, and sought to destroy him. They conceived and executed the plot which ended in his death.

Such, in brief, are the salient features relating to the method and manner in which Jesus pursued his ministry among the Jewish people. It was a short ministry, not exceeding at the longest more than about three years and a half, and ending at last in a violent death; and yet it made a profound impression upon that age, and laid the basis for a permanent impression on the human race. No other teacher ever spake to man with so much power, and no other ever produced such lasting effects by what he said. Jesus still lives in the world's thought, as the great Teacher, and will so live to the end of time. The wisest men of earth have felt it a hallowed privilege to sit at his feet and learn of him. The more one studies his earthly life the more will he be impressed with the grandeur and glory of that life. One and but one such life was ever lived on earth; one and but one such Teacher ever appeared among men. We must recognize the divine element in the life of Jesus before we can explain that life.—Samuel T. Spear, D. D., in N. Y. Independent.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

How many efforts put forth to secure worldly ends and objects are lost. Even if the object earnestly desired and most earnestly pursued should be attained, it may turn out a worthless prize, or worse, a damaging possession. But nothing done for Christ is ever lost. If we have the costly box of ointment, we may pour it on his dear feet in token of our love. The cup of cold water given to a child of his does not escape his notice. The consecrating Spirit gave to the widow's mite its supreme value. The much or little that we do for Jesus will never be forgotten.

The "gall of bitterness" is a very bad corroding fluid to dip our pens into when writing to any one—especially to one of the same household of faith. Neither are we very likely to "work the righteousness of God," or edify our brother, by scraping our words in this fluid before we utter them. When we are "out of sorts" we better keep our paper blank and let our tongues rest.

LESSONS FROM MOSES AND THE PROPHETS.

The following article was written by G. R. Lederer, a learned Jew, a few years ago for the Israelite Indeed, of which he was Editor and Publisher. He gives us, in this article, among other things, the correct idea concerning the institution of the Seventh Day Sabbath, showing that it was an institution ordained only for Israel. As we have not the leisure just now to continue our own articles on the Sabbath question, we submit this selection to our readers instead of an article of our own.

The biblical Pentecost, or "Feast of the Weeks," occurred this year on Friday, the 10th day of June, being the fiftieth day from the morning of the Passover, or the second day of the feast of unleavened bread. The orthodox Jews continue to celebrate the traditional second day; consequently, Saturday, the 11th, was to them a double Sabbath. The reformed Jews, however, have done away with that rabbinic addition, which is often a source of inconvenience to all, and of oppressive expense to the poorer classes; and therefore Saturday was the usual weekly Sabbath. It is a source of inconvenience to all, because it deprives the Jew of either one day's labor or business more than required by the law of Moses, and it often happens that the feast comes off on Thursday, in which case they lose four days. Thursday and Friday is the feast, Saturday the weekly Sabbath, and Sunday, or the first day of the week, they must keep from pursuing their weekly avocations by the laws of the country in which they live, being the Christian Sabbath. To the poor, however, this additional feast becomes a double burden, for he loses not only a day in his business, but must expend more of his means than on any other ordinary day, as it is a part of the sanctification of a feast day to have a better table and to wear better clothes than on week days. Still, most pious Jews bear all these inconveniences with perfect resignation to the will of God—which they believe it is—and labor hard, for weeks before, in order to make the feast a really "good day."

The Mosaic lesson of the first day comprises the nineteenth and twentieth chapters of Exodus, which includes the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. Here is the conditional promise that if Israel will obey the commandments of Jehovah, and keep his covenant, they shall become a royal priesthood, and be the most beloved of all the nations of the earth. What a lesson should this be to Christians. Israel has, by disobedience, forfeited that glorious privilege of royal priesthood; they were broken off from the olive tree in order to make room for the wild branches of the Gentiles to be grafted in their place, purchased for them by the blood of Messiah, who in due time came, first to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. It was the intention of Jehovah to make the whole people of Israel a priesthood; and, had they not soon strayed from their God by the making and worshiping of the golden calf, the tribe of Levi would not have been separated as a special priestly tribe, but the first born of each family would have been the priest, the leader in the worship of Jehovah; no Tabernacle, no sacrifices would have been instituted, but the worship of God in spirit and in truth, which the Messiah afterward introduced, would have commenced then. For, by obedience Israel would have become a holy people, and such a people needed no bloody sacrifices. Israel, however, soon forgot the wonderful works which Jehovah had performed before their eyes in Egypt, on the Red Sea, and in the wilderness; the sound of the living word, spoken by Jehovah himself on Mount Sinai, had scarcely died away, when they came to Aaron and said: "Make us gods who shall go before us;" and the crown of royal priesthood was lost at once, and God chose one tribe, the same which did not participate in the worship of the idol of gold, and established a visible tabernacle and sacrifices amongst them. And, though God has, in answer to the supplication of his faithful servant Moses, forgiven them their great sin, yet he said: "but in the day of my visitation I will visit, or remember, to them their sins," that is, the sin of the golden calf. The ancient Hebrew commentators say this means, that, whenever God punishes Israel on account of their then current sins, that of the golden calf is brought into account. And, indeed, from henceforward Jehovah turned in compassion toward his chosen people whenever they cried for mercy, confessed their sins and repented; but they were not admitted to the royal priesthood until the antitype of Aaron, the true highpriest, Jesus Messiah, purchased back that which was lost at Horeb—the royal priestly crown. He purchased it, however, for individuals, and not for the nation, and at the same time opened the door for Gentiles to participate in the same glorious privilege, being grafted, by faith, into the olive tree of Israel.

Moses, introducing on this very day the dispensation of the law, could not but make obedience to the law, the condition by which the royal priesthood was to be obtained. "Cursed be the man who does not keep all the words of this law," said Moses, and, as no man ever kept the whole law, none could ever attain to that high station; Messiah, however, who, at his first coming, introduced the dispensation of grace and mercy, made faith the condition of obtaining eternal life, or the high station of royal priesthood in the Kingdom of God, when Messiah shall sit upon the throne of his father David, and when all the kingdoms of the earth shall have become his. Faith, then, Abraham's faith, is the condition; without faith in Christ and his proclamation there is no eternal life; and no royal priestly diadem will ever adorn the head of one who does not believe that Jesus is the Messiah. When Israel as a nation rejected their Messiah, they excluded themselves again, as at Horeb, from the royal priesthood as a nation, and were, therefore (as many as remained in unbelief), broken off the good olive tree, while, on the other hand, Gentiles who forsook their evil ways, believing in the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, were grafted in their place, partaking of the fatness and the sap of that goodly tree. But, remember the apostle's warning: "Boast not against the branches....for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee." That part of this lesson which contains the ten commandments has already been considered in a former volume of this magazine, and we shall only make one remark concerning the word "remember," with which the fourth, the command of the Sabbath, is introduced. It is a mistake, we think, of most theologians to infer, from the word "remember," that the keeping of the Sabbath was already commanded, known and observed by the patriarchs, from the days of creation. We believe that the sanctifying of the seventh day does not indicate a charge to the human race the keeping of it, but that God, by setting aside that day had a certain purpose in view, and that purpose became manifest in the wilderness, after the deliverance of Israel from the house of bondage. Here, first, it was commanded to keep that day, the Sabbath of the Lord, as a holy day, a day of rest. Now we know from the sacred record that Israel transgressed that command, to rest on the seventh day, when scarcely the sound of the lawgiver had died away, by going out for manna; upon which God said unto Moses: "How long will you refuse to keep my laws and my commands? Behold, Jehovah has given you the Sabbath, etc." This, we think, is a sufficient proof that this was the first ordinance of the Sabbath, and, when it was included in the "ten," the Lord introduced it with the word Remember, referring to the incident that happened a few weeks previously.

From this portion of the Scripture we learn also the doctrine of the necessity of a mediator between God and man. The people of Israel, who were assured that Jehovah would make them a nation of royal priests, a well-beloved nation above all others, having been prepared for three days, and sanctified, for the purpose of receiving the most holy law from the mouth of the Omnipotent, and, indeed, heard his voice, were, notwithstanding, afraid that they should die if the Lord should continue to speak to them. Therefore they said unto Moses: "Speak thou with us, and we will listen; but let not God speak to us, lest we die." Moses gave them two reasons for God's speaking to them directly; first, God came to try you, and secondly, that his fear might be upon you. This meant that God had shown them his fearful power and glory, that to approach him is death, which should convince them that the sinner needs a mediator, which they indeed felt, and they requested Moses to become their mediator, to stand between them and the fearful God.

We cannot conclude our observations on this lesson without mentioning the reason which the ancient Rabbies give for the command to build an altar of stone, without using iron tools (Ex. 22). They say the altar was created to sacrifice upon it for the forgiveness of sin, the wages of which is death; the altar, therefore, is for the prolongation of life; while iron, though very useful otherwise, it was created to shorten life; for all the implements of death are made of iron, and should therefore not be brought into close connection with the altar. This also, they say, is the reason why all the utensils of the temple and tabernacle were of gold, silver or brass, but none of iron except the knives, and those were used for putting to death the animal appointed for an offering.

The prophetic lesson consists in the most beautiful and most sublime vision of Ezekiel, the whole first chapter of that book. This lesson is not only appropriate for the occasion, and has a strong resemblance to that of Moses on Mount Sinai, but corroborates the vison of Daniel in the seventh chapter, and is therefore one of the strongest Messianic passages.

The prophet's description of the different classes of angels is most sublime, glorious, and yet fearful to behold. They stand around the throne of Jehovah, the sound of their wings when moving was like the roaring of the great waters, and as the voice of the Almighty; they carry a canopy upon their heads, upon which was the throne of glory. And whom did the Seer behold on that glorious throne? He saw a man, one in the form and likeness of a man. What, a man occupies the throne borne by Cherubim and Seraphim! Yes, it is the same Son of Man whom Daniel saw sitting on the throne, and to whom was given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages shall serve him, whose dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, which shall never pass away.

But there is a great difference between the vision of Ezekiel and that of Daniel, and the teachings of the spirit in both must not be understood as being for one and the same object. The former Prophet saw, in the vision now under consideration, the Son of Man, the Messiah, on the throne of his Father in heaven, where he now sits as our great high priest and mediator. Ezekiel makes no mention of dominion and power, nothing of an everlasting kingdom, and nothing of nations, peoples and languages that should serve him; but he saw Messiah as Stephen did, at the right hand of the Majesty On High. The latter, however, saw the Son of Man on the throne of his father David, on which he will sit at the time when power and dominion over all the peoples, nations and languages will be given unto him, and whom they all will serve forever, because there shall be no boundary of his empire on this globe. The sublime description of heavenly powers surrounding the throne and supporting it, the voices of their wings—like the roaring of the great waters—and the blinding brightness of him whom Ezekiel saw on the throne, are entirely omitted in the vision of Daniel, which proves that the glory of Messiah, when he shall ascend the throne of his father David, shall be of such a nature that mortal eyes will be able to look upon him, and the saints that shall then surround his throne and support it—not on their ascenders, like the angels in Ezekiel's vision, but with their cooperation in ruling the nations of the earth—shall not have that dazzling brightness which mortal eyes cannot behold, but shall be like other human beings, though glorified and invested with power to execute the decrees of the great King.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. J. C. Thomas.—No. 13.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii 42.

Again; by the two records in connection it can be shown that the supposed discrepancies between Matt. and Luke as to Joseph and Mary taking Jesus and fleeing into Egypt, and other apparent discrepancies disappear in the light of careful study and thought, and the fact that words and expressions often admit of different senses and construction. Instead of these little difficulties and seeming discrepancies invalidating the record; to my mind they afford proof of its genuineness; as they are evidences of the honesty, and absence of intended fraud by the writers of it, who had they been giving a false record, would have been careful to avoid any apparent conflictions or difficulties. But it be observed that the words "the Son," in Luke, are in italics, that is, they are not in the orginal.

Thus it will be seen, that instead of Matthew and Luke being as wide apart as the poles, we have a perfect argument, so far as necessary at least to prove and settle the genealogy of Jesus—that he was of the royal line, of the Tribe of Judah, of the house of David, through Solomon; and that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke, are not only in harmony with each other, but also with the entire Bible. John Cummings D. D., referring to the harmony of the two genealogies, on this point, says, "There is not a particle of contradiction between them."

However, astute minded Josephites have said and written that "the account given in the first two chapters of Matthew is a direct contradiction to all the rest of the Bible!" That was written before they rejected Luke's account also.

Then again they tell us that the prophecy, Isa. viii 14, which says, "Behold a virgin (hah-almah, which signifies 'the maiden, virgin, marriageable, but not married') shall conceive and bear a Son and shall call his name Immanuel;" does not apply to Mary and Jesus at all. But if they would look into it a little more carefully and thoroughly, and not be so ready to stumble and be offended at God's way and word, I think they would come to a different conclusion.

The prophecy begins with the seventh chapter and extends to the end of the ninth. By careful examination and study, it will be seen that it briefly refers to and includes events, and God's dealings with Israel from that time clear down to their still future, everlasting kingdom and national salvation.

Two very different and distinct "sons" are named, which represent two distinct features of God's dealings, and two different kinds of events.

Josephites make the great mistake of confounding these two sons—Immanuel the Son of the virgin, (the Son of God) and Maher-shalal-hash-baz, the son of "the prophetess," (the son of a man). These two sons were for two distinct "signs" or omens. The meaning of these two signs or omens, was signified by their names; the names being significant of the nature and character of the sons, and of the purposes of God. It is a fact well known to all Bible students that Names in the Scriptures are very significant, and that God frequently and in many instances, signified and made known his purposes, or at least indicated and foreshadowed them, by names. Such as the case of Cyrus, which signified one to fill a throne—one who was foretold and named in the purpose of God as a Cyrus, more than a century before he was born; raised up and chosen as one anointed of God to fill the throne of Persia, and to be "stirred up" of God to perform his purposes in the restoration of the children of Israel from the captivity of Babylon, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem; and who was evidently a significant type of Christ and his work yet future. See Isa. xliv. 28; Ezra i. 1; Jer. xxv. 12; etc. Such also is the case in the first chapter of Hosea, where the three names of three children—two sons and one daughter—named an God directed, indicated his purposes by the meaning or significance of the names, clear down through to the age to come; similar to the case under consideration.

This prophecy speaks sometimes of things and events of which one of the names is ominous, and sometimes of the things and events of which the other name is ominous. The circumstances of the time which gave occasion for these signs, were as follows: A hostile alliance—a "confederacy"—had been formed between Rezin the King of Syria and Pekah king of Israel, or Samaria—Ephraim—for the purpose of destroying Judah. And it was told to Ahaz king of Judah "saying Syria is confederate with Ephraim." And the heart of Ahaz and the hearts of his people were moved with fear. Then God sent his prophet Isaiah to say to Ahaz, "Take heed and be quiet, fear not, neither be faint-hearted because they have taken evil counsel against thee saying: let us go up against Judah." Subsequently, "the Lord spake again unto Ahaz saying, ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God." But Ahaz declined to ask a sign. He said, "the Lord himself shall give you a sign; behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel." "(Behold this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a SIGN which shall be spoken against." Luke ii. 34).

The Josephites defiantly ask "how could this be a sign to Ahaz, if it applies to Christ and his birth, and the virgin Mary?"

I answer as before intimated that the sign consisted in the name IMMANUEL—GOD WITH US. It was evidently intended as a plain sign and declaration of the reason why Ahaz and his people should "take heed, be quiet and fear not." It was given to enable them to understand that God was over with his people, to protect them, if they would trust in him and be obedient. It was given as a remarkable sign and pledge of that fact. It seems evident that the reason God proposed and finally gave them a sign, was, that he desired to make use of the perilous circumstances then surrounding the house of David, to give them a sign and prophecy of a wider scope and application than their present troubles and perils—a guarantee of protection and deliverance, not only from the perils of the moment, but that should also be seen and recognised by them as a pledge for the future—all time to come. It consisted in the wonderful revelation and declaration that the Jehovah Power, signified by the name of the promised Son of the virgin—"Immanuel"—the Power of the Highest—(by which, they were even then to be protected from their immediate danger, from the confederacy just formed) was eventually to be manifested in a descendant of that very house of David then in peril—that God would manifest himself in flesh—in a "Son of David according to the flesh"—who should be called JESUS, (after his FATHER, "the name above every name," Phil. ii. 9, by "inheritance," Heb. i. 4) "Savior"—I shall be the powerful; or, IMMANUEL—"God with us;" and that he should be conceived in a virgin by the "Power of the Highest," the very Power then protecting them. In other words, that name signified that Ahaz and his people need not have any fears as to the confederacy, because the house of David cannot be crushed, or destroyed by the alliance of Syria and Ephraim; for a virgin of that house, is, in the future, to conceive and bear a son, Immanuel, who is to protect and save his people, and ultimately to crush the serpent's head; according to the original promise, as to "the seed of the woman." And the virgin is to conceive by the Power of the Highest, the same Jehovah Power, that will now protect the house of David in their present perilous situation. Hence, now that the Lord has made known his purpose as to Judah, and given the virgin [illegible] first born," [illegible] ted into dust. In the [illegible] days of evil are brought to view; even the land of Judah should be overrun by Assyria, and so depopulated that there would be an abundance of good living for the few survivors. "He shall pass through Judah; he will overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck, and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O IMMANUEL," Chap. viii. 8.

Then the prophecy brings to view the confederacy of the nations even yet in the future, as in Joel iii. 9–11. "Associate yourselves, O, ye people, it shall not stand, for GOD IS WITH US." Chap. viii. 9, 10.

Here we see the wonderful ominous memorial Name (I shall be the Powerful, or God with us. See Diaglott Matt. i. 21–23, Notes) which was given for a "sign," and which was to be manifested by supernatural begettal and birth of of Jesus Messiah, in distinctly connected with the ultimate triumph of Israel over all hostile alliances and enemies. The prophet is therefore also warned (chap. viii. 11–13, etc.,) not to participate in the prevailing fear and alarm among the people; but to "set apart Jehovah of Hosts himself; (Dr. Young) and let Him be your fear, and let him be your dread."

Then the prophecy distinctly brings to view the days of Christ, the embodiment of the name, the personage represented by the sign-name; showing that he was at first to be "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence, to both houses of Israel, for a gin and a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;" the occasion of the greatest calamity that ever befel the Nation; their terrible fall, destruction and dispersion; because of their rejection of Christ, and their disobedience. That "many among them would stumble, and fall and be broken, and be snared, and be taken." ("They stumbled at that stumbling stone." Rom. ix. 32. "They fell upon that stone and were broken.") That Jehovah would "hide his face from them," after their rejection and crucifixion of his Son, by whose death the promises were to be confirmed. Also bringing to view the "disciples," or Christ's Brethren, who were also to be signs in Israel; by their miracles, and their "testimony" to be "sealed" and established as the new law, or covenant subsequent to Christ's death, resurrection and departure to the presence of the Father. "Behold I and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for signs." Chap. viii. 14–18.

Then followed the long dark centuries of desolation, and "great tribulation," Jehovah having cast them out of his sight and hidden his face from them, during the times of the Gentiles. "The people that walked in darkness, (the Gentiles) were to see a great light;" chap. ix. 2, and Matt. iv. 16; all finally culminating in the promised recognition and regathering of the scattered nation, and their still future supernatural deliverance and protection from the power of the confederate nations and all their enemies, and the restoration of the kingdom of Israel. "For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be with burning fuel with fire. For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder" etc., as before quoted. Chap. ix. 5, 6.

Then the prophecy reverts again to Ephraim and Syria and their kings, with which it commenced, bringing to view several things I have not room to notice, and thus showing it to be the same prophecy of the wide and comprehensive scope here set forth.

But I now come to a brief consideration of another feature of this prophecy; the other son and sign-name, which is introduced by a "moreover," (Chap. viii. 1.)—Mahershalalhashbaz, which signifies, "in making speed to the spoil he hasteneth to the prey." While the other son and name, Immanuel, were for a sign of wonderful things and events, and a distinct omen or token of Divine protection, immediate and continual, all the way through, upon the condition of obedience, clear down to the consummation of Jehovah's purpose, as before shown. This son and name, Mahershalalhashbaz—"in making speed to the spoil, he hasteneth to the prey," distinctly betokens evil, calamity, war, rapine and ruin. His birth guaranteed ruin and destruction upon Ephraim and Syria, who had formed an alliance against Judah. The other was to be a child of the Spirit, this a child of the flesh, a pledge of evil and calamity, first against Judah's enemies, then against Judah for disobedience, afterwards to be turned back from the house of David by Immanuel.

This prophecy like many others, contains abrupt and alternate changes,

The author has [illegible] book for they were [illegible]. If you want to [illegible] or more in missionary work, or for a gift [illegible] we will send them for only

THIRTY CENTS EACH.

"Swift to hear" the gracious voice,
"Swift to hear" the Shepherd's bidding,
While, maybe, the careless feet
Are transgression's maze is threading.
"Swift to hear" the cry for help,
Coming from a brother weeping;
"Swift to hear" the cry for light,
Coming from the earnest seeker,
Lord, may I, with open ears,
List attentive to thy calling;
So may I through coming years,
By thy word be kept from falling.

"Slow to speak" the angry word,
Thus the Holy Spirit grieving;
"Slow to speak" the foolish jest,
All the words of folly leaving;
"Slow to speak" the idle tale,
"Slow to speak" the vile detraction
That may sully some one's name,
Blight and pare though be his action.
Lord, help me speak words of grace,
Golden words so fitly spoken,
To the weary, words in time,
Purest words of heart the token.

"Slow to wrath" when sorely tried,
Scorned, insulted, bruised, and blighted—
Hear and forbear, Christ has died
All the ills of life to sweeten.
When revilled, revilled he not;
Suffering long, yet not redressing—
Leaving an example bright—
For the curses, giving blessing.
Lord, help me to cherish aught
Of wrath, or vengeance, or ill feeling;
"Swift to hear" and "slow to speak,"
In all acts thy truth revealing.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

What changes are ever happening in life, and ever also impending! During a five years absence from my old home in western New York, I think perhaps two hundred persons died, that I had formerly known. At all events the number was wonderful. I have sometimes stood in this Westfield Post Office, and watched the throng of people coming and going, at the time of distributing of evening mail, and I reflected that if an army were marching past me, four abreast, day and night, it would represent the interminable procession of human kind passing forever from the cradle to the grave. I might watch the never-pausing progress for fifty years, and not one of those flitting faces would I ever read a second time. Just thus are the born millions of this sun-lighted earth ever tramping, tramping, on to the goal of the tomb.

And of ninety thousand die each twenty-four hours, and for every one dead there are only five mourners—then each successive day, there are about half a million weeping and newly bereaved sorrowing friends. Every day, that half million is succeeded by another mighty congregation of equal magnitude, and in a week, more than three millions stand tearful around the new made graves of their friends. This estimate is only upon the minimum reckoning of five bereaved. Whereas, it might be put at twice that number. And the earth rolls on, while the spades of them that dig in her bosom for places where the dead may rest, are busy in every quarter from Norway to Cafire-land, and from Wales in England, to the other Wales in Australia. We have read, the time is coming when the earth shall have a spasm of expulsive force, when she shall develop an irresistible inward energy, and "cast out her dead." She will be satiated with interments. She will be all ready to respond to the voice that speaks from the upper place of dominion, having the same effectual power of working, as in the case of the Divine Nazarene who called Lazarus. Thus far, for nearly thirty times two hundred years, the earth has been constantly receptive of the strange consignments; slowly and rarely at first, but with rapidity increasing, until at every average breath of a full grown man, four of his fellows have ceased to breathe. The earth is still yet receiving her deposits of exanimate dust, but the time is near, doubtless, when the order will be strangely reversed.

Death has lately claimed an esteemed personal friend, and an excellent Christian woman,—Mrs. Mary Weisgerber, of Buchanan, Michigan. Among the many whom we transfer from our list of living, to the column of departed friends, there is now and then one, at whose death we pause, and say, "this is an affliction, and by so much the world is poorer." And so I may truly say of the beloved Christian woman, who died quietly at her own home, May 8, after a painful illness of nine weeks, leaving behind in sadness and tears, an affectionate husband and daughter, and many regretful and appreciative Christian friends. How shall I recount her virtues? Coming to her house for the first time, nigh a year ago, I was so simply and generously welcomed, that I felt immediately at home, and she has ever since seemed by loving like one whom we have known for half a lifetime, a new acquaintance thus taking the beauty and strength of an old and precious friendship. Providentially she [illegible] the social, sympa- [illegible], reasoning, genuine, generous, truth-loving qualities, that long leave their savor of sweetness behind, and all the more when there has come the absence, the silence, the vacancy caused by death. How she enjoyed New England air and scenery! With what zeal she re-visited the land and country of her early girl-life! And as we bade her adieu at the station, little did we think that she would so soon fall under the power of fatal disease, sading in death. Recalling a visit to the old Westfield cemetery, (and her diligent prolonged scrutiny of old head stones with nearly vanished inscriptions, one dating back to 1683) she wrote, "I often think of our ramble through the silent city of the dead. There is something about a cemetery that makes one feel chilly, even in the warmest day, but for those who have a good hope for a better world beyond, the resting place of the dead loses most of the dread connected with it. I am looking forward to a glorious time in the future—where there are no more tears, and former things shall not be remembered nor brought to mind. What a glorious day when we can meet in unbroken families, and enjoy life and love forever! How it would rejoice my heart to see people turn from their evil ways, and seek the Lord with full purpose of heart." Again she says' "our good Father is in deed and truth good to the children of earth,"—and referring to our enclosed "Christmas gift," she says—"What we have to spare, is not ours,—it belongs to a loving Father, the giver of every good gift. What a mere trifle will dethrone us, and as we are laid away, whose then, shall all these things be? We have a world of things to be thankful for."

Such was the language of a heart in which dwelt the loving, gracious, unselfish spirit of Christian love and consecration. As the end drew near, she many times exclaimed, "I am so happy." To Mrs. B. a friend, who was in tears—her senior in years, she said, "mother, don't cry; I am so happy." And again, "I have just one more river to cross; it will soon be over." She said in substance to her sister, when she was about to retire to rest for the night, that while she would rest on an earthly couch—she, Mrs. W. was going where no bed for repose would be needed, and bade her good night.

Thanks that the dear sister's wish was granted, and the prayers of her loving friends answered, in that her intellect was so unclouded, and that she died without struggle or pain.

I have seldom written an obituary column, but in this case, there was such a symmetry of Christian character, and such conscientious and loyal sense of stewardship for Christ, such characteristic desire to be good, such a recognition of the briefness and greatness of opportunity, such a noble interest in the welfare of others, such consideration, and charity, that I am unwilling to have unmarked by others the shining example of her excellence.

While believing earnestly in the boundless goodness and benevolence of God, and joyful in anticipation of the magnitude and majesty of coming restitution, she felt in her own heart the impulse and power of that Divine gentleness and sympathy that led her to think and act kindly to others. Here was faith working by love. Social, domestic, sympathetic, reflective, practical, a lover of good, and loving to do good, and nobly considerate of the honor and opportunity of making the world better for living in it. She seems to me one of those estimable women whose monument is a useful, Godly life, is greater than any monument of marble can be, and of whom it may be said, without an atom of exaggeration "the memory of the just is blessed." She quietly, thoughtfully, selected the pall-bearers, and singers for the funeral occasion, selected the text, and the preacher, and then "wrapping the drapery of her couch about her" and leaning her head in repose on the blessed arm of omnipotence, closed her eyes on this transient earthly scene.

THE MAN OF SIN.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness has been delivering a course of lectures on this subject in Exeter Hall in London. The lecturer has created a powerful impression. He has shown with great clearness how the line of Popes sitting on the throne of the Cæsars, whom they succeeded, answers to the dreadful prediction of Paul concerning "that wicked one," who was to arise and develop, and finally be destroyed by the brightness of the second coming of Christ. We quote from the London Christian.

In the fourth century, with the fall of Paganism, began the Imperial Christianity; in the fifth and sixth centuries sprang up the Papacy. The seat of sovereignty was removed from Rome to Constantinople. Then, slowly, on the ruins of old Imperial Rome, rose another monarchy of loftier aspirations, and more resistless might, claiming dominion, not only over the bodies, but over the consciences and souls of men—dominion not only within the limits of the fallen empire, but throughout the entire world. Higher and higher rose the Papacy, till, in the dark ages, all Christendom was subject to its sway. Of this several proofs were given from a Roman Catholic work by Gosselin on the power of the Pope:

Popes crowned and uncrowned. They usurped supreme authority in the double realm of things temporal and things spiritual; they commanded; if any resisted, they waged war; they excommunicated; their anathemas fell like a deadly blight; their excommunication was as a terrific storm sweeping over a nation, a destructive tempest of thunder and lightning; kings bowed before its might: sceptres were broken, and crowns were crushed and scattered. Our own King John, after vainly raging against the Papal curse, was compelled to humble himself before the awful Pontiff who had deprived the country of all its spiritual privileges; who denied to its living the rites of religion, and to its dead the rites of sepulture; who shut against it the kingdom of heaven, and let loose upon it the artillery of hell.

A passage followed descriptive of the glory with which the Pope surrounds himself, and the rights which he assumes:—

He never rises from his pontifical throne to any persons whomsoever, nor uncovers himself to any; nor does he ever condescend to honor any by the least inclination of his head. He wears the keys as the sign of his power to open the gates of heaven to all believers. He holds two swords as judging in things temporal and spiritual. He is the husband of the Church, and as such wears a ring indicating her perpetual betrothal to himself. Thousands upon thousands kneel before him, they struggle to get near his person, they stretch forth their hands to obtain his indulgences, and gorge down his benedictions. With the tiara upon his head, he gives the people his heavenly benediction; the deluded people rend the air with acclamations.

Then we come to that incredible spectacle witnessed at the Vatican in 1870, when the decree of Infallibility was agreed to by 700 bishops from all parts of the earth, the representatives of more than thirty nations and of two hundred millions of Christians. They confessed and professed the twelve articles which Rome has added to the ancient Nicene Creed, and swore adhesion to them:—

O creed of Pius—or Impius, as he deserved rather to be called—thou art a millstone round the neck of the Roman Pontiff, of the College of Cardinals, of the archbishops, the bishops, the priests, the people, of the whole Papal Church; a mighty millstone that must sink them in destruction and perdition. There is no shaking thee off. Alas! they have doomed themselves to wear thee; Rome's last word is spoken. Her fate is fixed—by her own action, her own utterance, her own oath. Individuals may escape, may flee the system, but as a Church it is past recovery, and utterly beyond the reach of reformation. O that thousands might escape from it while yet there is time! O that they would wake from this blind and abject submission to the tyranny of hypocrites!

Mr. Guinness, in conclusion, quoted the Usurline Manual as showing that, in the confessional, every priest sits as an image of the Pope, his master, with the secret consciences of men and women beneath his feet; yea, as though he were God. This manual says distinctly: "Confessors should not be viewed in any other light than.....as holding the place of Jesus Christ." In the volume of the laws and secret constitution of the Jesuits, it is also laid down that the superior, whoever he may be, must be recognized, reverenced, and submitted to with perfect and complete subjection of act and thought, as occupying the place of Jesus Christ. Putting into a dozen sentences as many damning facts about the Papacy—in one of which reference was made to the fact that a medal was struck by the Pope to commemorate the massacre of St. Bartholomew—Mr. Guinness, in closing, uttered these words: "A fulfilment of prophecy, so detailed, so dreadful, so complete, a fulfilment his rical, geographical, chronological, political, ecclesiastical, religious, stamps the Papacy as the dark and bloodstained power foretold, and stamps the wondrous Book which has foretold it as the Word of the living God."—The Watchword.

FRUIT CULTURE IN PALESTINE.

It is remarkable that even in a dead country like Palestine one of the most interesting features should be the cultivation of fruit; we ought rather to say the growth of fruit, for the scientific cultivation of fruit does not exist. The vast orange groves at Jaffa are, always attractive, and so likewise are the thousands of olive trees scattered everywhere upon the hill sides and plains.

The natives divide the kinds of olives raised into the "black," the "white," the "large," and the "small." To the eye there is no difference in trees, and perhaps not more than one in a thousand will produce what are called the the "large olives." Likewise very few "small olives" are raised. The production is confined chiefly to what are termed the "white" olives, which are really green, and the "black," which are very dark purple. These two kinds are considered by far the best.

Olive trees are produced from the stem of the wild olive trees which are raised for the purpose. Planted about thirty feet apart, grafted at the age of eight or ten years, they begin to bear three or four years later. The usual period is from ten to fourteen years from the time the wild olive tree starts from the ground before any fruit is produced. Olive trees are of very slow growth. The land between the young trees is always cultivated, and care is taken to place the roots deep enough not to be molested by the plough. Were they watered their growth would be more rapid, but the farmers are too poor to expend money in irrigating an olive orchard.

It is not possible to say how long an olive tree will continue bearing, nor is it possible to determine the age of these trees. The tradition in Jerusalem is that some of the oldest trees there date from the time of the Romans. It is not probable that there is any foundation in fact for this tradition.

It is a curious fact that the Palestine olive trees bear a good crop every other year. The reason for this is not in the nature of the trees themselves but is due wholly to the method of gathering the fruit. The olives grow on the tiny twigs which sprouted the year previous. To gather the fruit the trees are beaten, which destroys most of the tender twigs of that year, consequently the next year there is only a small crop of olives. Then they are not beaten, hence the young twigs get a start, and the following year produce a heavy crop. Were proper care taken a good crop might be produced every year. The reader may wonder why they do not change their method of gathering the olives. If they did so they would cease to be Arabs.

Olive trees in the valleys and on the plains produce the largest quantity of fruit, while those in the mountains produce the most oil and that which is of the finest quality. Every traveller in that country has seen earth and stones piled up about the roots or trunks of olive trees, and the reason is that in many cases the earth has fallen away and these terraces of stone and earth have to be built to protect the roots from the effects of the sun, otherwise they would be injured or ruined during the long summers.

The "green olives" always remain green. They are gathered just before they are fully ripe, otherwise they would be too soft for use. The "black" or purple olives remain on the trees until they are nearly ripe, when they are gathered, put into baskets with salt, and subjected to a slight pressure. After three or four days they are removed from the basket and put into earthen jars or wooden barrels without the addition of salt, water, or anything, in which state it is supposed that they will keep for an indefinite period.

Olives that are designed for oil are left on the trees longer and gathered only when fully ripe by being beaten off as explained above. After remaining in heaps for twenty or thirty days they become soft, when they are crushed in great stone mills, and afterwards subjected to heavy pressure, being first placed in large straw baskets, through which the oil is strained as the pressure is applied.

When the yield of an olive tree is two measures it is considered a small tree. A medium-sized tree produces six, or perhaps eight measures, and a larger tree twelve measures of fruit. A measure roughly estimated, is about twenty-four pounds. The yield of an olive orchard is never reckoned by the acre. One measure of olives produce about three-fourths of a gallon of oil. The oil is taken from the presses in the field or country, put into skins and carried to the large towns, sold to oil merchants who store it in large cisterns and sell it at their convenience. Most of the Syrian oil is shipped to France, where it is mixed, adulterated, and at last sent into the markets of the world as genuine French olive oil. —Selah Merrill, LL.D., late U. S. Consul at Jerusalem.

Youth's Column.

Forbearance.

If we knew the secret anguish
Borne by those we censure now,
Our reproach would change to pity,
And our hearts in sorrow bow.

Oh, the little while we linger
Where all suffer and all die,
Let us be one with one another,
Let us pass each weakness by.

Death is just beyond us waiting,
We've no time for anger here—
Only time to sow and garner
Loving thoughts and words of cheer.

Shining Christians.

A friend told me that he was visiting a light-house lately, and said to the keeper, "Are you not afraid to live here? It is a dreadful place to be in constantly."

"No," replied the man, "I am not afraid. We never think of ourselves here."

"Never think of yourselves! How is that?"

"We know we are perfectly safe, and only think of having our lamps burning brightly, and keeping the reflectors clear that those in danger may be saved."

Christians are safe in a house built on a Rock which cannot be moved by the wildest storm, and in a spirit of holy unselfishness they should let their light gleam across the dark waves of sin, that imperilled ones may be guided into the harbor of heaven.

Dear Children:

Money has purchased you some pretty garment this spring, which with pleasing delight you have put on. A new straw hat decked with costly ribbon, feathers or flowers encircles your youthful brow, and perhaps a pearl, steel, or gilt hat pin may embellish it. Your plump little hands may be covered with kid gloves, and your feet wear a goodly appearance in a pair of kid or leather shoes.

It is my desire to enhance the real value of these things by upholding to your young minds the immense labor that has been expended on each article. Have you ever considered that the beautiful straw hat, or bonnet, was once little grains, which the farmer sowed in his field? requiring the sun, rain and dew to ripen it; then it had to be reaped, gathered and threshed, passing through a number of hands before it was separated for the factory's use, or made fit for weaving.

Now let us ponder a little. From whence came the material from which the beautiful ribbon was constructed? Can it be possible that the busy little silk worm has toiled many days to spin costly silk to adorn my bonnet? If I am robed in a silk dress must I thank the worm for this rich clothing? A short life is allotted it, and did it spend its life in toiling and spinning to make me look beautiful? After the worm has accomplished its work, think of those who have to color the silk, and the weaver's hands through which it has to pass, and perhaps a designer's brain has been employed in working out a pattern to add to its loveliness.

Must the sweet melody of some handsome bird be hushed, and it be stripped of its feathers and wings, that my desires may be gratified? Has the hunter been sent to distant lands in search of the bird which the Scriptures declare is void of wisdom, that those who possess the greatest wealth may adorn themselves in what a bird of flight once wore?

Has the diver risked his precious life in search of a pearl or gem which lies in the bed of the ocean, or deepest cave? And after the treasure is gained, how many hands it has to pass through to increase its lustre. If steel, or gilt, the very bowels of the earth had to be excavated to produce the ore before melted, brought into form and polished.

Perhaps a little lamb, or sheep once wore your gay dress, or the material from which it was spun. Think of the toilers who have worked early and late to produce your clothing. The cotton fields had to be sown and reaped to prepare your first garment. A skipping, sporting, joyous little lamb, or goat had to be slain to cover your hands with neatly fitting kid gloves or shoes. A calf, or cow once wore the leather from which your nice shoes were made. O, how paltry! how mean! how contemptible! money seems to give in exchange for such an expenditure of time, labor and risk of life.

Children beloved, look at everything you wear, and seek to find from whence it was derived, then you will never waste what you cannot make. Everything you see on the dining table, in the parlor, or any where else, inquire from some one, how it was obtained. This practice will lead you to study and gather most pleasing instruction from the simplest thing.

Your affectionate Teacher,
E. COFFMAN.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God will convene at Dutton, Kent Co. Mich., Friday, June 17, and last over the following Sunday, the Lord willing, in connection with the dedication of the new church. Bro. R. S. Dwiggins of Indiana, will be with us during the Conference, also other preaching brethren. We cordially invite, and expect a general rally of God's children present. Come, brethren, come and come praying, for we cannot expect God's blessings unless we ask for them. A few more reunions under Satan's rule, and then, O brethren, Christ's welcome smiles, when we can see the King in his beauty, when the cross shall be exchanged for the crown of victory, where the pearly gates will stand ajar for the faithful, pass through upon the golden streets of the new Jerusalem, and along the river of life, among the everdying flowers of Paradise. Then my brethren, my sisters, be faithful to the cause a little longer, and your cares and labors lay aside, and let us at the Conference meet and humbly bow at Jesus' feet, and by the strength that he will impart, change the vilest sinner's heart.

K. N. WOODWARD, Sec.

Publisher's Notes.

Any one knowing the present address of John Baylor, who used to live at Willow Point, Texas, will confer a favor on me by sending it to this office.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A tract of true will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

WHO IS WAITING FOR THE KING?

"Who is waiting for the Kingdom?
Who is waiting for the King?"
Is it you, O careless worldling?
Are you going home to sing?
Are you going home to sing?

Are you ready now to meet him,
Going forth your Lord to greet?
Would you lay your gathered trophies,
Gladly at the Master's feet?
Gladly at the Master's feet?

Would you enter Golden City,
Canaan's heights and Jesus see?
Now, oh now, your follies leaving,
To the Christ for refuge flee!
To the Christ for refuge flee!

To the Church of God in Christ Jesus Greeting.

"This generation shall not pass away till all these things be accomplished." Matt. xxiv. 34

This text has been foundled deceitfully by skeptics, and sadly misapplied by superficial thinkers, especially within the last half of the present century. Skeptics tauntingly say, "That generation has long since passed away, but many of the things here referred to have not been fulfilled." Therefore say they, "It is a false assertion and so in keeping with much else in that book you hold so sacred and reliable." The superficial reader places the beginning of that generation in 1780 when the sun was darkened though not by eclipse. They say that some who were then alive and witnessed that phenomenon in the heavens are still living, and hence all that generation has not passed away, and that some, however few they may be, will still be found living of that generation who shall witness the personal coming of our Lord to earth. I invite the reader to a brief study of this subject in the hope of shedding the light of Scripture harmony upon that which may have seemed absurd through false teaching.

The word genea," here translated generation, has most frequently the sense of race, nation or people; e. g., in Luke xvii. 25 we read, "But first must he suffer many things and be rejected of this generation." In this text we know that the word generation refers to the Hebrew race, as it was to them, that Christ came as their Messiah and they rejected him. The Gentile nations living at that time did not reject the Christ for he did not come to them. But he did come to the Jews. Again in Luke xi. 45-52, where the Master is rebuking the lawyers of his own nation for their wickedness. He tells them that the blood of the prophets shed by their fathers, will be required of that generation. Acts viii. 33. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: his generation who shall declare. Here Philip gave to the Eunuch the history of Jesus as the promised Messiah of the Jewish nation. Heb. iii. 10. "Wherefore I was displeased with this generation." This is spoken of the children of Israel soon after their deliverance from Egypt, when God constituted them his nation, his peculiar people. These few examples out of the very many that might be given will suffice to show how the word generation is used in the Scriptures.

By looking back to the end of Matt. xxii. and all through xxiii., we find that Jesus was talking to the learned of his own nation. He strongly denounced their hypocrisy and showed to them that they admitted that they were the children of those who slew the prophets of old, and he told them of the retributive justice that awaited them when he said, "Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation." Then in most pathetic language he lamented over their chosen city, and declared that as they had persistently refused to acknowledge him as their Messiah; their house, i. e., their temple, "is left desolate," and closes his address with the prediction, "Ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Now we know that all who then heard those words from our Lord have for centuries been sleeping in the dust of earth. The continuous cycles of the ages have laid them all low; but the race, the Jews, are here yet, and they will remain until by and by, they will acknowledge him who they then rejected. Matt. xxiv. The disciples no doubt heard this prediction against their nation, city and temple, and apparently inclined to doubt the possibility of so massive a building as the temple ever being left desolate they call our Lord's attention to its wonderful structure, when he replied, "Not one stone shall be left upon another that shall not be thrown down." This seemed to settle the matter in their minds, and our Lord went on to tell them of the deceptions that would be practiced, and of the tribulation that would come upon their own nation, for their disobedience to Jehovah, their abuse of his holy prophets, and last of all for the rejection of him, his well beloved Son. Jesus knew their thoughts, (for we read that he knew what was in man) and no doubt he knew that the thought came to them, "Surely this nation, our nation, will be utterly blotted out as other nations have been, by the avenging hand of Jehovah," and therefore he said to them in verse 34, this generation, this nation, race, or people, shall not pass away, shall not be extirpated from the face of the earth, till all these things be accomplished. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. The ruling powers of earth and all things subordinate to or dependent on them shall vanish away, but my words, the words relating to me proclaimed by my Father through his inspired messengers, "shall not pass away." The angel said to Mary concerning her son, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 33.

Daniel saw in the night vision one like the Son of man, the son of David. He came with the clouds of heaven and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all peoples, nations and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed Dan. vii. In Ezek. xxxvii. Jehovah, by the mouth of his holy prophet, speaks great and marvelous things of "this generation" or race. He sees them scattered as the dust, in all the nations of earth, buried as a nation, neither possessed of national life, or power. Yet he calls them forth from their graves, their hiding places, and causes life to enter into them so that they arise and live, as a nation. Israel and Judah will then be united, and they shall dwell in the land covenanted to their fathers, and David, that is the son of David, "shall be their prince forever." And so it is written of them. of God's chosen people, "This generation," people or race shall not pass away until all that Jehovah hath said concerning them, will have been fulfilled. Amen.

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

FULLER.—At Mendon, St. Joseph Co., Mich., May 4, 1887, David Fuller, aged 74 years, 11 months and 18 days.

The cause of Brother Fuller's death was heart disease. He was born in Erie Co., N. Y., May 16, 1812. In 1839 he was married to Mary A Whaley who now mourns his loss. They lived in Livingston Co., N. Y., five years. In 1844 they settled in the town of Bedford, Wayne Co., Mich. Here they lived for a year and a half and then moved to Mendon, St. Joseph Co., Mich., where they lived until his death. Brother Fuller was baptized by Elder E. Miller sixteen years ago and has ever since lived a consistent Christian life. He was esteemed and respected by all who knew him. Soon after his baptism he was chosen deacon of the Mendon Church of the Abrahamic Faith, which position he held at the time of his death. The church has sustained an irreparable loss. But we sorrow not as others who have no hope. He died in the full hope of the soon coming of our Blessed Savior to raise him and all them that are looking and waiting for his appearing to an immortal life. He leaves a wife, daughter and son, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. The writer spoke words of comfort to a large circle of friends and relatives at his late residence from that portion of the Scripture found in 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. The body was interred in the Dutton cemetery, where it now rests awaiting the coming of the blessed Master to restore it to life eternal.

LYMAN H. CHERRINGTON.

EHMELMAN.—At Canton, Ohio, May 11, 1887, Henry Ehmelman, of heart disease, aged 70 years.

Brother Ehmelman served the Lord many years, having been a reader of THE RESTITUTION from its beginning, away back under its various names, from The Voice of Truth, Editor Jos. Marsh, until the present time. His walk and conduct always being that of a consistent Christian. Though not a public speaker, in conversation he could convey his ideas very clearly, which he did so that all who knew him knew what he believed, and while they may not always have agreed with him in his views, they all had great respect for him and bore testimony to his sterling worth, many remarking at the funeral that if there were any worthy, upright, Christian men, he was one. His sufferings were quite severe for a long time, and as there seemed no probability of his recovery he felt quite willing, rather longing, to fall asleep in Jesus, having on three different occasions bid farewell to his dear ones, expecting to see them no more till Jesus should come and raise the dead incorruptible, and change the living. He at last fell asleep in full assurance of faith; no doubt darkened his mind. He fully believed that what God had promised he would surely perform. We laid him away in the beautiful cemetery at Canton to await the voice of the Archangel and the Trump of God.

His family could not all be present at his death, being so widely scattered over the country. One, Brother J. F. Ehelman, residing in Seattle, W. T.; he, however, came all the way from there but a few weeks ago to bid his father a last farewell, but was obliged to return. The readers of THE RESTITUTION will remember his name as also Brother A. D. Ehelman's, as they did often appear in its pages. I would like to see them more often now. Many will also remember Good Tidings, a very good little paper, published by A. D., assisted by Sister Anna. Brother A. D. occupies the homestead with his sister—wife and his widowed mother; all are in the faith and active, live members. Sister Anna is wife to our beloved Brother Geo. W. Young, of Brooklyn, N. Y., both of whom are known to your readers; she had been home several days assisting the other members of the family in making the dying bed of her father as soft as downy pillows are.

The funeral was very largely attended and a long procession followed to the grave. The writer of this addressed the people, showing that while death does now and long has reigned over all, yet the time is coming when the reign of death will end, for the Lord will come and take the kingdom and reign till all enemies are destroyed including death. May that time soon come is the sincere desire of your brother,

GEO. ELDON.

CARY.—Near Glasco, Cloud County, Kansas, at eight o'clock, a. m. Friday, April 29, 1887, Cynthia, wife of Liston D. Cary, aged 30 years and 27 days.

Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church the following Sunday, conducted by Elder H. E. Ballou, who addressed one of the largest and most sympathizing gatherings ever held in Glasco.

The subject of this notice was born April 2, 1857, near New Chambersburg, Columbiana County, Ohio, and reared on her father's farm.

She was the only child born to Henry and Margaretta (nee Edwards) Messimore, and on her mother's side a blood relative of the world renowned traveller and poet, Bayard Taylor.

Her paternal ancestors were of German descent, she being the sixth generation from ——— Messimore who came to this country in the early part of the seventeenth century and settled in York county, Pennsylvania. Her maternal ancestors came from England, she being the fifth generation from John Edwards who came to the New World in the middle of the seventeenth century and settled in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Her parents emigrated to Kosciusko County, Indiana, March 30, 1864.

She attended "Pleasant Hill College" during 1872 at Warsaw, Indiana, and in the Fall of 1873 entered the "National Normal University," Lebanon, O., to complete her education, where she graduated in the famous class of 1875, with high honors.

Her subject, "American Literature" was delivered August 19th in Washington Hall and pronounced by good judges the best in the class.

She attended the "Warsaw Conservatory of Music" at Warsaw, Indiana, in 1876 and 1876, after which she remained at home until her marriage to the writer, Sunday, January 14, 1877, at her parent's home. Elder S. A. Chaplin officiating. The next day they started for their distant home in Cherokee, Iowa.

In the Fall of 1878, she, with her parents and the writer, settled in Lyon township, Cloud County, Kansas, their present home.

Under the influence of Christian parents she became an earnest Christian in early life, and for years contributed to various religious papers and periodicals and maintained her allegiance to Christ unto the end of her probation.

She was baptized (immersed) at Lebanon, Ohio, in March, 1874.

She united with the "Advent Christian" church, Cherokee, Iowa, in February, 1877, under the pastorship of Elder John Ridley and was a bright and shining light in the church.

She was always a devoted, earnest, genial, liberal, peace making and zealous Christian; an exemplary woman, a loving wife and mother. She believed and advocated the mortality of man, or life in Christ; the immediate personal coming of Christ to reign on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

She was the mother of two small children, Mabel nine, and Luther seven years of age, who deeply mourn their loss. May God bless these dear little motherless children and help their sorrowing father to keep them together and bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

She rests from the anxious, wearisome toils of this bitter life in the dark and silent house of the dead, where no pang can disturb her or poisonous dart reach her.

Her quiet and peaceful slumber can only be broken by the trumpet of God, which will call the dead to life, and praise the Lord, it will be the same precious one that died and was buried, made alive again, and changed to immortality to die no more. In other words, it will be "CYNTHIA CARY" clothed upon with immortality.

This is the "Blessed Hope" of the Bible and it alone sustains in the hour of bereavement, without it death would be an eternal sleep. Over ten eventful years have passed between the day of marriage and day of burial. These have been years of happy Christian enjoyment. Together have we labored in sympathy and interest. The joys and burdens have been shared together, and many times have we expressed the hope that together we might die or be spared until the Master should come to finish the work of redemption. A mysterious providence has ordered otherwise.

Our great consolation in this deep sorrow is, she was a Christian. The evidence of this was a living testimony and not a dying one. She honored every position in life to which she was called.

She was just recovering from the measles and unexpected to herself and friends was suddenly stricken down, and a brief sickness of about one hour during which time she was conscious, closed the short but sweet life.

Her greatest regret was in parting with her little family. A few minutes before she breathed her last she threw her dear arms around my neck saying, "My dear little treasure, how can I leave you and our dear little children? how can I?"

A loving father, mother, husband and children deeply mourn the loss.

Scarcely a night passed, but that verbal prayer was offered by her for these and others. May they not be forgotten by him who answers prayer. For many years she was a praying Christian. Her pleasant, genial ways and sweet voice in song had won for her a wide circle of friends, many of whom have recently remembered her in sadness and tears.

The cup has indeed been bitter, but we have been compelled to drink; we earnestly pray for submission and hope for life from death.

The hope of a resurrection and the soon coming of Christ which she fondly cherished is doubly precious to us now.

Dear father and mother, may this irreparable loss wean us more and more from this transitory world, and center our affections and hopes upon things eternal, that when the morning dawns and the shadows flee away, we may meet our loved one beyond the corroding cares of mortality to part no more forever, in a country where sickness, pain and death can never come.

"Where no chilling winds, nor poisonous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore;
Nor scorching heat of a sultry clime,
Can sweep the new earth o'er."

We wait in hope of the reunion and pray that it may be hastened.

Farewell, dear Cynthia, thy rest be sweet,
Though sadness fills this heart of mine;
At last, for such a slumber sweet,
I, too, would share the rest that's thine.

Farewell. The pain the words to give,
As memory views the cherished past,
Where loom a thousand joys too great to live,
And, like thyself, too good in earth to last.

Farewell in hope, but yet in pain!
We leave our joy and thee behind,
And trust our loss for thee shall be but gain,
And pray for grace in all to be resigned.

Farewell, but not forever be the grief
Of parting, here so sadly known.
The harvest time, the golden sheaf,
Shall come when death and night are flown.

LISTON D. CARY.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Indiana, D. V., will convene at the Antioch Meeting House, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, Marshall County, Ind., commencing at two o'clock, on Thursday, June 9th, 1887, and continue over Sunday following.

The reason for commencing Thursday instead of Friday, as heretofore, is this: A large amount of very important business must be transacted, and we will need more time.

Those coming by the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R., or by the Vandalia R. R. will leave the cars at Plymouth, where conveyances will be on Thursday to take them to the place of meeting. Those coming by the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago R. R., or the "Nickel Plate" R. R. will leave the cars at Argos, and inquire for Robert Hollebeck. It will be a great accommodation to residents at the place of meeting if those contemplating attending this meeting will notify the Secretary at Plymouth, Ind., of the fact, and the direction they will come from, and the probable time of arrival.

A large number of the brethren and sisters have been personally requested to prepare papers upon various subjects, to be read before this conference. These papers will be used as the basis for considering these different subjects, and where the authors of the papers are present they will lead the discussion.

What our people need more than anything else, is system in our work. A large majority of our members are well versed in Scripture and are able and willing to do valiant service for the Master. All that is needed is a plan of operations whereby each one shall be assigned certain work to do. The brethren and sisters are willing to work and will only be too glad of an opportunity of leading some precious one into the fold of Christ, and thereby save a soul from death and add a star to their crown. We want therefore to take such action at the June conferences as shall finally result in giving everyone some specific work to do, so that at the great harvest time we may all come bringing in the sheaves. A few can't do this work and do it as it should be done. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom, we therefore urge every one who loves the Lord and loves his cause, to not only come to conference but to come so as to be there at the beginning of the meeting. The committees, to whom will be referred the different branches of the work, will be appointed at the first meeting.

Able ministers will be present on Thursday and one of the best, if not the best sermon of the conference will be preached on Thursday night. Every church in the state will of course send delegates: but we not only want the delegates but we want a large representation from each church in addition to the delegates. We also want the brethren and sisters, who reside where we have no organized church, to come. We also extend a very cordial invitation to the brethren in other states to be present with us and assist us by their good offices and prayers. To all who cannot come, please do as Paul did, write us a letter of good cheer. Now brethren let us all pray from this time until the close of the conference, that we may have an interesting and profitable meeting, and that much good may be done in the name of our dear Redeemer.

R. S. DWIGGINS,
Pres. Ind. Conference.
A. R. UNDERWOOD,
Secretary.

There will be a Grove Meeting held at Watkins' Great Flowing Well, three miles southwest of Story City, Story County, Iowa, commencing on Friday, June 10, 1887, and holding over Sunday. Let all who can bring covered wagons and tents. Those of the Gospel faith are especially invited to come, as we expect Gospel preaching, and a good time. Those coming by rail will stop at Story City, where you will be met and conveyed to the ground. Come, brethren, help us by your presence, and let us leave our cares and labors for a day, to enjoy this meeting and serve our Master upon the beautiful prairies of Iowa.

O. H. WATKINS,
A. J. BYCHANER.

The 30th Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held, the Lord willing, in the Christian Church, at Watson, Allegan County, Mich., commencing Thursday evening, June 2, 1887, and continue over Sunday. All lovers of the truth are cordially invited. Those coming by the G. R. & I. R. R. will leave the cars at Martin, and those coming by the M. & O. R. R. will leave the cars at Fisk. Teams will be at each place to convey all who may come to the place of meeting. Those coming with their own conveyances may inquire for O. B. Myers or James Pallett. For further particulars address the writer at Mendon, Michigan.

H. L. PERRY, Sec.

The Illinois Conference will convene at East Plum River, Ill., Friday, June 3, at 8 o'clock p. m. and continue over the following Sunday. Teams will be in Lanark to convey the brethren from a distance to the meeting. A general invitation is extended to all.

M. M. MITCHELL.

Nature and [illegible]

—By J. P. WHITNEY.—

This is a religious book of surpassing ideal lence. It reads with consummate ability, a topi which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring "what are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world. rapid increase of knowledge, the profession and immense wealth employed in scientific enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Await the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the facts of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT.

—By B. WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up: with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $2.50 Library binding $4.00.

A Chapter in Jewish History of Real Interest to the Jews.—No. 5.

בני בכרי ישראל
"Israel is my son...my first-born." Ex. iv. 22.

מזרה ישראל יקבצנו
"He that scattered Israel will gather him." Jer. xxxi. 10.

וכרתי את־בית ישראל ואת־בית יהודה ברית חדשה
"I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31.

On a subsequent occasion Paul had been at the feast of Ingathering (or Pentecost), when certain Jews of Asia Minor stirred up the people against him, laying violent hands on him, and making certain false charges against him. In the words of the historian:—"Crying out, Men of Israel, help: this is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place."

Rescued by the military, he was afterwards brought before the Sanhedrim, and in consequence of a conspiracy on the part of the Jews to put him to death, he was sent to Cæsarea the residence of the Procurator Felix. After his accusers and he had been heard before the Procurator, and also before Porcius Festus, his successor, King Herod, Agrippa, who had come on a visit to Festus, expressed a desire to hear Paul himself. The following is the recorded account of his address:—"Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself: I think myself happy, King Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews: especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently. My manner of life from my youth, which was at first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews; which knew me from the beginning, they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee. And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead? I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme, and being exceedingly mad against them, persecuted them even unto strange cities. Whereupon I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests, at midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me, and them which journeyed with me. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee. To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me. Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: but shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me. Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles. And as he thus spake for for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad. But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness. For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely: for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest. Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds. And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them: and when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds. Then said Agrippa unto Festus, this man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæsar."

Having appealed to the judgment of the emperor, Paul was conveyed by sea to Rome under the charge of a centurion of the cohort of Augustus. After suffering shipwreck the crew [illegible] on the island of [illegible] Mediterranean sea; where they were detained during the winter season for three months. The historian, who was a companion of Paul, thus narrates what followed their arrival at Rome: —"And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me. But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of. For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain. And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or spake any harm of thee. But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against. And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening. And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not. And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him."

This was Paul's first visit to Rome, but he had written a long letter to the Christian disciples in Rome in which he expressed a strong desire to pay them a visit for the purpose of proclaiming the gospel of the Messiah. In that epistle he also expressed his earnest desire for the welfare of his brethren according to the flesh, the descendents of Abraham whom he calls "the father of the faithful." He thus expressed himself:—"I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost. That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh: who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen."

"Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved."

And in regard to the relative position of Jews and Gentiles, he said:—"I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes; but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief: even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen."

From various statements of speakers quoted in what has been advanced, it must be evident that those men looked for the return of their Master, according to his own promise. "If I go away I will come again." The intimation by the two Divine messengers at his ascension must also have greatly confirmed their hopes. Their words "shall so come in like manner," have an evident allusion to the fact that "a cloud received him out of their sight;" and this again recalls the vision of the prophet Daniel already referred to, which is worthy of being here quoted in full:—"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

This "Coming" or "Appearing" again of their Master was a frequent theme in the writings of those men to their fellow disciples in various places. Only one example shall be here quoted:—"Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

"SUBSTANTIALISM."

This word is employed to distinguish a new phase of philosophy. It treats of "sound, light, life, electricity, magnetism and gravitation" as entities, existing substantialities though invisible; in other words, "immaterial substances."

When this was spoken of by Dr. Hall and his associates, in his office of The Arena, his new serial, at No. 23 Park Row, N. Y. I saw light through it or else I was mistaken.

The subject is now recalled by a question to Brother W. Sheldon, with his interesting but unsatisfying answer in the World's Crisis, June 1, 1887.

My abiding thought, based on over sixty years in the Christian life, is that the Christian system embraces the magnitude, the plenitude and "the power of God unto salvation—the wisdom fro[illegible]bodiment of [illegible] the [illegible]wise [illegible]t would not, brethren, that ye should [illegible]thom ignorant of this ministry, lest [illegible]dew should be wise in your own con[illegible] that blindness in part is happe[illegible]n Israel, until the fulness of th[illegible]n [illegible] be come in. And so all [illegible] be saved: as it is writte[illegible]ro; b[illegible] come out of Zion the [illegible]oreath shall turn away ungo[illegible]ness from Jacob: for this is my c[illegible] when I shall take away [illegible]r sins. As concerning the gospel [illegible]orcas; mies for your sakes; b[illegible]ssionate[illegible] the election, they are bele[illegible]were fathers' sakes. For the gifts [illegible]ub[illegible] ing of God are without repe[illegible]. For as ye in times past have no[illegible] Heed God, yet have now ob[illegible] mercy through their unbelief: even so have these also now not believed, that [illegible]d through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen."

Observe. The invisible, immaterial and eternal, etc., belong mainly to the yet "secret things that belong to God," but those that are revealed belong to us and to our children, that we may know I do them, with confidence and evident advantage.

To get our start on this line, we read of Adam's departure and the reign of sin and death; of the ancients "who knew God but glorified him not as God, and so became vain in their imaginations," etc. Rom. i. 18-25; of "the four" great Gentile governments, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, that is to the end of judgment! Dan. vii. 11; Rev. xvii. to xix.

Now with this knowledge of God's creation and the record of all that is distressing in human condition, demonstrated to all our capacity for knowledge; I durst not go after wisdom as did Adam, or Israel and the leading rulers of this our present dying state, (awaiting through mercy the restitution.)

But what of this new phase of inquiry, substantialism? The answer should be as easy as it is satisfactory to those "taught of God, in Christ!" We have received "not the spirit of the world which lusts to find out its own way to wisdom and life, but "the spirit of God" given through Christ at Pentecost, and to all on receiving and obeying the word of life—the life-giving gospel Acts ii.; Rom. x. 17.

God whose mechanism of creation gives us our seasons of "seed time and harvest," according to covenant engagement, to sustain the present life of his creatures. Gen. viii.; Psa. civ. 24-30. ("All wait on him") God, I say, who provided for the present life of his creatures, has also provided for that which is as "yet to come," the life everlasting, angelic, divine! Amen and amen! Psa. lxxii. 20.

The past and the present of our world and our race is all preparative and the substructure for our faith; his all-comprehending purpose to instruct angels, principalities and powers in the heavenlies (his universe) in his manifold wisdom!" Eph. iii. 8-21.

This outcome will come as the morning, without clouds. It will come as all promise comes, in "due time."

Then, while all the forces of nature exist, named in "substantialism," and we may recognize and appropriate them in our limited sphere and measure; our proper sphere of "substantialism" for this life and the life to come are concentrated in "the Spirit of grace—of the gospel—the powers of the world to come!"

These unseen "powers of the world to come" are to my apprehension "the powers of miraculous healing, resurrection, restitution" and all that has appeared miraculous in the past. They centred up in God's ancient interpositions for the patriarchs and Israel, in the grand events of the first advent of Christ, including "the Pentecost" to inaugurate "the gospel of the kingdom!" The apostles were "clothed with these powers," and they are apparent subordinately in "the called, the chosen and the faithfull" These are contrasted with "the powers of darkness," for "evil lamentation, mourning and woe."

Note. Our God is the living God, who maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flame of fire," Heb. i. 7; that is, all-natural forces are obedient to his holy, all-loving will, of all which [illegible]sophy seems entirely oblivious, r. i. 18-31. Much omitted for

A fellow helper,

[illegible]T-RESURRECTION CHURCH, Part 2.

[illegible]ll I go and prepare a place for you, I [illegible]me again, and receive you unto myself; [illegible]where I am, there ye may be also."—John [illegible].

The Post-Resurrection Church will be distinguished for its perfect unity. "One" is the ruling numeral of redemption; because unity is its ruling thought. We are asked to endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and the reason is assigned thus in detail: "There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." And in that wonderful prayer of our High Priest, which he spake in the world, before he passed behind the vail of the opened heavens, that we might have joy, unity, oneness, is repeatedly prayed for: "That they may all be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." The world has seen nothing of the kind yet. For a brief period there was union in apostolic doctrine and fellowship, but it rapidly gave place to divisions, rebuked and mourned over by the apostle, who was jealous of his Master's glory, and upon whose ear, therefore, it grated harshly to hear one say, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, and a third, I of Cephas, and a fourth, I of Christ. These divisions have continued ever since, and have multiplied enormously as the years came and went. True, we comfort ourselves, under these humiliating circumstances, by saying, There is but one Church, the Church which is the body of Christ, consisting of all regenerated persons, in whom the Spirit of Christ dwells, and who are sealed by that Spirit until the day of resurrection, or redemption of the body. This is true, sacredly and delightfully true, but it is true only to anointed eyes. The world does not see it, and cannot see it. The evidence derived from the unity of the Church, which shall convince the world of the Divine claims of Jesus, has never yet been given. But the prayer of our Lord cannot remain unanswered. A day is coming when the world, the vast aggregate of tribes, tongues, people, and nations to whom Christ at present is but a name, will have evidence overwhelming and irresistible that he is the Prince of Life, and the glorified Head of the redeemed. That evidence will consist of the manifestation—apokalupsis—uncovering, revealing of the sons of God; and when this illustrious brotherhood, God's royal family, is thus openly seen, the question whether Jesus was sent by God will be set at rest for ever.

The unity of the body of Christ is frequently referred to in the apostolic letters. The gifts which the Lord gave after his ascension to the Father, namely, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, were for "the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ,....from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." So again: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord." And, "Ye also as living stones, are built up a spiritual house." But the process is silent. The world hears nothing of this. Of the holy temple it is recorded, "The house was built of stone, made ready before it was brought thither; so that there was neither hammer nor axe nor tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building;" but when it was finished and the Syrian sun fell, upon its golden dome, the eye of the traveller could not gaze upon the splendor. He needed no one to tell him, that is the house of God. So when the New Jerusalem, the place which Christ went to prepare for his people, descends from God out of heaven, the unity of the redeemed body of the Son of God will be manifested in a flood of glory which will declare its own meaning to every spectator in the universe.

Let us now ask if we have any light on the question, how will the Church be employed after resurrection? Surely there is a meaning in Christian discipline beyond that which finds adequate expression now. The training process through which the Lord puts each of his followers may be meant for valuable service in the world to come. That a man's spiritual education does not terminate upon himself here and now is abundantly evident. Here is one illustration suggesting many more: "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." This is the noble principle of Christian sympathy—the Christian distribution of Divine gifts. In this respect we may all be in the direct line of apostolic succession. Have you light? Don't hide it. God honored you as his steward. It was given to be given, and the more freely you give it, the brighter it shines in yourself. Have you love? Nourish and strengthen it by letting it flow freely towards your brethren in Christ for if you understand him yourself, you are sure to see something of him in them all; nay, let the love you have drawn from his heart flow out to the poor and needy who are strangers to One who, in your sight, is "the chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely."

Well, this is the principle. Can we apply it to the future? Is the resurrection, whatever characteristics the spiritual body may have, the moral and mental qualities which belonged to the man here must be retained as the basis of personal identity. If this be so, we shall find excellent use in the vast future for the training and discipline to which we are subjected now. And our wisdom will be, in the exercise of implicit faith, cheerfully to obey that severest of Christian precepts: "In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

The Lord intends to associate his people with him in the future government of the world. He is training now his high ministers of state for their future positions. "Unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come"—oikoumenen—the habitable earth—"whereof we speak." The apostle was vexed by some litigious persons at Corinth, and he speaks thus sharply: "Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? How much more things that pertain to this life?" Now it is not merely to this grand statement itself that I call attention, but to the manner of putting it. "Do ye not know?" or, "What! know ye not?" The writer seems surprised, as if it were a perfectly well known thing that the saints were to have dominion over the world. Possibly Paul may have told the Corinthians that in private conversation, as he told the Thessalonians something about the hinderer, "Remember ye not that when I was with you I told you these things?" But information on the subject is abundant, although modern theology has almost forgotten this among other things which it has quite forgotten, whilst unhappily it has given us in their stead theories and speculations which have thrown clouds of fog between us and the heavenly beauty and majesty of Divine revelation.

When the King of Israel came to his mountain throne in the terrible wilderness to legislate for his subjects, he was attended by myriads of angels, as the first martyr-deacon, who has shed such a halo of glory on the Church, said to his countrymen, "Ye received the law through ranks of angels"—angels disposed in orderly ranks, as if the king's guard of honor —"and have not kept it." But the same King comes again, and how? The oldest prophecy in existence tells us, "Behold the Lord cometh with myriads of his saints to execute judgment." Other Scriptures speak thus: "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee;" "The upright shall have dominion in the morning;" "The time came that the saints possessed the kingdom;" "He that overcometh and keepeth My works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations;" "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne;" "If we suffer we shall also reign with him;" "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth;" "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

Of course, much more might be said on the various points that have passed rapidly in review in this paper. The field is very wide and rich in varied scenery of surpassing beauty, and the subject ought to be of profoundest interest to those who "look for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ."—Rainbow.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "8" and reads "Jny8" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1888. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

Will the person who sent us a money order of $2.25 from Sabetha, Kan. please state what it is for—and we will fill the order promptly.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months (Recommended).

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION is "of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As to what is meant, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion, are pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life an essential of salvation.

THE Conference at Antioch was a meeting that will long be remembered by all our brethren and sisters whose privilege it was to meet and participate in its religious enjoyments and exercises. The weather was very favorable, the representation from abroad very good, and the congregations, especially on Sunday, quite large. A number of papers on different topics were read, which will probably appear next week. We leave a fuller report to the secretary.

FOR ourself we wish to say, that in regard to the nature of our Lord Jesus Christ we fully and unwaveringly believe in his divinity—that he really is Immanuel, God with us. Though we might not be able to formulate all that the Scriptures say about his divine nature into a creed, we embrace God's revelation concerning his own Son with all our heart. That "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead (Greek, theotes, deity) bodily" we accept as a fundamental truth. There are some wonderful statements made in God's word concerning the Son of his love. These we can believe whether we can explain them or not—and we have no disposition to explain them away. The effulgency from the sun is like the sun exactly—the effulgency of God's glory in the Son is like the Father's glory in all respects. Heb. i. 3.

THE DAY OF HIS PREPARATION. This is an expression used by Nahum in his prophecy that has an emphasized meaning in the crisis of history through which the world is now passing. We are sometimes asked, "What is now transpiring in the Old World indicative of the nearing close of this gospel dispensation?" Our reply, briefly expressed, is, The nations are preparing for "the war of the great day of God, the Almighty." R. V. Rev. xvi. 14. The nations are preparing such instruments of destruction as past generations have never conceived or even imagined. Mighty hosts are being drilled and disciplined to use these terrible implements in the most effective manner, whether by land or by sea. The nations destined to become the grand actors in the awful closing scenes of this age, are even now placing their outposts in advantageous positions. When we reflect that a battalion or two of modern warriors, armed as they are, would sweep an army like that led by Alexander the Great to the conquest of the world into annihilation in a time that would scarcely amount to a drill exercise, we may well shudder in contemplating the events of magnificent horror looming up in the Orient. We are now in the lull before the earthquake, in that atmospherical languor that beasts and birds feel when nature is preparing and just ready to energise her forces of ruin in upheaving the foundations of the earth, or sweeping it with her cyclonic besom of destruction. When the apostle spoke of the "ends of the world having come"—rather "the ends of the ages"—he meant that dispensations lapped into each other. That is precisely the condition of this existing generation; we are now living in the transition period that closes Gentile times and commences the Day of the Lord. The 1843–1844 movement brought us to a transitional period of seventy years—a generation period, Matt. xxiv. 34—that will witness events destined to eclipse all human history. We close our brief editorial with saying, watch and pray.

What Must I Do to be Saved?

This is truly every one's question just because every one is born in a state where sin reigns. Apart from any choice of our own we find ourselves forming part of a perishing race and at the same time not hopelessly perishing, for a means of salvation has been revealed by the Creator who alone has the power to save or to destroy. The question therefore in full asks, What does the Creator of man wish him to do that he may save him from perishing? One of his replys or declarations meets this case exactly in all its breadths. "Look unto me," says he, "and be saved all ye ends of the earth, for I am God and there is none else." Isa. xlv. 22. He continues in the same connection, "I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. Surely shall one say in the Lord have I righteousness and strength, even to him shall men come and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory. This declaration simplifies the whole matter into the act of looking to the Lord. From this we learn that the Lord who has the power to save is most anxious to save not a few but all the ends of the earth as the invitation runs. This also implies that all the ends of the earth are perishing, whether they know it or not and whether they confess it or not. There is therefore only one who can save and who alone can destroy.

There is only one reason why the ends of the earth are perishing, and that is they are disobedient to him who calls. They have chosen each one his own way and found it to be the way of death. To perish means to be brought to the state of knowing nothing, for the dead know nothing. All the ends of the earth are passing on to this state of unconscious dust. The cause is that they have failed in their state of consciousness to discern the only power which gave them conscious being, and refused to hear his voice. Perishing is therefore a matter of preference, a matter of choice at the first although a matter of final necessity after the choice is made. The invitation "Look unto me," addressed to those already perishing makes their state no longer one of necessity but of choice. The condemnation now is that light has come out of the world and men have chosen darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.

Evil deeds therefore or evil habits form the weight already in the scale which has turned the eyes downward and away from the light. Light is the most powerful element known. It is also that most sought after by every man who is in his right mind. To manifest a preference for darkness to light [illegible] sign of one who is void of judgment. In itself it is unnatural but at the same time it is the natural state of every evil doer. To look unto the Lord implies first a stopping of the evil deeds previously engaged in, as no one can do the two things at the same time. The act of looking to one who has invited us to look must for the time at least absorb every part of our attention in order to hear what he wishes us to do. And as we are to look to himself it can only mean that we are to note carefully what he is doing. Salvation is reduced to acts of imitation after we have been saved from the past. We are saved from the darkness when we turn to the light, from disobedience when we turn to obedience, from hatred when we turn to love, from death when we turn to life. W. ELLIS.

DOUGLASS, Kan., May 25, '87.

Dear Restitution:

I promised some time since to write some obituaries for THE RESTITUTION, and send six months' subscription for the paper. I should have done it long ago but for sickness in our family. Another dear daughter has passed away. One last October and now another in May. I have been intending to write our dear Lillie's obituary all winter, but have been so sad that I could not get about it. I wanted it inserted as a good many of the brethren and sisters were acquainted with her, and now it is my sad duty to add the loss of another. We shall be so glad to get the papers as we are alone in this neighborhood—my daughter, son-in-law and myself. We occasionally meet those of "like precious faith" as there are many from fifteen to twenty miles from us, but have no organization nearer than twenty miles, and but one there, at Oxford.

I often feel the Advent Church is not living out its teachings. We believe and teach that Christ will soon come to "make up his jewels," and does our non-conformity to the world, our devotedness to his cause, who gave his only Son to redeem and bring back into favor with God, does it all show we believe truly what we teach? How explicitly we are commanded to "come out from the world and be separate, and touch no unclean thing"? and if we do not we are disobeying a plain command. Dear ones, is that hard to do? Is it hard to "love our Savior with all our mind, might and strength, and our neighbor as ourself"? It truly is unless we have much grace, unless we go often to the fountain and drink of the healing stream "that makes glad the city of our God." Let us, I say in love and deep sorrow, do it, that our regrets and remorse be not great when we too are called to lay down these bodies, or it may be, "be changed in a moment of time, in the twinkling of an eye."

Died, in Douglass, Kan., Oct. 7, 1886, Libbie M. Campbell, daughter of Micah and Mary R. Campbell, aged 23 years and 1 day. The cause of her death was congestion of the stomach and bowels. She quietly fell asleep in Jesus, saying calmly just before she passed away, to a friend who could break the news to her, "The Lord's will not mine, be done." A heavenly smile was on her countenance and she looked up as joyful as if her dearest friend was coming. It was remarked by this friend that she saw something we did not, and added, she carried that smile to her grave. I was so overcome by my sudden and unexpected loss that I could not look on my dear precious child in death, and as she was away from home, not one of the family had reached her until she had gone. The sadness of those hours and the following weeks and months no one on earth knows but those who have been called to pass through. I did not have to pray as did Jeremiah, "Oh, that my eyes were a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night, etc."

The following beautiful lines were composed by this dear friend spoken of above, on the death of this precious child.

> Dear as thou wert and justly dear,
> We will not weep for thee,
> One thought shall check the starting tear,
> It is—that thou art free.
>
> And thus shall faith's consoling power
> Tho' tears of love restrain,
> Oh! who that saw thy parting hour
> Could wish thee here again!
>
> Triumphant in thy closing eye,
> The hope of glory shone,
> Joy breathed in thy expiring sigh,
> To think the fight was won.
>
> Gently the passing spirit fled,
> Sustained by grace divine:
> Oh, may such grace on us be shed,
> And make our end like thine.

(Composed by Amelia Yetzer, a Quaker preacher.)

Died, May 14, 1887, Martha A. Kerr, daughter of Micah and M. R. Campbell, aged 21 years and 9 months. After four weeks of suffering she fell asleep, leaving a husband and two helpless little ones, parents, brothers and sisters to mourn their loss. She was baptized by Brother Jones when sixteen or seventeen years of age, and believed the advent faith, although she united with the church in Winfield, as no Advent Church was there. She did not speak of [illegible] and we were prevented from it by the physicians (although Christians) telling us that the least excitement might cause instant death, as her heart was so much affected. But her calm and sweet departure, her angelic look in death, are a satisfactory proof and comfort to our bereaved hearts that all is well, and that she and Lillie will be among those who will have part in the first resurrection with all who are thus ready to share in that glorious kingdom, where "the former things have passed away," and to go no more out forever. "For these light afflictions (they seem so heavy) worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Happy thought! Glory! Finite minds cannot realize. But there "we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known."

WE SHALL NOT BE SUNDERED LONG.

> Friends we've buried in the tomb,
> Laid them low in shroud gloom;
> Now them in that dreamless sleeping,
> All unconscious of our weeping;
> We have sadly thought, with tears
> Of the coming lonely years;
> "We shall not be sundered long."
>
> All along life's weary ways,
> Till shall end my pilgrim days,
> Loved ones fall like withered leaves,
> And their loss my spirit grieves;
> But the morning soon shall break,
> When the ransomed shall awake!
> So I sing in hope the song,
> "We shall not be sundered long."
>
> Oft I've sung that song before,
> I believe it more and more;
> For the time is drawing nigh
> When the Savior from on high
> Shall awake each sleeping one,
> And shall say to saints, "well done."
> There is comfort in the song,
> "We shall not be sundered long."
>
> Smiles shall beam on faces worn,
> Joy shall come to faces torn;
> To the weary hearts that ache
> For some loved and lost one's sake;
> For that voice, now hushed but dear,
> Soon shall thrill again the ear;
> So with joy we sing the song,
> "We shall not be severed long."

The Bible Triumphant.

Voltaire's house is now used by the Geneva Bible Society as a repository. The old promises of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in Earl street, Blackfriars, stood where, in 1678, the Council forbade Wycliffe circulating portions of the Holy Scriptures, and where he uttered the words, "The truth shall prevail." The Religious Tract Society's premises are where Bibles were publicly burned.

Brave Belle Franklin.

A TRUE INCIDENT OF PRAIRIE LIFE.

> "Run home, dear children, the sun goes down
> With cannot fires all glowing;
> Across the prairie, now sere and brown,
> Comes Mollie, my cow, a-lowing.
> Don't swing your bag so, Rosie Snell.
> Jacob, take care of Lea!
> Be sure you study your lessons well,
> And Nancy, tie up your shoe!"
>
> The children have their parting bow
> With many a smile and shout,
> Thus sweet Belle Franklin milked her cow,
> And did the chores about.
> She had built a 'shack' on a prairie claim,
> And when lessons all were done,
> Worked hard to secure it to her name,
> Each morn, and till set of sun.
>
> A lonely girl with soft gray eyes,
> That were far too brave to weep,
> When tired of work, the prayerful sighs—
> "Now I lay me down to sleep,"
> And wait but the noon and year
> From her near but homely bed,
> And thought of loving friends afar
> While resting her weary head.
>
> Till sleep at last her eyelids close.
> She dreamed that the sunset's glow
> In wondrous billows roll and rose
> Like a molten river's flow;
> Then started, for a glare was shed
> On all the room around;
> A prairie fire—the sky is red,
> There comes a crackling sound.
>
> "O, save us, Christ," that rear is near,
> And clear as light of day,
> She saw the home of farmer Weir
> Just half a mile away.
> The house was closed—for to the mill
> That day her neighbor went:
> One moment fear subdued her will,
> The next in prayer was spent.
>
> Soon clothed, she ran and found the racks
> Where Bright and Champion stood,
> She flings the harness on their backs,
> Then on to the prairie land.
> A plow rests by the grassy fields,
> The fire comes leaping near,
> The sod beneath her guidance yields,
> The horses snort with fear.
>
> She plows around that homestead farm,
> And stays the raging flame,
> Who says our girls live but to charm?
> That weakness is their name!
> Fair wives and daughters through the land
> Are found in cot and hall.
> With strength of will, if fragile hand,
> When duty's voice may call.

D. D. Paterson, Editor of the Dawn of the Morning, who is now visiting the Sacred places [illegible], writes the following [illegible]. It is [illegible] published [illegible] Dawn.

Next on the [illegible] of Rephaim comes in sight. This was the ancient boundary line between Judah and Benjamin. (Josh. xv. 8). Here David defeated the Philistines. The valley is fertile and the hills beyond it are lovely. We soon come to the reputed plain where the rulers of Jerusalem came out to meet Abraham after his interview with Melchisedec. A little over half way we reach an eminence from which Jerusalem is in view behind us and Bethlehem in sight before us. The scene is transporting. There indeed is the city of David—the birthplace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In about fifteen minutes' ride from this summit we reach Rachel's tomb, of which we will in another article have something to say. What luxuriant olive groves away to our right—a real forest of olives. And there is Bethlehem on the summit of a rocky terraced hill. What magnificent gardens! Fig trees, olives, almond trees in abundance. The fig is nicely formed. Green almonds are already in the market, (April 20). The rocks are also adorned with wild flowers of exquisite beauty. Yonder are the fields in which Ruth gleaned, and yonder to the east is the field in which the shepherds watched their flocks by night when the glorious announcement of a Savior born was made unto them. On some of these hills David watched his father's sheep. O what a spot of sacred story. Ruth be it remembered was David's grandmother and consequently the ancestress of Christ. As we entered Bethlehem and passed through the streets our feelings were simply indescribable. Yea, and the witness of the Divine Spirit fell sweetly upon us, as we passed along those very streets once trodden by the Son of God. The air we breathed was holy. The ground upon which we stood was sacred. Here the great Redeemer of the world was born. Toward this spot the wise men were guided. Here was cradled in a manger the Coburn King of kings and Lord of lords. Praise the Lord, O my soul!

At the eastern end of the town stands the Church of the Nativity. The nave of the church is considered to be "the oldest monument of Christian architecture in the world." Its marble columns are of the Corinthian order. Rough cedar from Lebanon composes, or rather supports the roof. Here the birds in plenty make their nests, and their sweet chirping is rather in striking contrast with some of the religious exercises carried on in the [illegible]. In the grotto of the church we felt sorry to see the natural hid by modern pictures, etc. Here is the Chapel of the Manger, the Altar of the Magi, the Chapel of St. Joseph, the Altar of the Innocents, the so-called tomb of Eusebius, and the Chapel and tomb of St. Jerome. We only gave a cursory glance at some of these, as there is much tradition mixed up with their histories. Suffice it to know here somewhere near by at least our Lord was cradled in a manger—striking, solemn and all-glorious truth. The thought filled our soul with awe. Pilgrims from all lands visit the spot yearly; nor do they leave without imprinting a kiss upon the sacred stones. Of a form of godliness there is plenty, as to realness of their piety it is God's alone to judge. From the roof of the church the view is magnificently grand. The town lies around you—comprising some 500 dwellings. Beneath are the terraced gardens, with vines and figtrees in abundance. Still further down are the cornfields in the valley. Northward are the hills which surround Jerusalem. Eastward is the shepherd's field with lovely hills on either side and the Mountains of Moab in the distance. You can readily imagine the song of the heavenly host. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good-will." As we gaze around, our soul is lost in wonder, love and praise. Bethlehem is often mentioned in the Scriptures—Ephratah and Bethlehem-Ephratah are names given to it expressive of its fruitfulness. It has a population of some 8,000. Mother of pearl and olivewood [illegible] is a leading industry of the [illegible]tants. Bethlehem is indeed [illegible]ful for its situation. Though [illegible]s of eternal importance, as [illegible]t has said: "And thou, [illegible]phratah, though thou be [illegible] thousands of Judah, [illegible] shall he come forth [illegible]be ruler in Israel; [illegible] have been from of [illegible]lding." (Micah v. 2). [illegible] of the town, on the [illegible]usalem, is David's well, [illegible]to in 2 Sam. xxiii. 13–[illegible] Chron. xi. 15–19. When [illegible]om was in the hands of the [illegible]ines, David, who was then in [illegible]ve of Adullam, expressed a desire for a draught of water from this well. Three of his men at once risked their lives and obtained the water. Knowing their lives had been endangered by the brave act, David, instead of partaking of the water poured it out before the Lord.

Wonderful town indeed! It is a volume of history, the cradle of earth's future King and the witness of heavenly glory. "And thou Bethlehem-Ephratah" who hast given birth to the only begotten Son of God, surely thou shalt welcome him, when he cometh back to earth in the glory of the Father! And the time is at hand.

BIBLICAL RESEARCH.

At the last anniversary meeting of the Palestine Exploration Fund, Sir Charles Wilson contrasted the present condition of things in Palestine with that of twenty-three years ago, when he first went out to survey Jerusalem, with reference to a better water supply. To almost all his friends it seemed a useless journey, while many prophesied danger and disaster. It was considered impossible for a Christian to survey a Moslem town not under a Christian rules, with any sort of secrecy at least; and even so well-informed a traveller in the East as Mr. Hepworth Dixon warned him when he started not to venture out in the streets of Jerusalem after dark, or he would infallibly have his throat cut. The black Dervishes of the Haram-area were an especial terror, being supposed to be very blood-thirsty and murderous. But, after all, Captain Wilson, as he then ranked, succeeded perfectly in his undertaking without harm; and as for the black Dervishes, they became his friends, and even assisted him in measuring their sacred buildings. At this time, too, the country at large was really unsafe; the great plain of Esdraelon, for example, being annually raided by the Bedawi tribes from the east of the Jordan, and so insecure that a man rarely ventured what he had saved there. Now all this is changed; the entire plain is well cultivated, and in harvest-time is a sea of waving grain. The whole country is comparatively settled and better cultivated, particularly in the extensive planting of olive groves and vineyards. A new town has sprung up outside the walls of Jerusalem; and much building has been done on the Mount of Olives. Besides, every year the Holy Land is visited and traversed from one end to the other by an increasing number of tourists.—N. Y. Independent.

The exact site of Capernaum, the central place of Christ's activity in Galilee, has been a vexed problem among Palestine explorers ever since the inauguration of a thorough and scientific study of the Holy Land, and indeed earlier. Two localities claim the honor of being that famous city, namely, what is now called Chan Minje, on the western border of the lake, and Tell Hum, on its northern extremity, near where the Jordan enters. The authority of Robinson has induced many to accept Chan Minje as the original Capernaum. But against this, later investigators have adduced weighty reasons. The last one to join the ranks of the advocates of Tell Hum, or rather to renew his allegiance, is Franz Delitzsch, in the third edition of his "A Day in Capernaum," recently issued in German. His arguments are both negative and positive. Negatively, he shows that, aside from a single tradition of unknown age and very doubtful value, there is really nothing that speaks for Chan Minje. On the other hand, this identification is open to the serious objection that Capernaum is by the New Testament reported as lying where the tribes of Naphtali and Zebulun join. From Biblical, as also from rabbinical sources, it appears that this boundary line can have been only at the northern edge of the lake, where the great ruins of Tell Hum are found. It is indeed noteworthy that the fate of the three cities over which Christ uttered his woes, should have been so terrible. Capernaum is a mass of ruins, and its site disputed, although when it was destroyed does not seem fixed; Chorazin was already in ruins in the days of the church historian Eusebius, and Bethsaida was destroyed so effectually a few years later that its site can no longer be identified.—Old Testament Student.

Under His [illegible]

That means today, not some other time! Under his wings, the shadowing wings of the Most High, you, poor little helpless one, are to trust today.

When the little eaglets, that have not yet a feather to fly with, are under the great wings of the parent eagle, how safe they are! Who would dare to touch them? If a bold climber put his hand into the nest then, those powerful wings would beat him in a minute from his hold, and he would fall down on the rocks and be dashed to pieces. So safe you will be "under his wings;" "nothing shall by any means hurt you" there.

When the wild snow storms rage around the eyrie, and the mountain cold is felt that it is death to the unprotected sleeper, how warm the little eaglets are kept! Not an arrow of the keen blast reaches them, poor little featherless things, not a snow flake touches them. So warm shall you be kept "under his wings" when any trouble or cold day comes, or even any sudden blast of unkindness or loneliness.

"Under his wings shalt thou trust;" not "shalt thou see." If one of the eaglets wanted to see for itself what was going on and thought it could take care of itself for a little while, and hopped from under the shadow of the wings it would be neither safe nor warm. The sharp wind would chill it, and the cruel hand might seize it then. So you are to trust, rest quiet and peacefully "under his wings;" stay there, not by peeping out and wondering whether God is really taking care of you! You may be always safe and happy there. Safe, for "in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge." Happy, for "in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice."

Remember, too, that it is a command as well as a promise; life what you are to do today, all day long; "Under his wings shalt thou trust!"—F. R. Havergal.

The Failure of Christ.

God was pleased that he who came as the Son of man, our brother, should have this also as one of his trials—to labor in vain. "He came to his own, and his own received him not;" he stretched out his hands all the day to a gainsaying and rebellious people: he encountered dead indifference, fierce opposition, reproach, and calumny; he was betrayed and deserted; was lifted up on a cross in the midst of that Jerusalem over which he had wept in vain, died a malefactor's death, and was buried in a stranger's grave. Those of you who have failed to find position or comfort, fame or sympathy, in the world, may have One who can bear his share with you here, who chose this place in life, which you call lone, that he might be nearer you, and show you that life has greater things than all you have coveted. Those of you who complain that you have labored for your fellowmen with God with small return, have One here who gave up infinitely higher things, and met from men a more cruel award. Is it not a token of God's compassion, that into a world of loss and disappointment, of bruised hearts and shattered hopes, he sent his own Son to be the sharer of them—their sharer, that he might show men how to bear them? He had his thoughts of depression as we have—true, real, deep—explain it as we will; but he put his motive before the eye of God, and left the result unto him. "He did not fail, neither was he discouraged." Through clouds of depression he had star-like glimpses of the travail of his soul—the fruits of his toil that made him say, "I thank thee, O Father"—and that helped him to press on till he uttered from his cross, "It is finished"—that grand prophetic word which assures us that every life that has sought to do the will of God is a complete and perfect life, whenever and however it may close. The word, "It is finished," repeats the saying which came up from his Spirit long before—"My judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God."—Dr. John Kerr.

Embodiment.

If through aversion to matter as defiling the spirit, or clogging and hindering it, the disembodied state is regarded as the heavenly and the highest, we import into the Scriptures a pagan notion which destroys the unity of the divine purpose, and makes their consistent interpretation impossible. The true goal to which God points us—likeness to his Son raised from the dead and glorified—being lost, the true nature of redemption, as embracing all the elements of our humanity, body, soul, and spirit, joined in indissoluble union, is misapprehended; the resurrection becomes meaningless; and the existence of the material world an enigma. Mortality is not swallowed up of life, but life of mortality. The human race, like a river which pours itself forth upon the sands and disappears, sinks away in its successive generations into the depths of the grave. It needs scarcely be said that a religion which exalts a transient and imperfect form of our humanity, the fruit of sin, into its perfected and permanent form; and finds in death, not in resurrection, the door into eternal life, makes open confession of its impotence to solve the problem of man's destiny. It goes backward to the vague, shadowy, ghostly future of pagan religions, that know nothing of our humanity as redeemed and ennobled in Christ, and made immortal and incorruptible; but only as abiding dismembered under the law of death. To the Christian alone it is given to see the Man, Christ Jesus, radiant in resurrection life, filling with his brightness the eternal future; and with him, his redeemed, perfected in their humanity, body, soul, and spirit.—S. J. Andrews.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

WHY AND WHEREFORE.

WHY!
Lone lifted by the breeze,
Why lift thy feeble wrath,
Like straw the rushing current
Of error,—all in vain.

The worlds past thee pouring,
Nods not thy leafy forlorn;
And who are not ignoring
Are laughing they to scorn.

WHEREFORE.
The rock of Truth unshaken,
He who is grounded on,
Shall never be forsaken,
And never stands alone.

Though be the accents broken,
If God and truth inspire,
Each faltering sentence spoken,
Is launched a shaft of fire.

A fire wherewith to profit,
A light that may illume,
Or else a spark of Tophet,
To lure thee to thy doom.

THE CONCERN OF GOD FOR HIS OWN CHARACTER ON EARTH.

"Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."—John xv. 8.

The whole succession of sacred books, whose composition extended over 1,463 years, is distinguished from all other religious writings, European or Asiatic, by urging incessantly the "glorification" of God on earth. The books of Moses, the book of Psalms (the work of perhaps a score of different writers), the Prophets, the Evangelists, the Apostles, all alike represent God as caring for the just representation and vindication of his character on earth; as pleased and delighted by its true representation; and as grieved and indignant at its concealment or perversion. Every one will recall a hundred passages where this idea is prominent. This is one of them. Christ is forever speaking of the glory of God. "I have glorified Thee on the earth. I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." The representation is that God is concerned to be loved by his creatures. He loves to be loved. And he is equally concerned to be respected, honored, believed in, reverenced, delighted in, by rational beings. He really cares what we think of him, feel towards him; and wishes to be seen to be such that we can really love and honor him with all our souls, with all our minds, and all our strength.

This gives a very different view of God's nature from that which prevails in ordinary society. Men of all ranks, and women of every grade, are generally convinced that, if there be a God at all, he is much too great to care an atom what they think of him, or how they feel towards him. There is no opinion more rooted in men's minds this. The notion is, that an Infinite Being cannot really concern himself with the ideas or opinions of an insect like man, let him think of Deity as he will, or not think at all. Of course, anything like a fixed and rational conviction that there is a God around us who is seriously grieved and vexed by our distance, contempt, and perverseness of thought, would at once exert an immense influence on us. If it were only an archangel who, unseen, was about us, and who was "grieved" at our holding a false opinion of his character, it would move us to ask: What, then, is he, in reality? But how much more when, if the Bible is true, it is the Everlasting God who is "grieved at his heart" with our "hard and impenitent hearts," and "contempt of his word and commandments."

The first question men should settle is whether the Creator of the universe is likely to care anything about the ruin of his works. If into some great gallery of Art or National Museum, as our own National Gallery, or the Louvre at Paris, full of the most wonderful and delightful specimens of human skill and beautiful work, a gang of wicked ruffians should enter, and should begin to break in pieces the finest sculptures, and to tear in pieces the finest pictures, radiant with the colors of Titian, Raffaelle, or Turner, what would be the feeling of all the artists of England or France who should be compelled to stand by and witness the demolition? Why—if there be indeed a God who made the world—their indignation and grief would be nothing at all in comparison with the feeling of him who made all things at first "very good;" who made man upon the earth to be the image of his own intelligence and righteousness; yet who is compelled by human wickedness daily to look upon a world ruined by the horrible vices, crimes, and violences of a race of obstinate transgressors and destroyers, "alienated from the life of God" through the brutality and ignorance which is in them. If God made us that we might know him as the highest and of our creation—know the Infinite and Eternal Being as he is; might enter into the pebble-like treasures of his intelligence; find our joy in sympathetic obedience to his will; find the mainspring of life in love to him and willing service—what must be the thought of God in looking at a world, now reduced to such a state, by wickedness and waste, by drunkenness and lust, by deception, by offending oppression and bloodshed, by atheistic license, by ignorance of the blackest dye, by bad government, by slavery, by war, by cruel neglect of the rights and claims of woman and children; reduced to such a state that bystanders on earth by millions incline to think there is no God at all, or else that the Power behind Nature is absolutely evil, or absolutely indifferent to humanity. All the while there is one other solution—namely, that God is, that God sees all, and that God will "judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." All the while there is this other solution—that the men and women who have reduced the world to this state by their atrocious wickedness shall every one pay the penalty of their crimes "to the uttermost farthing." And then it will be seen whether it is a matter of indifference to God what is thought of him by his creatures, and whether he concerns himself about his own glory and character. Nothing is more certain than that it will be vindicated one day, in the doom of all who have made the name of God a mockery, and rendered it hard for others to believe in him; while those who have "glorified him by bearing much fruit," by representing his true character in their own lives, shall be welcomed to his everlasting embrace.

The history of this world is one continual battle between the powers which are striving rightly to represent God, and the powers which are striving to calumniate him, and to blot out the memory of him from the universe. And each one of us, in his own life, is engaged in one or the other of these enterprises. We are either revealing God as a reality in a godly life; revealing him as a just and righteous Being by our own zeal for justice and righteous conduct in affairs; revealing him as the Ruler of the world by doing his will, and seeking his guidance; revealing him as good by our own [illegible] the Supreme by our own earnest study of his works and of his word—resulting in a rational faith which rends the veil of eternity and embraces the prospect of everlasting life—revealing him by a purity and tenderness which speaks to all of a destiny beyond the stars, and a dignity which will not be lost amidst the dishonors of death and the grave; or, we are spending life in an atheism which does its utmost to blot God out of the creation; in a speculative atheism which under fine phrases of Nature and Evolution, is seeking to assassinate the very idea of Deity—or in a practical atheism, which is in daily life an argument for "living without God in the world;" so that "when men know God, they glorify him not as God," but either strive to represent him as, in fact, the devil—the author of the evil they themselves commit—or to banish the thought of him out of the creation.

Alas, how large a part of mankind live daily in the execution of this infernal scheme of existence. While "the heavens are telling the glory of God," and the "firmament is declaring his handiwork," while nature murmurs the eternal Name in solemn accents on every side, the lives of men, the crimes of men, the miseries and woes of men and women, brought by oppression, lust, ambition, selfishness, violence, and fraud, seem to overpower the testimony of all the stars of light and all the loveliness of the world, so as to tempt whole nations to plunge headlong in the abyss of atheism.

What the Jewish rulers and scribes, and Herod and Pilate, and their ruffianly soldiery, and the malignant mob of common people did at Jerusalem to Christ—scourge him, mock him, spit upon him, buffet him, crucify him, so as to brand him as a felon, and bring him to an ignominious death; that, or the like of that, more than half the world are daily trying to do, to the Omnipotent himself. They despise him; they ignore him; they render the name of his religion ridiculous; they philosophize against him; they use his name only to curse with it, or to blaspheme it—with the result of rendering it a sort of bad dream, or fable, without reality, without authority, without honor.

This is the world in which our heavenly Father—the Father of our spirits—will be "glorified by our bearing much fruit." The majority are against him altogether, and are determined to ignore him; so that the few who are left to be marked on the forehead as his sons must live with double zeal in his service, so as truly to reveal his character.

Here, then, was the battle in the life of Jesus himself. Amidst this darkness that might be felt"—this almost solid darkness—the piercing beams of the true light shone from him with a brightness and power that penetrated even that awful night. "I have glorified Thee on the earth:" Yes; he represented God as the Real Being, as near at hand, as righteous, and as merciful. He brought out with such splendor the reality, the beauty, and the majesty of the Life Divine, in contrast with the Herods, the Caiaphases, the Iscariots, the ostentatious saints who were no better than hypocrites and men of straw; that it has never been possible since for long together, to deny that such a life would form the noblest pattern for the whole race to be modelled on. A world full of men like those who crucified him would be hell realized on earth; a world of men like Jesus Christ himself would be the New Jerusalem descended from the skies.

Now, the doctrine is, that God, our Father, is deeply and sincerely pleased when we vindicate him on the earth by showing what he is in such a world by our practical conduct. If any man love Me he will keep My words, and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and take up Our abode with him. We all love those who do us justice, even if it be late, and notwithstanding all our faults. And, God loves those who do him justice by revealing him, even partially, as he is, against all the misrepresentations of Deity in this wicked world, and amidst the ruins of his works on every side around us. God loves also those who vindicate the true idea of a man or a woman—originally the counterpart of the idea of Deity—by showing openly in their lives that a man does not mean a surfeited sodden drunken creature, lower than the beasts which perish; does not mean a frivolous, false, impure, dishonest, blasphemous creature, whom would have disgraced even the [illegible] have created;—that a woman, made her, does not mean an [illegible] tling, trifling, self-admiring ate, changeable creature; crown and glory of creation being whose tenderness surface, but whose her courage lay concealed good works, like Dorcas, insight and compassion those who, of old, were cross and first at the tomb

Be assured that you do [illegible] to God,—when men see that you say No against a world resolved disobedience; when you forego the excessive pleasures and luxuries which blot out the soul, and redden and dim the eyes, and degrade the body itself, and render it a cage of very unclean and hurtful lust. Be assured you do glorify God when your mind becomes clear and strong through temperance and purity, when your heart becomes loving through prayer and praise, and benevolent works. You do give him pleasure when your honest word of truth goes like a cannon-shot through the consciences of mankind, and when you reveal the holiness of God by exhibiting the reality of a life governed by the oracle within the breast. The chief means of doing good is being good. Life passed in a hurry, without thought, without prayer, without preparation, without deliberation, brings no credit to its Author. But a life, like that of any of the leading good men and women of our time, leaves a trail of glory behind it, which tells of a divine original, and a divine end. Life that is the foreshadowing of the Divine Life is itself a proof, a prophecy, of the kingdom of God beyond.

One word now on the "much fruit." In many histories, day after day passes without anything that deserves to be called an Action—lives of the sort that Addison ridicules in The Spectator, in which he brings in a man keeping a journal, of which the entries consist only of the changes of the weather, of the materials of his meals, of the names of the persons whom he met at the coffee-house, with their sapient remarks on the policy of the Grand Turk, or the Parliamentary Opposition. It is lamentable to see how many lives would furish only similar materials to those for a biography. Life is spent in self-pleasing and in sloth. As for acts or words on a higher level, there are none to record. On the other side, there are many lives so full of business from year to year, that they seem to have no pleasure from themselves to serve and sympathize. Their souls move on in their round of daily toil, like prisoners on a treadmill; but there is no moral or even intellectual element in their activity—no motive, no end which raises their industry above the level of ordinary labor. It tends to the battering [illegible] outlook to others, no upward look to God, no sacrifice for an idea; no life-long labor for a noble enterprise, or noble end; no breathing of loftiness amidst the hardness of the world. These are poor subjects for a biography, to be written by the finger of God. They live, no one really knows why, and when they die, they go no one exactly knows where. They have consumed a vast quantity of the fruits of the earth, but have brought no fruit to perfection in themselves. Their life has not been a revelation of God, and they have brought no honor to his name among men.

Must we, then, all become public characters to "bear much fruit?" Not a thousand times. No! The private life and personal character must be first divine before any public life can shine for God's honor. It is the absence of this inward personal character which nullifies so much public and popular verbal testimony. The man's self-seeking ostentation, his vulgar worship of the multitude, his audacious love of gain, his ceaseless "eloquence" over the sufferings of Christ, assure the world that this teaching never deeply tells on the human souls. But the common life-work of a true Christian is of a God-glorifying quality; what you call business life, family training, household management, daily labor. Yes; habits of exact honesty, conscientious perseverance, and punctuality, all glorify God when they are the works of a Christian. And they all abide in memory as subjects of pleasant and inspiring remembrance.

An act in common life, which is performed by a hand that is moved by a spirit in union with God, because thereby spiritual, and will bear thinking of for ever. It will bear writing down and reading of for ages. The Bible is half filled with such actions, which have h[illegible] through the spirit [illegible] even [illegible] ...ng," their frenzied cries, despite the mortal anmother may know, she the sun went down on freezing wintry day. the axe she loaded they could hold sticks like to learn it on were her babes, her two, three, four, five, his place, ten—each and her to her noble heart as der ones, favored mother, over the dying fire in the cooling stove, barefooted, half-ked, with hunger-pinched faces, and claw-like hands; some were crying vociferously, while some only moaned in low, plaintive tones of cold and hunger.

For two weeks these eleven had subsisted on the milk of one cow, and turnips. The cow had come so short of food as to be fed from their straw beds. After giving the starving children the milk and feeding the dumb giver the last armful of straw in their beds, she built a fire and sat down to warm her frozen feet. First, she took off one thin petticoat and pinned it about the shoulders of the oldest child and putting off her shoes and ragged stockings for its feet, sent it off to the wood pile to bring in the wood she had chopped.

The fire burned up bright and warm and the famished children cuddled down beside the stove under their scant bed-covers, and forgot their woes in sleep. Not so the tired, starving mother. She took a turnip and sat up to scrape it as she warmed her frozen feet. Ere the morning dawned another babe was added to the ten starving beside her.

Think of this true picture, mothers, you who have passed the fiery ordeal of motherhood amid the luxuries of warmth, food, clothes, comforts, husband, friends, and physicians—think of this frail, starving, frozen woman alone with the rayless midnight and her mortal anguish. Have you forgotten with what grateful avidity you seized a cup of hot tea held by the hand of ministering friends? Contrast that moment of grateful refreshment with the empty, craving stomach of this long famished creature, comforted only by the cold, scraped turnip, she would have perhaps given worlds for a taste had it not then been frozen. Can you not drop a tear over this poor neighbor? My own flow like summer rain as I write.

You will ask where this "brute of a husband," the father of eleven children, was at such a time. Hush! indignant matron! Name not one of the "lords of creation" in such a tone!

I'll whisper it in your ear; be careful your busy tongue reveal not the secret! He was only down to Pasadumkeag on a little bit of a spree, lasting a couple of weeks or so! They can drink or let alone, you know; so we must not say anything about their doing either, lest we get to saying it on the wrong side and pop over into prohibition. One of that heretical party in all this good Republican town can tolerate.

Two or three days after the new babe came to the poor woman a neighbor learned and reported her condition. A noble Scot came gallantly to her relief, with food, clothes, and fire-wood. The eager, starving children crowding about the hunger-queller could not be fed carefully enough to save them from the reaction consequent upon repletion after famine. Tears flowed so thickly over the cheeks of sooty Scotch build, that one poor, naked, starveling got just a cake too much, and though the physician was called, its little life went out a sacrifice to the god Bacchus to whom the nations of earth deem it necessary to sacrifice so many human lives yearly. —*L. ### THE FARMER'S PITY.

Though wool be gloom and snow,
Through warp of rain and sleet,
There flashes bright a silver thread
Amid the rigid gray!
For as a father pitieth
The children of His love,
So with compassion is He not,
Our mother from above.

And even our need and weakness,
And not its tragedy alone,
Sends down the dark celestial
That blocks the mingled years.
Never wise to guide us,
And always fast of love,
Nature's leader pity seeks
To renew our thoughts above.

For yet, when our hearts are heavy,
Clear, though our eyesight dim,
The old, old word of Heaven comes
With life's sun up to him.
Even clear, when flesh is failing,
That Breath of heavenly Fire,
Which whispers in the silent ear
Of God's paternal love?

Into hath its desert shadow,
Its interspace of tears:
And yet a rainbow often breaks,
And scatters swift one fears.
For as a father pitieth
The children of his love,
So God, our Father, watcheth us
With pity from above.

Our feeble frame he knoweth,
Remembereth we are dust:
And ere we ask His face to see,
His ways are ever just.
It is ours and in blindness,
Through darkened paths we rove,
But still our Father leads us home,
By strength of mighty love.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Circumstances being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. O. Thomas.—No. 15.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

Again; they foolishly assert and write as follows: "Thus Jesus of Nazareth must be raised up in every way just as Moses was!" If that be true then he must have been of the Tribe of Levi as Moses was; and saved in an ark of bulrushes, as Moses was; and raised up by the daughter of the king as Moses was, etc., etc. But such silly assertions are unworthy of notice.

Again; they ask "If Jesus was not the natural son of Joseph how could he descend from the loins of David and they tell us Paul stated "clearly that Jesus came from the fathers by NATURAL descent," Rom. ix. 5. I have fully answered this question, and the incorrect putting of Paul's statement. Speaking of the Israelites Paul [illegible] says, "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever." Now this is just what he said of Jesus in chap. i. 3, also, viz., "made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and just what God promised David in the covenant. "I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels;" 2 Sam. vii. 12; and just what David said, Psa. cxxii. 11, "The Lord hath sworn, of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne;" and just what Peter said, Acts ii. 30, when quoting David's words, "that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ," etc., and agrees exactly with God's promise to Abraham, concerning his son or seed, Isaac and Christ, of which I have just been treating. As I have shown, for Christ to be of the seed of David according to the flesh, or to have come from the Israelites as concerning the flesh, does not mean that he was begotten and conceived, or produced by the will and power of the flesh, according to the natural law of generation; no, no, this is mere assumption, and assertion, not only without a particle of proof, but is a direct contradiction of the Scriptures as before shown. God was able to produce his own Son either by natural law, or supernatural law, just as suited his own purpose. He was just as able to produce and raise up his promised "seed of the woman," "prophet like unto Moses," "seed of Abraham," "seed of David according to the flesh," Son of man and Son of God, one way as another. It was just as easy for God to produce this personage, Jesus his own Son, in the flesh of David, without the aid of a man as with it. The aid of puny man was not necessary in order for God to produce a son of David according to the flesh. The true meaning of that expression, "son of David as to the flesh," (as rendered by the Diaglott) is, that which accords with the covenant, viz., so far as the flesh of Jesus was concerned, it descended from the loins of David to Solomon, from Solomon to Rehoboam his son, and so on down through the Solomon line of David's descendants, David's son, to Mary, whose flesh was David's flesh, and from whose flesh was elaborated the flesh of Jesus—God's Son made of a woman," Gal. iv. 4; that is, of the substance of a woman—by the Power of the Highest. The same blood that flowed in the veins of David and Solomon, and built up their flesh, sustained through the veins, of all their descendants even down to Mary and Jesus. It was only as to the flesh that Jesus thus descended from David. There was something of Jesus more than the flesh—the WORD that was with God and was God, and which by his own Power became flesh by impregnating the ovum or seed of Mary. The flesh of Jesus came down from David, but the Power that impregnated the flesh and produced Jesus, came down from above. Hence Jesus said, "I proceeded forth and came from God." The flesh was simply the material, the Power which energized, vivified and organized that material into a wonderful Being, was of much more importance. The mere material or flesh is one thing but that flesh organized into a Being is another thing. "He took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him (took hold of—margin and R. V.) the seed of Abraham, flesh and blood—the common human nature, in the line of Abraham and David. It was the incarnation of the Word or Power of God, through the means of the virgin Mary, a descendant of David. It was not the incarnation of the Son of God, as supposed and called by many: for Jesus the Son of God did not exist as a person until produced by the Spirit-Word, or Power of God "taking hold not of the nature of angels, but of the seed of Abraham," human nature, and clothing or embodying itself in the flesh of David, through the means of the virgin Mary, thus becoming the Word made flesh—the "eternal Spirit" incarnate in the Son of God and Son of David. Heb. xix. 14. To the carnal mind, the idea is of course absurd and incomprehensible, because it judges according to the flesh. "Great is the mystery of Godliness: God manifested in flesh." Paul says, "we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery."

Permit me once more to illustrate. The material of a steam engine is one thing, but the power and skill which originated, fashioned, organized and produced the engine from that material, is another thing, and of much more importance, and had its origin in the mind of the designing mechanic; and when by the same skill, the organism of the engine is connected with steam (life) it becomes active and powerful to perform its work or mission as designed and manipulated by its originator. This to some extent, will illustrate the wonderful birth process. [illegible] the natural begettal and conception of a mere man, it has been ascertained that the brain or mind element and life-principle have their origin in the male; so in the production of the only begotten Son of God, it is evident that the mind or mental element and organism, and the life-principle, had their origin in the purpose and Power of the Highest. This was no more miraculous, no greater miracle, and required no greater power, than did the immediate and constant actual production of bread, in addition to the five loaves, sufficient to feed five thousand men besides women and children, until they were all filled, leaving twelve baskets full.

Again; why can they not see that Joseph himself has settled this matter as to the Spirit-begettal instead of by Joseph. After Mary was espoused to him, before they came together, she was found to be with child. What did Joseph do? Was he not going to put her away because he was not the father of the child? But after the angel made known to him that she had conceived by the Holy Spirit, he changed his mind. He no longer believed her to be a harlot: "and took unto him his wife: and knew her not till she had brought forth her first born son; and he called his name Jesus." No human testimony could have convinced him that a pregnant maiden had not had intercourse with a man. But he was convinced for he abandoned his original purpose of repudiation, publicly acknowledged her as his wife by being married to her after she had become enciente not by himself, and by abstinence, and by calling the child's name as directed by the angel—Jesus, or in Hebrew—Yah shua, which signifies, "I shall be the power-full" or Emmanuel—"God with us," which God-appointed and God-signifying name JESUS, is, of itself, independent of all that is said in the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke, sufficient evidence that Jesus was not the son of Joseph but literally the ONLY BEGOTTEN Son of God his Father, after whose name he was called—that he was actually begotten of God his Father by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Here then, in the denial of Joseph himself, by his own acts, that he was the natural father of Jesus, we have the most positive and [illegible] testimony, for he was a just man" and therefore an honest man.

But in addition to this we have the testimony of Mary herself, the mother of Jesus, saying, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" Then we have the angel's answer to Mary's question as to how it should be, viz: "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee: THEREFORE that which shall be begotten, shall be called the Son of God." Stronger and more positive testimony against any false theory, could not be than this against the abominable Josephite notion.

PREACHING THE KINGDOM.

Only a very small proportion of the prophecies is taken up in delineating the sufferings of the Christ, but a very large proportion is taken up in delineating the glory and blessedness of his reign. Why should we reverse this order in our preaching? Why should we dwell chiefly on the Savior's humiliation, and but seldom speak of his exaltation as king? Let it not be thought for a moment that we undervalue his work at his first Advent; for without his death, without the great sacrifice for sin, and his being raised up again, there could be no forgiveness of sin, no resurrection of the dead, no future kingdom, no future glory. The glorious kingdom will be the result of his submission to the death of the cross. Without the latter, the former could not be. Throughout eternity we shall have cause to give thanks to God that Jesus became the propitiation for our sins; but while we dwell upon this, and show the value and preciousness of this, let us follow the example of the sacred writers in dwelling chiefly on that which is accomplished and secured for us by the atonement. When upon the cross Christ poured out his soul unto death, he sealed the covenant; but when he comes again and reigns as King, the blessings of the covenant will be bestowed and enjoyed.

The humiliation, the sufferings, and the death of Jesus are made far more prominent than his future exaltation and glory and triumph as King, and the sufferings of Jesus were and [illegible] to an end. The end—the glory that is to be reached, therefore, and the submission to the death, parents should have the first [illegible] ing. We do not [illegible] Brother J[illegible] tidings, if we keep [illegible] kingdom is established [illegible] open, his blood-bought Advent Church, his washed people, are united [illegible] the rulership, that his soul [illegible] from it [illegible] fied. It is only then that [illegible] desires and longings of [illegible] be completely realized. It is [illegible] then that the eternal purpose of [illegible] is developed and perfected.

It is not until the second Advent that salvation, in the fullest sense of the word, will be completed. The work accomplished on the cross and by the resurrection of Jesus, and by his intercession as our Advocate, will be consummated at his coming again. The work of this age is the work of preparation for the next. The resurrection of the saints does not take place, and consequently their reward is not given, till the parousia of Jesus. The restoration of Israel is not accomplished, and through them wonderful blessings are not given to the nations, till the second Advent. The great and perfect salvation, the complete deliverance is to be realized at the ushering in of the Millennial day. The superstructure is begun, and is being reared on a firm basis, but the finishing, the crowning is when Jesus comes again. Those, therefore, who do not preach the second Advent, do not preach more than half the Gospel. They withhold from the people a large proportion of the glad tidings.

Some dwell so exclusively on the blessings to be enjoyed now and the happiness and glory of the separate state, or unclothed state, that they do nothing like justice to the great work of redemption. Redemption includes the resurrection of the body, the restitution of the Davidic kingdom, the restoration of all things, the co-heirship of the saints with Christ, and their ruling with him over the nations. These things are almost generally passed over in silence; they receive but little attention. Though much is made of them in the Word, but little is made of them in many books and sermons. Indeed, some dwell so largely on the disembodied soul being crowned and glorified and rewarded immediately after death, that it seems to us they must undervalue the resurrection. But it should be remembered that though the soul may consciously survive the death of the body, and may have life and rest and hope in Christ, as some believe, it is not crowned and rewarded till the resurrection. Paul

This concluded the exercises of the Conference. Good order, good attendance, and a good feeling generally prevailed throughout the entire meeting. All seemed to enjoy themselves and we considered it one of the best meetings that we have attended.

H. L. PERRY, Sec.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God will convene at Dutton, Kent Co. Mich., Friday, June 17, and last over the following Sunday, the Lord willing, in connection with the dedication of the new church. Bro. R. S. Driggins of Indiana, will be with us during the Conference, also other preaching brethren. We cordially invite, and expect a general rally of God's children present. Come, brethren, come and come praying, for we cannot expect God's blessings unless we ask for them. A few more reunions under Satan's rule, and then, O brethren, Christ is welcome smiles, when we can see the King in his beauty, when the cross shall be exchanged for the crown of victory, where the pearly gates will stand ajar [illegible] the faithful, pass through upon the golden streets of the new Jerusalem, as I along the river of life, among the neverdying flowers of Paradise. Then my brethren, my sisters, be faithful to the cause a little longer, and your cares and labors lay aside, and let us at the Conference meet and humbly bow at Jesus' feet, and by the strength that he will impart, change the vilest sinner's heart.

[illegible] Conference Report.

The thirtieth Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference was held in the Christian Church at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., commencing Thursday evening, June 2, 1887, and holding over the following Sunday.

The meeting was called to order by President E. Hoyt. Exercises opened by singing and prayer.

Introductory discourse by Brother E. Hoyt, from 1 Peter i. By request Brother Joel A. Simonds followed with appropriate remarks from the same chapter.

L. H. Obesebrough, G. B. Myers and C. H. Richardson were appointed as committee on arrangements.

It is only then that [illegible] Brother John Bowers took desires and longings of [illegible] A. C. WEST.

[illegible] be completely realized. It is [illegible] then that the eternal purpose of [illegible] is developed and perfected.

It is not until the second Advent [illegible] ONLY THIRTY CENTS.

Next on the [illegible] Western comes in sight. [illegible] Chase, L. H. Obesebrough and [illegible] and J. Watkins) reports were called for. The work reported as having been done was [illegible] but little.

A report from the churches was next in order. But very few were represented and of those only two or three reported as being in anything like an organized or prosperous condition.

Next was the election of officers which resulted as follows: Brother E. Hoyt, President, Grand Rapids; H. L. Perry, Secretary, Mendon; William McGrodan, Treasurer, Dutton. The following brethren were elected as Executive Board, viz, L. O. Chase, L. H. Obesebrough and A. K. Richardson.

Article II. was amended by substituting the word "six" for thirteen members of the Executive Board.

At a meeting of the Executive Board the following brethren were chosen as Evangelists, viz., L. O. Chase, L. H. Obesebrough, Wm. McCrodan, E. Hoyt and J. Watkins.

In the evening, Brother L. O. Chase gave an able discourse from these words, "And all flesh shall see the salvation of God." Luke iii. 6.

Sunday morning we met at 9 a. m. for a social meeting of an hour and a half. A goodly number of the brethren were present and nearly all gave testimony concerning their faith in the gospel of the kingdom.

At 10:30 a. m. Brother L. O. Chase preached a discourse from the words, "Comparing spiritual things with spiritual." 1 Cor. ii 13.

At 12:00 m. Brother E. Hoyt spoke from John xiii, 34, 35, followed by Brother Joel A. Simonds.

After this discourse the congregation was dismissed. The brotherhood remained and partook of the Lord's Supper which was observed with due solemnity.

At 7:30 p. m. Brother L. O. Chase gave a discourse from Isa. xiv. 12.

KEARNEY.—At Millbrook, May 4th, Sister Jane, wife of Brother George Kearney, and oldest child of the late Brother Peter and Caroline Decker, aged nearly 34 years.

THE COMING AGE.

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. T. WESTHEE.—

This is a delicious book of surpassing rural charm. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It combines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses in wonderful clear hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $1.00. Send to this office for this work.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the second resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for Scriptural

Cannot Women do the Work of an Evangelist?

An Evangelist is a publisher of glad tidings. A name given to those which went from place to place to preach the gospel. Or to spread the good news of a risen Savior, and of the glorious kingdom to come. Now that women worked as evangelists, or helped the evangelists I will endeavor to show. In Rom. xvi, we find that Phebe was a servant of God, and that she was a successor (or helper) of Paul, also of many others. There was Priscilla who was a helper in Christ, who with her husband was willing to die for Paul, or as Paul quotes it, who have for my life laid down their own necks. Paul says, salute Mary who labored much for us. (Diaglott). Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa those sisters laboring in the Lord. (Diaglott). Also salute Persis the beloved, which labored much for the Lord. Now it seems from these passages that the women in those days were evangelists (or helped the evangelists) and labored much for the cause of Christ, or for the spreading of the gospel of Christ, our dear Savior.

We find that Peter on the day of Pentecost spoke of a prophecy which said, your daughters should prophesy, and by turning to Acts xxi. 9, we find four daughters of one man that did prophesy. That shows that the prophecy was fulfilled. Now if women could prophesy, which they did, I think they would also make good evangelists, which I think they will without a doubt.

I will now show by turning to the 3rd chapter of Gal. that women are heirs of the promise just the same as men. Commencing on the 26th verse reading to the close of the chapter, reads as follows: For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Now we see from these verses that women as well as men were required to have faith and baptism in order to become heirs with Christ to the glorious promises made to faithful Abraham.

In looking over the past history of the church, since the days of the apostles, down to the present time, especially in the last few centuries, we find many women taking a very active part in the ministry, or as evangelists in spreading the gospel. Now in the last few years we find some preaching the near coming of Christ. As did sister Mansfield and sister Seymore a few years ago, they were both able teachers, and now at the present time we have many dear sisters that are not only able but willing to help spread the glad tidings of the glorious kingdom soon to come. And dear brethren and sisters let us all help spread the truth as it is in Jesus, and we will soon receive that precious crown which is eternal life through our blessed Savior, and get to reign with him in that glorious and everlasting kingdom which shall never end, where there is no sickness, sorrow, pain, nor death, but where every thing will be grand and beautiful, nothing to hurt or annoy, but all will be peace and happiness through endless ages. Let us all be faithful and do our duty, is my prayer.

ROBERT RAILSBACK.

"Must all Evangelical Work be done by the Preachers?"

"For as we have many members in one body, and all the members have not the same office: so we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophesy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering: or he that teacheth on teaching; or he that exhorteth on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth with diligence; he that sheweth mercy with cheerfulness." Rom. xii. 4-8.

The lessons here taught by the apostle, are quite plain; we all have a work to perform, though possessing different gifts or talents, there is something for each to do, and a way to do it. With an organization or society, religious, political, or otherwise, the success of that body depends, not alone on its presiding officer, but on all the members working harmoniously together, and the greater their efforts, the better the success: the cause is of like interest to all, and the promised blessings, or rewards will be shared alike by all the faithful believers and workers. A soldier enlisting in defence of his flag and country, through purely patriotic motives, needs no urging or persuading by the captain to keep him in the line of duty; but rather the love of the cause, will not only prompt him to endure the privations, fatigues and hardships of a soldier's life, and inspire him to deeds of valor and heroism; but will be an incentive to him to endeavor to persuade and enlist others in the same glorious cause, and give them aid and encouragement, to cheer them on in the Fac of duty. So with the soldier in the Christian warfare, enlisted under the "blood stained banner of the cross of Christ," the inducements, "Everlasting life in the kingdom of God;" "angels equals," "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," and kindred promises are so grand and glorious, so soul-inspiring, that he needs no persuading or exhorting, by evangelist or preacher to keep him actively engaged in the glorious work; but rather, he will turn evangelist himself, and do all in his power, in his own quiet way (though feeble it may be) to induce others to enlist in the same glorious cause. It does not necessarily follow, that we should have the command of language and eloquence of a Paul at Athens, or before King Agrippa, we may possess some of the talents of the "sweet singer of Israel," and with the soul-inspiring strains of music, both vocal and instrumental, [illegible] melody in the heart unto the Lord," Eph. v. 19, [illegible] worshiping one another in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord with grace in your hearts," Col. iii. 16. He [illegible] for his wonderful [illegible] of men.

Eternal life, Eternal life,
We have it through our Savior,
Eternal life, Eternal life,
O, come and live forever,

may touch the strong heart that could be reached in no other way. Or while we may not possess this gift, nor the talent to portray in burning words of eloquence before an audience, we may be able in our quiet simple way, to select Bible subjects, "compare Scripture with Scripture," give Bible talks, illustrated by chart or blackboard or otherwise, and in this way aid much in furthering on the glorious cause of our Heavenly Father.

Timothy iv. 3 and 4th verses says, "For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts, shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Was there ever a time when this prophecy of the apostle Paul was more fully verified than now? Is it not a fact that the largest audiences are to be found where fine oratory and rhetoric are to be heard, to the exclusion of the "Gospel of the kingdom of God?" The custom now is, to employ a fine orator at a big salary, who can satisfy the "itching ear," with a fine flow of words, couched in such guarded language that their senses will not be shocked by the cutting words of our Savior, in reproof of their evil deeds. Too much gospel will not do. "For they will not endure sound doctrine," they do not wish to hear of "life only in Christ," of a coming Savior, of "Jesus being seated on the restored throne of his father David on Mount Zion in Jerusalem," That prophecy of Isaiah, "The law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," etc., when universal peace, prosperity, docility, and happiness shall reign supreme, has no charms for the general masses of today, it is too plain, simple and literal, "and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables," the fable "thou shalt not surely die," and the dogma of the immortality of the soul, etc., sounds more sweet than the language of the good old patriarch Job, who says, "their rest together is in the dust." "But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" we have a glorious gospel, glorious because of its simplicity, of its reality and of its being so easily understood and taught. It may be taught in the scholarly eloquence of rhetoric and oratory, or in the simple language of the humble peasant; it is the same sweet story of "Jesus and his love," of a coming Savior, of a re-living again of all the dead, and the translation of the living saints; of the consummation of the Lord's prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." May we all aid in the noble work of teaching this glorious gospel, by our preaching, by our teaching, by our singing and by our praying, and in every way that we can command, until "the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled," and we hear that welcome plaudit, "well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make the ruler over many, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

E. K. Barnhill.

Bible Readings.

Dear Brother Driggins:

Yours inviting me to furnish a paper on the above theme to be read at our conference, came duly at hand, but a multitude of cares and duties have prevented the preparation of a paper at all worthy of the occasion. I cannot do more than to suggest thoughts which may be ably elaborated in the oral discussion upon the subject.

The importance of the work cannot well be over-estimated. Bible reading, whether in public or in private, is of inestimable value when properly done, but it is not a charm which purifies mens' hearts and lives, independent of their own thoughts and actions.

The Bible differs from other books, in that [illegible] he, not only intellectually [illegible] spiritually discerning [illegible] give the full benefit [illegible] capable of imparting. The [illegible] receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned," 1 Cor. ii. 14.

The question worthy of our best thoughts and most prayerful efforts is how to attain the high spiritual condition alluded to by the apostle in the 15th verse, "But he that is spiritual judgeth all things."

The methods of Bible reading in public so far as I know are two. 1st. The reading of a chapter with running comments upon what seem to be the most important points. This method is comparatively easy, and if well done, it is instructive and beneficial. 2nd. The selecting of a subject and the reading of all the texts in both the Old and New Testaments which bear directly upon it. This plan requires more preparation, but it has also the advantage of being more beneficial, as the mind can more clearly grasp a subject treated in this way. Both methods have been pursued in my Bible class of adults during the last few months. The easier method being resorted to as a change, after the other had been pursued all winter. Questions are always in order, and should be, at the close of all informal Bible readings, but the querist should be careful to confine himself, not only to the subject, but also to the main features of the subject, and anything like controversy, should be most carefully avoided. Speculations as to what God is going to do outside of his revealed will, are always unprofitable. God has told us what he wished us to know, and we may safely leave the completion of his designs in his own faithful and competent hands.

On the question of subjects it seems to me, that we as a people need carefully prepared and published documents which can be used for worship in localities where there is no minister. A beautiful responsive service, or several of them adapted to various occasions, might be arranged, and used to great advantage in school houses and private dwellings, for meetings of God's little ones who are comparatively isolated.

A Praise service might be one theme. Thanksgiving may be another. Comfort in affliction and trial, another. Doctrinal subjects might be interspersed and occasionally used, but only one theme at time, and perhaps the burden of such meetings should be praise and devotion, stimulating a constant effort to follow more faithfully in the footsteps of the Master, and cultivating His pure and obedient spirit of submission to the will of the Father.

How much for instance we need a funeral service, so that words of hope and comfort can be read to the mourning hearts, even by one of their neighbors. How well we all know that there is no consolation in earth's darkest hour except in the golden promises of God. Human sympathy is very dear and very sweet, but it fails to reach and heal the heartache which hovers above the open grave, while the glory-lit promises of God, reach down into its darkest depths and hold the dear one in loving clasp until that glad triumphant morning, when death shall be no more.

Then let these golden promises be grouped together, with all their genuine consolation, into a funeral service, which can be used in the desert or upon the mountain top, or out in the cabin of the brave pioneer. Let careful selections from God's Word interspersed with Scriptural hymns, bring comfort to the mourning heart, by pointing to him who holds the keys of the grave, to him who has illumined its dark portals by passing through its gates, even to him who is the resurrection and the life.

The vital need of the hour is practical thought, practical effort, and practical work. What we as a people, as well as every other people need, is the knowledge of our duty for today, and the grace and patience to do it. The Book is our resource for information, and we must abide strictly by its teachings.

It is often easier to see another's duty than it is to see our own, but the Bible is explicit in precept and illustration, and sometimes it presents requirements which humanly is too [illegible] to perform as guided by him who is the help of the helpless.

For instance, our Master forgave his tormentors even while enduring the agonies of the cross at their hands, and we as his faithful followers, must forgive our enemies even while they persist in their deadly work. We must forgive them while they drive the cruel nails of torture through our quivering hands and feet, even while they thrust the spear of wrong into our crushed and bleeding hearts. If we cannot do this for his dear sake, we cannot be loyal to the King that we are pledged to follow through the dark night of suffering to a crown that so surely lies beyond.

The Christian warfare is not a holiday parade, it is self-denial, self-reproof, self-discipline, self-conquering. It is not a physical warfare, nor an intellectual battle-ground, where one set of ideas contends with another for the championship. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

Our battle-ground is unseen by mortal eyes and the muffled feet of the combatants give forth no sound. Right is struggling against might, love against selfishness, and duty against temptation. The conflict goes silently and fiercely on. Through storm and sunshine, in noonday glare or beneath the cold star light, the tide of battle ebbs and flows. The fight is close and doubtful, no man can fight it successfully alone for he must contend against himself. He needs the whole armor of God, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit which is the word of God. Let our Bible readings then, be mainly practical and helpful, that we may contend successfully against the love of self, the love of ease, the love of money, the love of form, and the love of power. Far away in the distance stands the glory-crowned mountains, and at their feet is the fair river of life. Hope is pointing to victory, and help is near at hand. The Lord of hosts stands ready to vindicate the right. The God of battles has pledged himself to assist every soldier that calls for his aid. When worn by trial and borne down by temptation, he has only to call for reinforcements, and faith comes near in robes of victory, while hope unveils a gleaming crown. Soon the warfare will all be over, and the victors will meet in glad reunion on the banks of the beautiful river.

Evangelization.

Raise a fund sufficient to pay one or two general evangelists to go out into localities where the gospel (as we understand it) has but little if ever been preached. Work to commence about the first of Oct., and continue until the first of May, or longer, if sufficient funds is raised. It shall be the duty of the evangelist (or evangelists) to organize churches wherever they are successful in gathering in a sufficient number of believers to do so. Teaching them that it is not hearers only but doers of the word that have the promise of being saved. Encourage every good brother and sister that has even one talent, to go to work in their own vicinities, hold meetings in church houses, school houses, private houses, in fact any suitable place where there is any prospect of going good. Always conduct meetings in a solemn, earnest way, by singing, praying earnestly to God for assistance and guidance. Select some plain Bible subject, (having previous arranged a few plain Scripture evidences) present the message in as clear and brief a manner as possible, telling the people of this age what they must do to be saved.

Where there is no one to take the lead as a proclaimer, let the church meet at stated times, inviting their friends and neighbors to meet with them. Open these meetings by singing, prayer, and reading of the Scriptures. Study the bible by subjects, and if possible have all present take a part, avoid heated discussion but compare Scripture with Scripture, this [illegible] teach, [illegible] parts of divine [illegible] as our present duty [illegible] to his faithful children. [illegible] large amount of tracts and books on the various subjects of our faith, put them into the hands of brethren or sisters, (sisters preferred) to canvass and sell as many as they can, and wherever they find any one that will read but has not quite interest enough to buy, give them a tract such as, "A letter to a friend," take subscription for THE RESTITUTION, send out none but faithful workers, and I feel sure that great good might be accomplished by these silent proclaimers of God's Message to fallen man.

The Study of the Bible.

"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." "The life is more than meat."

"All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass: the grass withereth, the flower thereof fadeth, but the word of God abideth forever: and it is this word which by the gospel has been preached unto us."

"All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of the grass." He comes up like a flower; he gathers to himself riches; he glories in his power; but the years silver his head, steal away his strength; and lay him like the grass, in the dust. His wisdom, his power and his wealth, are but naught; his glory, evanescent as the flower of the grass. But "the word of God abideth forever, and it is this word which by the gospel has been preached unto us."

It is by heeding this word, that we too may abide forever. In and through the Scriptures, we have eternal life. They testify of Jesus. They tell us of the only name given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved. They teach us how to flee from the coming wrath: how to lay up a good foundation against the time to come, how to become wise unto salvation.

Then the question as to "how we shall study the Bible" becomes one of paramount importance not only to the child of God, but to those who are ignorant of the way of life. To the latter class, I shall first address my remarks. If desirous of learning what you must believe and do in order to be saved what course shall you pursue? How and where shall you begin the study of the word? How make sure of the Truth? How find for yourself the pearl of great price? How settle to your own satisfaction whether this or that doctrine is so? How learn to rid yourself of a constantly accumulating debt that you can never pay? Take up a reference Bible, have a good concordance at hand, and begin with the word truth. Turning to (Deut. xxxii. 4, you will see that God is "a God of truth," to (Psalm xlv. 4) that he desires truth in the inward parts: (cxliii. 3) and that it is God's light and truth that alone can guide us to his holy hill. From Sam. xii. 24, you will learn that if you would fear and serve the Lord, you must serve him in truth with all your hearts, from Psalms xxvi. 3, that David walked in his truth; xcix. 4, that his truth, and that only can be your shield and buckler. cxlv. 18, that he is nigh unto all them that call upon him in truth. John iv. 24 will tell you that if you worship the Father, you must worship him in Spirit and in truth; xvii. 17, that it is the truth that sanctifies, and that God's word is truth. Tim. i. 3, that God wants men to come to a knowledge of the truth."

Having gone thus far, and found from Hebrews xi. 6, that without faith it is impossible to please God, your next question will be, "if I must come to a knowledge of the truth and must believe the truth, must obey the truth, worship in truth, serve in truth, what is truth?" "Of all the religious theories in the world, what shall I believe? How satisfy myself whether this or that doctrine is true?" The answer comes back in plain tones, (and precious words they are), "God's word is truth." We have not to worry "about these commandments and doctrines of man," but first to go to the Bible, and see what it says. Knowing [illegible] or death hangs on the issue. [illegible] forevermore, if we find the [illegible] and obey the truth; and [illegible] if we receive not the love of the truth. God has told us so and so, and to please him, we are to believe it, that is what it is to have faith, and faith comes by hearing.

Paul says in Rom. i. 16. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. The gospel then is the power that God uses to save people. It is salvation to every one that believes it (because if really and truly believed it will be obeyed, its precepts will be carried out in the life, it will be faith made alive by practice). Jesus told his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel, he that believed it and was baptized should be saved, while they who refused to believe it when heard, and refused to be baptized, should be condemned, just as a criminal is condemned who has committed murder and has been tried and proven guilty.

Having found out so much, you will take up the word Gospel, and will see that it is glad tidings of a kingdom, of which Jesus and his disciples preached wherever they went. Tracing up the word Kingdom, you will find that it is to be located here on this earth and that you, with Christ, if believing and obedient, are to have a share in a coming reign.

You will look out all the promises made to Abraham and through him to Christ, and through Christ to you. Then you will take the same course as to the words repentance, and justification, and on the question of human destiny, and of Christian duty. If in earnest God will bless you and lead you into all truth, and will give you a place in his glorious and everlasting kingdom. May the word of the kingdom be sown in your hearts and grow and bring forth fruit an hundred fold, is my prayer.

Learn to love the Bible, read it, study it day by day, until it becomes a lamp unto your feet and a light to your path, shining more and more unto the perfect day.

And if the question of "How to study the Bible?" is one of paramount importance to those who are ignorant of the way of life, is it not of just as much importance to those who have entered the narrow way and who are endeavoring to reach the prize that lies at the end of the race?

If we love God, ought we not to love his Book? ought we not to learn all we can of the best means to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth?"

We take up the Bible, it is a book worthy of study, it teaches the way of life, it comes from God: God's words are written here. Its precepts, its commands, are God's precepts, God's commands. Then we are not to study it for mere pleasure, or for the sake of intellectual advancement, but that we may keep in the way, that we may not be turned aside from the truth, but may keep hold of the hope which is our strong consolation, an anchor to the soul both pure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail. God does not want us to continue babes in knowledge. He wants us to abound in knowledge, to be filled with the knowledge of his will, to increase in knowledge, to be renewed in knowledge, to be not barren or unfruitful in knowledge, that we may be able to make known to others the knowledge of his will, and the riches of his grace.

To be able to tell a story we must know the story. We cannot teach what we do not know for certain, and know by heart.

We profess to desire the salvation of others. We want to see people coming to Christ. We want them to come and listen to the truth. We want them to believe it, we feel sad because ears are not found to hear, or if ears, no willing feet to run in the way of righteousness and peace. But is it not our own fault? Is it not because we as a people, are neglecting the study of the Bible? Is it not because we, ceasing to love its pages as we ought, are no longer able to tell the "old, old story" as it should be told?

Oh, my dear brethren and sisters, the Bible is the Book of Life, on it hangs all our hopes, let us not give it up, nor lay it aside for anything else, but be diligent in the study of its pages, that we may be wholly equipped for the service in which we have enlisted.

In the study of grammar, we classify, we separate, we analyze, we go step by step up the rounds of language until we have learned not only the names of the parts of speech, but also the rules that govern the construction of the rounded period and rythmic verse.

We take pains, we go over the ground again and again, until all is as familiar as a nursery song. So it should be with our study of the Bible. We should classify, separate, and analyze. God has not seen fit to do this for us. He wants us to knock, seek, dig, and ask, because this very process fixes in memory the desired knowledge.

We may read the Bible as a whole; chapter by chapter, and verse by verse, or, we may read each book as a whole, but to gain a saving knowledge of divine truth, we must take it up by subjects as we would the science of Philosophy or Chemistry. God has not told us all about any one thing in one chapter or book: he has written a little in this letter, and something more in another, and has left to us the pleasant task of putting it all together, of arraying his witnesses on the stand, and letting each speak in turn for him. It is in this way that we come to the stature of full grown men and women in Christ. We cannot grow without food, and our food as Christians is the life-giving word. It is our meat, the meat that endures unto everlasting life. By partaking of this food, we are purified in life, and are made fit to lead others into the fold. We come to rejoice more and more in the graciously given knowledge, until all our desire is to make known to those around us the love of God, that has sent an only Son to suffer and die on their behalf. To illustrate, we want to know what we shall have if we forsake all and follow Jesus? We take up a concordance, and find "fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Where will that kingdom be? Daniel says, "that the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. The very kingdom that has been ruled by Babylonian, Medo, Persian and Roman, will some day be the kingdom of Christ. In what sense will it belong to the saints? John the Revelator says, he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne. The same course may be taken with any subject and may be varied by beginning at different starting points, dwelling on the meaning of words, and bringing in kindred subjects.

Another way to impress divine truth upon the heart, and to make it a part of the life is this, When in our reading of chapters, any passage particularly impresses us, put beside that passage some other one or two on the same theme, and make them the lesson for the day. So often in our morning lessons, has some phrase or text seemed to stand out from all the rest, as if marked by the hand of God, to be our strength and comfort for the day, and we have paused in the reading and commented upon it, and turned it over and over in our minds, and been thereby drawn nearer to God, and made more fit to come into his presence, and could afterward go about our daily tasks with hearts full of gladness and of gratitude. We think this daily reading of the Word a great help not only in the Christian life, but also in our hours of closer application. Then, when friends come in, we usually have some text at hand to talk about that is fresh and new to us all.

So what is my text for today? should be the question with us all. What has God given me to think about? What message has he put into my mouth to tell? Has my lamp been filled with oil at the great well, and is it burning so that it gives light to all around?

Is it lighting not only my own feet, but is it showing to others the path that leads to endless day?

To become interested in the study of the Bible, we want to use maps of the Bible, we want to follow Jesus from Bethlehem to Bethany, from Bethany to Nazareth. We want to sit with him on the mountains, and talk with him by the sea. We want to see him healing the lepers, and casting out demons, and to make the scenes all real we must have the drapery in which to clothe them.

We can picture it all, when we know where each scene occurred, and what its surroundings were.

We are among the tombs on the Mount of Offence where the lepers hide their home. We see the scorched vegetation and the stony path. We follow them as they go to catch sight of him, the wonderful Nazarene, who can by a word take away their disease. Anon, we pause by the Jordan, and look off to "the old palm lands of Jericho, for here at this lonesome ford, here by this barren steppe, just across on the other shore, once gathered the multitudes who listened to the preaching of John the Baptist. Up there by Jericho, Christ touched the eyes of two blind men and they saw: over on Olivet he ascended in a cloud.

And what brightness it throws around the subject in hand, when we come to paint it for others, if in talking on prophecy we can tell how and when the language was fulfilled. We lose ourselves when we listen to any one who can tell all about such things, and would it not add to our usefulness if we too could know and tell about the wonderful things that God has foretold, and how all has been brought about?

Suppose for example, we take the prophecies in reference to the ancient city of Babylon, that great and powerful city, whose wall towered up like the forest trees, whose provisions were almost inexhaustable and whose supply of water could not be taken away. Who could batter down such a wall? Who force the brazen gates? What army could stand outside until she said, "We starve, we die of thirst, name your terms?"

Yet God predicted that that very city should fall, that it should be a dwelling place for dragons, an astonishment and an hissing without an inhabitant. The language has been literally fulfilled. In your study of the Bible take up history and see. Read the works of travellers that you may wsow what God can do. Babylon has become heaps. It is one vast succession of mounds, it is without an inhabitant, no Arab will pitch his tent there. The land around no more produces the golden harvests—the sower and the reaper are cut off.

Take the same course with the prophecies of Jesus and of John, reading them in connection with all the helps that may come to your hands. Some of the lessons may be difficult but if a pupil wants to please his teacher, and to become fitted for some important place in life, he will study all the harder when he comes to the hard places. He will expect to apply himself with more diligence when he comes to the problems of geometry, and the mysteries of Euclid.

So with us, if we want to please our teacher, if we want to become fitted for teachers and rulers in the coming ages, we must study, study, study. The harder the lesson, the greater the need for application.

The word of God abideth forever, and we want to remember as I said before, that if we are faithful in the study and in the practice of the word, we too may abide forever. So we want to take many ways to gain a knowledge of God's word. We must commit whole chapters to memory, not only for our own comfort and instruction, but that we may have a store of blessed words laid up wherewith to bless and comfort others.

Commit passages on the kingdom, on life and death, on prayer, on hope, and on faith. So that you may be able to give a reason for the hope that is in you, for how can you give a reason for your hope if you have no reason at hand to give.

God wants you to have his words written on the tables of your hearts. He wants you to bind them about your necks, and to have them as frontlets between you eyes. If you are filled with a knowledge of his will, there will be no room for the evil one. You can drive him away with a text.

It is not possible for any one who does not study the Bible to have on the whole armor of God. The sword will not be in the hand, no helmet will protect the head, no girdle of truth be about the loins, no sandals on the feet.

David said, "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against Thee!" Our steps can only be ordered of the Lord, as we come to him in his appointed way, by study of his word, and by a faithful observance of it in our lives.

God help us all to look at this matter as we should, and to feel that if we dislike the Bible and do not care to read it, that it is either because we do not know how to study it, or because we are in great danger.

The day of the Lord is hastening on and we want to be clothed in Christ's righteousness when he comes, so that we may share in his glory.

All other knowledge is vain compared with the knowledge that can save. May we all be sanctified by the truth, is my prayer.

Search the Scrip[illegible] Scriptures dail[illegible] them, feel the bless and b[illegible] to place them in to be glorifi[illegible] repose confidence brought into the gree[illegible]xpect all from them in to his name honor and glory through the everlasting ages. Amen!

"Golden-headed youth and silver-headed age,
Come seek for treasures in the sacred page,
Earthly fountains fail you, hasten to message,
Every grief of childhood, every pang of age."

S. ROXANA WINCH.

Organization of Churches.

The question of church organization ought to concern every lover of good order and the blessed cause of truth. That baptised gospel believers conveniently near one another in any given locality should organize by electing or appointing a plurality of elders, is an obligation based upon divine precept and precedent. Concerning this there is no room for doubt or disagreement unless it is made to rest on the supposition that what was binding in Paul's day is not binding now. This supposition destroys the obligation to preach the gospel, to immerse believers and to assemble for public worship. If the first is not obligatory then the others are not.

That believers in the earlier apostolic days met and worshiped and preached the word and attended to all the affairs pertaining to the body of Christ prior to the appointment of an Eldership in the churches is a fact freely admitted. This they did under that supernatural order of things immediately following our Lord's ascension to heaven when he "gave gifts to men" qualifying some for apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministry or service unto the edifying of the body of Christ (Eph. iv. 7); when everything was done under the impulse of the one spirit with its diversities of gifts and operations and administrations. This does not change the fact of the appointment of elders under the instruction of this same inspired apostle, who gave direction to the church at Corinth how to exercise these supernatural gifts for the good of the body of Christ.

The appointment of an eldership in the different churches was to subserve a divine purpose in the economy of God's grace, and to be continued as a permanent arrangement after the church should come to its unity of faith and knowledge, unto its perfect manhood under the operation of the Holy Spirit. Order must be maintained, the truth be preached, exhortations be given and the work and business of the church attended to properly, after the miraculous has all disappeared or vanished away. In proof of the proposition that elders were appointed in the early Christian churches let us hear Paul: "For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order things that are wanting (margin, left undone) and ordain elders in every city." Titus i. 5. Paul had proclaimed the gospel to the people of this isle of the sea, and then went to Macedonia leaving Titus behind to attend to what was left undone. In every city of this island where men and women had embraced the gospel, elders were to be ordained. In Lystra, Iconium and Antioch Paul and Barnabas ordained elders in every church. A plurality of elders in each church is meant by this language.

Before the apostles had completed their ministry the organization of churches by the appointment of elders had become an established fact, with little ground for questioning throughout the vast Roman Empire as far as Paul and his co-workers had successfully extended their labors. There were elders in the church at Jerusalem. Elders in all the churches of Judea, as the relief sent by the disciples of Antioch was borne by the hands of Barnabas and Saul to the elders of Judea, for the dearth predicted by Agabus extended over the whole land. See Acts xi. 28.

From Miletus Paul sent to Ephesus and called the elders of the church. This was the divine arrangement in Asia Minor. James whose letter was addressed to gospel believers of the twelve tribes scattered abroad, instructs the sick to call for the elders of the church, and Peter writing to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia exhorts the elders which were among them to feed the flock of God.

The same necessity exists today for organization by ordaining elders as existed in Paul's day. The reason for placing each and every church in apostolic times under the oversight of chosen men can be successfully alleged for subordinating the churches of today to the rule, care, instruction, direction and oversight of the eldership. What is every one's business is sure to be neglected. Men must feel the weight of [illegible] before they will carry [illegible] of place and office, [illegible] also. It would be useless to attempt to organize those unorganized believers without some very earnest preliminary work performed by teachers with warmth of heart and wisdom of brain. They must be waked up to a realizing sense of their obligations, be made to feel that divinely imposed duties neglected from year to year and responsibilities shirked under the poor plea that temporal affairs so exhaust time and strength as to make it impossible to attend to spiritual things, will result in their eternal condemnation, that go on through years toiling and accumulating property with the sole view of enjoying it in this fleeting life, or bequeathing it to heirs worthy or unworthy as the case may be, to give them a good start in the world and neglecting to consecrate a part of their wealth to carry the message of love and mercy to dying men and women, will surely bar the entrance to the kingdom against all pursuing such a course.

Organization of believers into permanently active working churches would be easily affected where the love of God and his blessed truth is real and not merely professed, where faith is more than a mere pulseless assent of the intellect to the propositions of the gospel, where it reaches down into the affections and emotions of the heart; where the will is completely subjected to the will of the Great Teacher.

It would be impossible to organize and to keep organized a set of professed Christians whose only satisfaction in the truth comes from their love of debate, of disputation. To carry a point in argument, to gain a victory over an opponent, to demolish an orthodox dogma, is the heighth of their ambition, beyond this, truth does not serve their purpose. Shall we attempt to organize those who profess to love Bible doctrine but give the lie to this profession by neglecting to subscribe for THE RESTITUTION and pay for it, alleging as a reason for their non-patronage of the paper poverty, or quite as often, "I am taking three or four other papers now and these are more than I find time to read." These three or four papers are secular. Lovers of the truth, and also claiming to share the love which the compassionate and loving Lord Jesus bore toward a world of sinners, and yet unwilling to pay two dollars for a paper which bears its weekly messages of light, love and mercy to those who [illegible] lishing for lack of the knowledge that saves eternally.

Shall we organize those who find time to attend County and State fairs and contribute of their means to forward these societies? who find time to travel to distant places for pleasure, amusement and profit, and have not for years, or never, taken the short run up to the Indiana Conference to enjoy the goodly fellowship of the saints, to share in their deliberations, and to consecrate a part of their worldly gains to the furtherance of the work of Christ in its various departments? Organize those who are far more worldly than wise, political than pious, theoretical than practical; who confess that the truth is all important and vital to the question of salvation and have made no effort to have the truth preached for years in their locality, nor to have it proclaimed in the regions beyond; who never meet to worship the God who has blessed them with the bounties of his providence; who have not prayed for so long a time that were they to attempt it the heavens above them would seem to be brass and the earth beneath them iron; who have not sung one of the sweet songs of Canaan for years, till, from want of exercise the musical apparatus fails to respond to the wish of the heart to pour forth in the melody of song?

Such is the sad state of many believers in the State of Indiana, who in the outset ran well, whose profession was more than a sounding brass and tinkling symbol. Over these every lover of our common Lord can but mourn, and for their reconversion earnestly and devoutly pray. To bring about such a reformation as will prepare these scattered brethren for organization, association and work in the one faith is an object worthy of the most prayerful effort and sacrificing labor. On such as shall engage in this work of the day God will pour down his rich blessings. Who will go with the message of love to these neglecters of duty? If they can be made to feel and realize the peril to which they are exposed, to feel that a profession of love to God involves the keeping of his commandments, to see that their discipleship in the beginning was a solemn compact with God the Father to yield up to his service all the talents in their possession at the time they entered the one body, and to continue to improve their capabilities for work in his church as long as mortal life should last, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, abounding in every good word and work and increasing more and in faith and love.

Now if this mighty transformation can be wrought, then organization can be easily effected and churches will continue in their labor of love and work of faith and patience of hope till the Lord comes. The heart thoroughly imbued with the love of God seeks work, must have work and will work. Men with this divine principle in full operation will prepare themselves for service, some for the minor duties, the lesser sphere of Christian life, others for the wider fields of labor to which the brethren may call them. Some with original talents, fitting them for the eldership, and these improved in the school of Christ will be chosen to fill this high and holy office in each congregation. Love will prompt them to do the best they know, inspire them with the desire to learn more and more about the will of the Lord, and with this in view they will become earnest and prayerful students of his word. They would subject their natural and acquired abilities to trial, to repeated trial. We would soon have five exhorters and preachers where we have one now. To the call of the Lord men would say, Here am I, send me, send me. Every congregation should have preaching and exhortation at stated times supplied by some of its own membership or by some one invited from abroad. This is almost, if not quite, absolutely necessary to the continuance of organization.

Is it Desirable and Practicable to hold a National Conference of all our Churches?

This is a question I have thought much about for two years past, and I would be glad if I was able to come to you, or write all the real need and good I think I can see in just such a gathering. We think it is necessary for the good of ourselves and families, to attend daily worship, we know a church soon grows weak and cold spiritually without the weekly worship. We are getting rapidly to understand that without thorough organization, and state church gatherings [illegible] will not grow and [illegible] either financi[illegible] anxio[illegible] and must not be [illegible] remember the Lo[illegible] world besides me and by w[illegible] John and his wife. But to reach the way to this end is what we have been weighing in our own minds for some time, and it seems to me the only way to reach it is in the proposition before us, of a National gathering of ministers and churches. We have many isolated cases that might be found out, an evangelist sent to them, a flourishing church organized in their midst, a Sunday School started to drill others in the light of the blessed hope, missionary societies formed. O, so much, so much might be done if we were all working in unison, and I can see no other way to bring it all about but by the national gathering. We have all felt the power of communion with kindred spirits, have felt how dark the day and how heavy the burdens ahead of us, until lightened by a smile, and a kind, sympathising word from some kindred spirit. A word only had been dropped but it was just what we needed, for it suggested the way out of a plan we were just about to abandon, though it had been cherished with prayers and tears for some worthy object. So it has been with both ministers and churches of our faith. Working hard, sacrificing much, with scarcely one thing to encourage them, only that they were doing their duty.

But I think the time has come when we can see that our duty is not all done, but that ahead of us is a field as yet untouched, long waiting, but of our common Lord can but mourn, and for their reconversion earnestly and devoutly pray. To bring about such a reformation as will prepare these scattered brethren for organization, association and work in the one faith is an object worthy of the most prayerful effort and sacrificing labor. On such as shall engage in this work of the day God will pour down his rich blessings. Who will go with the message of love to these neglecters of duty? If they can be made to feel and realize the peril to which they are exposed, to feel that a profession of love to God involves the keeping of his commandments, to see that their discipleship in the beginning was a solemn compact with God the Father to yield up to his service all the talents in their possession at the time they entered the one body, and to continue to improve their capabilities for work in his church as long as mortal life should last, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, abounding in every good word and work and increasing more and in faith and love.

Now if this mighty transformation can be wrought, then organization can be easily effected and churches will continue in their labor of love and work of faith and patience of hope till the Lord comes. The heart thoroughly imbued with the love of God seeks work, must have work and will work. Men with this divine principle in full operation will prepare themselves for service, some for the minor duties, the lesser sphere of Christian life, others for the wider fields of labor to which the brethren may call them. Some with original talents, fitting them for the eldership, and these improved in the school of Christ will be chosen to fill this high and holy office in each congregation. Love will prompt them to do the best they know, inspire them with the desire to learn more and more about the will of the Lord, and with this in view they will become earnest and prayerful students of his word. They would subject their natural and acquired abilities to trial, to repeated trial. We would soon have five exhorters and preachers where we have one now. To the call of the Lord men would say, Here am I, send me, send me. Every congregation should have preaching and exhortation at stated times supplied by some of its own membership or by some one invited from abroad. This is almost, if not quite, absolutely necessary to the continuance of organization.

The Church, Its Nature and Organization.

The particular question submitted to the writer for response and elucidation is—"How many members are necessary to organize a church, and what steps are necessary to perfect an organization?"

The Greek word—ecclesia, ekklesia—occurs 115 times in the New Testament, and is rendered every time in the Authorized Version by the word church in either the singular or plural number except three times, where it is rendered assembly. Of the 112 times where the term church is employed, it is in the plural number 36 times, and in the singular 76 times. As the literal meaning of the original word may assist us in our inquiries we will give its definition in English from two Lexicographers. Donnegan defines it—"An assembly, of the people of Athens, convoked by heralds, also the place of assembly." This is, of course, the original classical use of the word. Schleusner defines it—"any assembly whether convoked from a promiscuous multitude; whether confused or orderly, whether political or sacred." Considered in its etymology, then this word means any assemblage of persons, greater or smaller, which has been called out from the general population for some social, political, or religious purpose by some proclamation made by a public herald. Our English word church, though remotely derived from the Greek, is etymologically connected with a word of altogether a different signification.

Lexical and trustworthy literary authorities derive the "English word church from the Greek supiakon—kuriakon—used to express the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. xi. 20, and the Lord's Day, Rev. i. 10, whence comes also the Saxon Kyrok and the Scotch Kirk—all meaning the Lord's house, or, literally, the Lord's, i. e. relating to the Lord." This is explained by an author by saying—"The Gothic Nations, receiving the Gospel from the Greeks, took most of their ecclesiastical words from the Greek tongue." Beginning with the history and development of the church, and taking the inspired New Testament account for our guide, we find that a congregation of believers had been called out by the [illegible] history of our Lord Jesus [illegible] and that the number was about [illegible] and twenty. It appears [illegible], commissioned by the [illegible] ascension into heaven, [illegible] with this church and [illegible]cio, the oversight thereof. A feature in church management is particularly noticeable right here at the very commencement of church history, which is, that in choosing an apostle to fill the place of Judas, the whole church acted in the election: which demonstrates that any such thing as a close corporation consisting of officials alone, acting independently of the congregation, finds no warrant, in the practice of this Jerusalem Church composed of members taught by Christ himself, and at that time under the oversight of the eleven apostles whom he had specially instructed. When the day of Pentecost was fully come, we find this assembly once more together in one place. As it is not our object to enter into details aside from the strict line of church development it suffices to state that in consequence of the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, in its miraculous gifts, and of the wonderful arguments of the Apostle Peter in his thrilling discourse, three thousand persons were baptised and added to the true Mother Church at Jerusalem. Of this church it is said that "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and prayers." As the church continues praying the apostles continue preaching and working miracles, till we soon learn that the number was about five thousand. Persecution soon ensues, but the apostles go to their own company, and again, and hold a prayer meeting, and "when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spoke the word of God with boldness." When we next notice the increase it is "believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women."

It was not till after the martyrdom of Stephen, and a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem that the proclamation of the gospel was made in other localities, and it is not till Peter had preached the word of faith to Cornelius and his house, and the conversion of Paul that we begin to get more definite conceptions of church constitution and organization. In prosecuting his first missionary journey Paul, in company with Barnabas, preached in several cities in Western Asia, and many believed. The history that sums up the completion of the labors of Paul and his fellow-workers will give us important information relative to the question before us. The history is to this effect. "The next day he (Paul) departed with Barnabas to Derbe. And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they, commended them to the Lord on whom they believed." Acts xiv. 20-23. From this quotation we get an accurate idea of church organization. Paul and Barnabas proclaimed the gospel to the public in these several cities. Some of those who heard believed, and accepted the message, and became associated together as an assemblage of converted or called-out ones. Such an assemblage becomes organized when elders are elected from among their own number and ordained. It will be noted that these churches are independent bodies. Each church having its own elders. As to the number constituting any one of these particular churches there is nothing said. From Acts xv. 4, 6, 22, we learn that, although the church at Jerusalem had the inspired apostles, commissioned by the Lord Jesus Christ himself, as teachers and guides, this church had also elders, and that in the discussion of a question of paramount importance, not only the apostles and elders were connected with its authorative settlement for all time, but the "whole church," "the brethren," were joined with them with "one accord." "The apostles and elders and brethren" all join in sending out a circular letter that has become a part of sacred Scripture: as its contents and teachings "seemed good to the Holy Ghost" as well as to that Mother church of "apostles, elders, and brethren." To become more accurately acquainted with church organization a quotation from Acts xx. 17, 28 will be very appropriate. These verses read:—"And from Miletus he (Paul) sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church." Passing over the intervening verses v. 28, says—addressing these same elders—"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Here we meet with a new term—Gr. episcopos—Episcopos—which means an overseer, and is used as a term to explain the elder's duty rather than suggesting some new and higher office in the church. It will be noted that as there is a plurality of the elders in this particular church that these elders constitute the same plurality of overseers, or bishops as the word is translated in other places. As this word Episcopos is used only five times in the New Testament Greek, it may be best to make a special reference to each particular case. The first use of the word has just passed in review before us. The next occurrence of the term is Phil. i. 1, which reads:—"Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." The Syriac has Elders in this verse and Wakefield gives the Greek word its proper meaning, by translating it overseers in this place in his version. Observe that there is also a plurality of these overseers connected with this church. The next place where we find this term is 1 Tim. iii. 2—"A Bishop must be blameless, etc." Wakefield renders that word in this place "overseer," and the Syriac has "Elder." For those conversant with the English Version only, it may be said that the word bishop in the first verse is from another kindred term, meaning not the overseer, but his work of superintendence, or oversight. Wakefield's reading of these two verses is—"If one desire the office of an overseer in the church, he wisheth for an honorable employment. This overseer then must be blameless," etc. The Syriac, being a version of the greatest authority, reads—"It is a faithful saying, that if a man desireth the eldership, he desireth a good work. And an elder ought to be such that no blame can be found in him." The next place where the term is found is Titus i. 7,—reading, "a bishop must be blameless," etc. Wakefield renders the word overseer here also, and the Syriac has Elder as in other places. We are able to prove that Episcopos designates the same office as Elder by comparing this seventh verse with the preceding fifth verse, which reads: "For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Taking both verses together we learn that the elders are the very persons explained individually by the term Episcopos or overseer. Observe that a plurality of these Elders, or superintendents, is supposed to be connected with each city church, as in other places. In the next and last use of the word, 1 Pet. ii. 25, it applies to the Messiah "as the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls" in Peter's address to the brethren. Wakefield renders, even this place, "Shepherd and guardian" and the Syriac has a word so different that Murdock translates "Shepherd and Curator of your souls."

When speaking of an association of brethren and sisters in any particular city it is spoken of as the church of that city; as the church of God at Corinth, the church of the Thessalonians, etc.; when speaking of a province the expression is changed, and becomes to the churches of Galatia and the churches of Macedonia. There is however another form of expression used which is calculated to give us the impression that congregations, or churches of believers, were not always by any means composed of a large number of persons. In his epistle to the Romans, among others, he sends greetings to Priscilla and Aquila and to the church that is in their house. This expression of a church in connection with the house of the persons, or person where the congregation met is found in three other places. This shows two things—first, that the brethren at the first had no public places for convening together such as Meeting Houses; and, secondly, that these congregations might have been comparatively small so far as numbers are concerned. We briefly direct attention to one point more. When the church at Jerusalem became so numerous that it was necessary for the apostles to have assistance, they gave directions to the church to choose out seven men to help in a sort of subordinate sphere. Other churches were organized on this plan, and so we have another office created in order to complete a church organization. The persons that fill this place are known as deacons.

The conclusion we arrive at then from our hasty sketch is—that a church is a number of obedient believers of the gospel message, in any locality, consenting and agreeing to associate, and meet together for mutual edification, and also to hold forth the word of life to others, and who,—taking the New Testament teaching for the guide—select and duly appoint and ordain both Elders and Deacons. The administration of the ordinances, as a matter of course and of good order devolves on these persons so set apart for this purpose.

How to Interest the Young People in Religious Matters.

We are all familiar with the boasted assertion of the Roman Church: "Give me your children until they are fourteen and then you may have them." First impressions are most lasting. Daily examples of this universal fact are presented before us. Of what does the aged talk and dream when the curtain of life is slowly withdrawing from his vision? Not of happenings of his last years, but the joys and sorrows of childhood and early youth. Gems of poetry, snatches of song and golden words of inspiration have I seen brought forth from the memory of far away childhood, to light the pathway of a venerable Christian woman through the dark valley. I have seen the last years of a man whose thoughts only reverted to selfish deeds, and whose only words were revilings against the Providence which had heaped many unmerited blessings upon him. Every one of us perhaps can look back, if prone to do so, and see at some point an influence which in a great measure shaped our future career. Perhaps a word from the right source may accidentally, or shall I say Providentially, have done for some of us what has only been impressed upon others through years by some patient, guiding hand.

The person who wishes to lead the young aright must search diligently into the hidden springs of human nature. Physical nature has given endless variety in leaf and tree, cloud and flowret. But in nothing has she equalled the variety of man's organization and disposition. Infinite are the sources of influencing him for good or evil. Youth naturally likes gayety and joyousness. We must take into account the love of play which every child possesses, and not try to overburden him with the awfulness of human destiny, while at the same time he should be made to feel that he is a part of the grand whole of existence and must share in its work and responsibilities. Give him something to do, and above all encourage and assist him in finding duties of his own accord. The question of much anxious thought to us, as a people, is, what are the things to be done. We have no foreign or home missionary work in which to engage. No organized societies of any kind through which the young may expend their zeal and energy in the good cause.

It has been the practice among us to entirely ignore the younger members of the church so far as practical work is concerned. Not only has this been noticeably true as regards public services, but I am sorry to say in the home circle it is even more marked. How seldom if ever do we see the young people taking any interest in Bible conversations. I have attended conferences where the older ones were garnering much strength for future usefulness by Christian communion with each other, while the children were either present, silent and uninterested, or more frequently absent seeking more amusing entertainment. I think this greatly due to the fact that so little of our converse has been upon practical, tangible subjects, within the comprehension of the children. But more is due to the fact that so few of us take pains to draw them into the conversation.

How many of us, brethren and sisters, make it a duty as well as pleasure to make the acquaintance of each and every child in every house we enter? Do we try to find them at their best? Do we make an effort to drop a word personally which shall be for the upbuilding of character? Do we do it in simplicity and indirectly? In such a manner as not to be repulsive? Do we allow ourselves to be instant in season as often as out of season? Or do we approach them with condescension or fault finding? We must come down to their plane and walk hand in hand with them through the delightful fields of youthful thought and endeavor. The world around us is teeming with evidences of God's handiwork. It is only a step from the contemplation of nature to nature's God.

Paul reminds us that milk is food for babes and meat for man. I have sometimes thought that in practice we mistake water for milk in the mental food provided for the young. I am convinced that the mental vigor of the age is being lessened by the insipid [illegible] bands of [illegible] be[illegible] wi[illegible] attemp[illegible] de[illegible]tisement, until [illegible]ppetite is formed for sensational reading, which it is very difficult in after years to eradicate. Brethren and sisters we are responsible for this. It is not enough to banish all poisonous and unhealthy literature from our midst, but we must in its place provide healthy life-giving food for the expanding minds of our little ones.

It is not only possible but very easy to create in the minds of the young a love for the best authors. History, when presented in the form of biography and sketch may become as interesting to the young as romance. The history of great men and great deeds when read philosophically has much to do in moulding the thoughts and future actions of the reader. The Bible cannot be understandingly read without a knowledge of contemporary history, geography and literature. The American people read too much and too superficially. Thoreau advises well when he says, "Read not the 'Times' but the 'Eternities.'" Teach your young people to read the eternities and yourself read with them from its golden pages, and you will find in it an inspiration which shall bear fruit an hundred fold. The young members of the church would be more active and manifest more interest were there more meetings expressly for the young, and conducted wholly by them. They can not develop without exercising their powers. One evening of each week might and should be devoted to assembling for prayer, praise, Bible reading or social intercourse. Great good may be accomplished in this way. The efforts of a little child may be crowned with grand results.

It would promote the interest among the young if they could be induced to contribute short letters or productions to THE RESTITUTION. Normal classes in Bible study have proven very successful in other churches, why may they not be made to do so among us? Much must be known about the Bible in its historical character to fortify the mind against the snares of infidelity.

A good field of work is open to our young church members in supporting an evangelist. I think at least one home missionary in Indiana could be kept constantly in the field through the united efforts of the young people under twenty years of age. In order to accomplish this it will be necessary to organize a young people's association. This could easily be done and meet as a branch of the General Conference. Special sermons or services especially for the instruction of the young are absolutely unheard of in our churches.

Year by year we have come to this place, so endeared to us all by memories and associations connected with our blessed hope. But I can not in all the years since its venerable walls were reared, call to mind a sermon or a service exclusively devoted to the children or young people. I am tempted to venture the assertion that such a thing has never occurred. Of one thing I am quite certain, I have never heard such a sermon by one of our ministers in all my life, and but very few that were within the comprehension of the child mind, while many are preached over the heads of those who are supposed to have put away childish things. Grand results would be accomplished if at least one fourth of the time were given to the young.

It seems scarcely necessary to mention that greatest of all blessings to childhood, the Sunday School, but some of our brethren do not seem impressed with its paramount importance. Many of their children do not attend where they are organized and in many of our congregations no effort is made to sustain one. Here is a broad field for youthful members of the church to work, when timidity might prevent attempting public work in church meetings. Here is the place to begin with evangelistic work. Encourage to bring others into the fold.

There is a subject which requires delicate handling, which affects both old and young,—the social feeling and habits of the different congregations. As far as possible and consistent with other duties, social intercourse should be maintained. In a certain sense each member should consider himself his brother's keeper. The injunction to bear one another's burdens can not be observed without a knowledge of those burdens. Frequent social gatherings for the avowed purpose of learning more of each other, for conversation and home enjoyments greatly promote the interest of church work when judiciously managed.

The Bible is full of beautiful lessons and examples which appeal to the child understanding. Moses in the [illegible] never-failing text of interest. Around this may be built the whole fabric of God's Providential care for his chosen people, and connected with it the sisterly love of the little girl who stood afar off to witness what would be done with him.

The early dedication of children to the service of the Lord is beautifully shown in Hannah, who said, "Therefore also I have lent him to the Lord." The proverb "The glory of young men is their strength," is shown in the history of the youthful Samson. And again, "Better is a poor and wise child than an old and foolish king who will no more be admonished." The wisest of all men seemed to appreciate this in very early life, for we hear him saying, "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad." "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," is exemplified in Timothy, of whom Paul said, "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

We find the Master himself at the age of twelve in the temple "sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers. And when they saw him they were amazed." Whenever occasion offered Jesus never failed to impress upon his followers the duty of taking notice of the children. For examples see Matt. xviii. 2-6; Mark x. 14-16.

The tender heart of the Savior was not only moved to compassion for their spiritual needs, but the Great Physician came with healing power for physical weakness and deformity. When was he ever known to turn from the afflicted? Even the Syrophenician woman besought not in vain, "And when she was come to her house she found the devil gone out and her daughter laid upon the bed." See also John iv. 46-51; Luke viii. 41-56; Luke vii. 12-15.

Let us emulate the example of the Savior in helping the young to a better knowledge of the plan of salvation, and try daily to impress them with the idea of their own responsibility. "For the promise is unto you and your children and to all that are afar off, even to as many as our God shall call."

P. C. THOMPSON.

NOTE.—This paper was shortened considerably, to make room for other matter.

How to Conduct Social Meetings.

Friends, as we have had a reorganization in church affairs, and as each one has promised to do more for the Master's cause in the future than any one of us has been doing in the past—then in order that we may work together it has been thought best to assign to each member a work to do. Brother Dwiggins, not knowing the strength of each member among us has made a mistake in selecting the one he has to write on so important a subject as, "How to Conduct Social Meetings," as this is a theme of vital importance, and, as I fear, the practice is not altogether what it should be. I would be glad if this theme had been given to a more able pen.

Our Heavenly Father has left instructions in his holy word; so then when we come together for social meeting and exhortation nothing could be more in place than, in the first place to read a portion of the word of life, and then, as prayer is the appointed way to approach God through Jesus his Son, to offer up a petition to the throne of grace to which we are invited to come boldly to find grace and help in every time of need. Heb. iv. 16.

In still another place the apostle tells us "to be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to let our requests be known to God."

In another place the apostle, speaking of the church as one body, says, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts, to the Lord; and whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Col. iii. 16, 17.

Once more the apostle directs, Heb. x. 22-25, "Let us draw near with a pure heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed in pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the [illegible] approaching."

From these and other directions to the early churches the manner of conducting social meetings seems plain. Our relation to God is that of children to a father, while our relation to each other is that of brothers and sisters; and as nothing is more natural than for brothers and sisters to converse about their common and individual matters, so nothing would be more in place than for brothers and sisters in the Heavenly Father's household of faith to talk about their common interests in heavenly things.

And as God's house is a house of order, would it not be well for some one to take the lead—though not necessarily the same one every time—by reading a suitable selection from the Scriptures, followed by a song of praise and then the leader offer prayer. It might then be best for the person thus opening the meeting to speak briefly by way of exhortation, encouragement, or comforting instructions on the practical portions of Bible truth in relation to Christian character, as it is the great aim of religious teaching to make us Christlike.

Each and every one in these meetings should feel interest enough to take some part, if it be only to select a few verses from the Scriptures to read, especially as this course very often opens the way for a few practical and edifying words, and a few words from a heart filled with the love of God and his cause, even if spoken in a simple, plain way, are a great deal better received than a long, drawn-out talk on some uninteresting hobby.

Yes, we would rather hear from the children too, and I fear we too often forget them in our prayer meetings. I remember calling on some children to read, and thus take a part in our social meeting one day, and they did so, and we had a most excellent meeting. In a day or two after I was talking to a sister, the mother of a bright little boy, about the good meeting that we had on Sunday; and I made the remark that if each one would take some part, our meetings would be so much more interesting, but it seemed that some were so timid; at which the little fellow, looking up from his play, said, "I should think anybody could say that he believed on the Lord Jesus Christ." I thought, O, what a lesson for me; even if I can't say more than the little seven year old boy, I will say I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

How is it with you, my brother and my sister? Do we do all we can in our prayer meetings? When we read how the great work of preaching the gospel at the very earliest period of its history was conducted, we find it was connected with earnest social and prayer meetings. O, my dear friends, do we not too often forget to pray? Are we not more mindful of earthly friends than we are of our Heavenly Father who has done so much for us, and who gives us richly all things—yea, more than we are able to ask, or in anywise worthy to receive? And yet how forgetful we are to return him thanks.

It is not so with earthly friends. If they only do us the slightest favor we are profuse with our thanks. Should some friend present us with only a cup of cold water, we are ever ready with thank you on our lips. Then as we quench our thirst at the flowing spring should not our minds revert to Him who created the fountains of water with the expression, I thank you my Father?

We read, Prov. xv. 8, "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight," and, 1 Pet. iii. 12; "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." As we all should pray for each other, I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's children, that I may never bring any reproach on the cause of my Master, so that when he shall come to reign, whose right it is, I may be accounted worthy of some humble place in the kingdom, and be one of his "little ones."

MRS. S. C. CHAPLIN.

How can We Bring About a more Perfect Union of All Our Churches?

In discussing this question it will be well first to try and find out what we have to work with, or bring into Union.

In going over the ground we will find here a few brethren and sisters banded together, calling themselves Disciples, there a few saying we are Christians, other few say we are Restitutionists; while some take the name Church of God, others "Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith," and so on till a dozen or more names are taken.

But some one will say, The name need [illegible] so long as [illegible] name. [illegible] of man, [illegible] the earth, the "Restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," with all that this implies, are well understood by all our brethren. We all believe that the kingdom of God is to be established on this earth, that God's Son, Jesus Christ, is to be its King, that his own peculiar people, resurrected and immortalized will assist him in his government of the world during the Millennial reign of 1000 years. In this comes of necessity the resurrection of the righteous, or those chosen to be co-rulers with Christ. The restoration of Israel is believed by all of us. We all concede that it is necessary if we would be a joint-sharer with Jesus Christ in his glory, that we believe with all our heart the "things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ"—the "Gospel"—to tell it short—that we must repent of all our past evil deeds, that we be adopted, in God's appointed way, into his family—baptism for the remission of sins—that we arise from the watery grave new creatures, to walk in a new life, and we all will admit that we must follow this adoption into the family of God by living holy lives, devoted to his service. I say we all admit that this holy life is necessary, we consent to it, and start out with love in our hearts, and a firm determination to live, every moment, in obedience to his will. Good resolutions! Would God we each might continue so to the end.

But some brother, older than we, makes a statement, argues his case, and proves to his own satisfaction that a certain class will be resurrected and adjudged worthy to suffer the second death, and still another class whose good deeds have not been enough to merit for them eternal life, and whose evil deeds have not been sufficient to warrant their condemnation, will be given another chance at sometime, and he considers he has been very fair and arranged the whole matter of the resurrection well. You are young, and so impressed with the goodness, love and mercy of God, in accepting you, vile as you was, and so full of every thing contrary to his will, that you immediately take issue with the brother, remembering that "God wills that all men should come to him and be saved, and that if God wills it, he certainly will provide some way for its accomplishment.

You all know the outcome of this. One is accused of being a Universalist, the other of being narrow and selfish. Where, brother, is that Love one to another, that you was so certain you would show always, under whatever circumstances?

I need not mention the hundred and one different "Hobbies"—(to use a common though homely expression) that are ridden—you all know their history too well—but just stop and tell me it this course of discussion is a part of the holy life you resolved to live when you took the name of JESUS upon you? Why not say—"Brother mine, don't let us argue this question—Let us stand agreed, as we all can, that ALL, who come to Christ, accept him in his own way, and live righteously and Godly in this present life will SURELY be resurrected, and immortalized too. Now, let us join hands, and pocket books too, in this great work of spreading the good news of salvation," and if we engage our whole minds and the means entrusted to our care in this cause, we will have no time or inclination to dispute, but in consequence of having this one end in view of telling our fellowmen of the love of God—we will ourselves live Holy Lives.

Each Church—by which I mean that banding together of two, three, or more of this faith, for mutual improvement, to exhort and encourage one another, to do better work for the Master,—should have some distinct aim in view. There should be a strong cord binding its several members together, this cord we call LOVE. Without this cord encircling each and every member, holding all together as a whole, we cannot call this a Church—for it is dead—a body made up of living parts should be alive—it must be alive.

Such an organization will of necessity be what it is intended to be, a Light bearer. Its light will not be under a bushel, but will shine out clear and bright, and lighten all who come near it, and indeed it will attract some from the darkness without. If its whole object is to do good, to lead some one outside to see the beauty of our blessed hope, that organization or church is ready for union with another such one. The union of the two with the purpose of putting some of their means and talent together to work in directions where individually neither could do anything, to aid and encourage each other, just as their several members are joined together—LOVE still the band encircling them—would be a Union of Churches, and from two would go to three and four and five till all the churches in one state would be joined, with a common purpose—that of spreading abroad the glad tidings of a soon coming Savior.

Still I hear some one say, Well brother you have not yet told us how to bring about a more perfect Union of all our churches? I have not but have been sitting before you what I consider the basis for such union. The Churches in Indiana have been for years holding Annual and Quarterly Conferences. Much good has been done, but for some time we all have felt that much more could be done if we only took the work in hand more systematically—and worked more together. So in Sept. 1886, at Argos, Ind., a Declaration of Principles and Constitution was adopted, that declaration setting forth that the need was felt of closer union, and contained all the points of our peculiar faith. Thus we organized our State Conference.

I recommend as a start toward a more perfect union of all our Churches, that the Presidents of this Conference request all the delegates present to join this Conference by going through the form of having their names recorded on the Secretary's book, and that these delegates when they return home tell their Church clerk that when again delegates are appointed to the next Conference meeting, he present said delegates with a proper credential, to present at that meeting.

If the churches represented here by delegates will, through these delegates, properly unite with this Conference, and thus if the Conference will authorize some person to visit such other Churches as are not represented here, and urge them to join us in the work we are engaged in; in this practical way I think that in three months all the good brethren and sisters in the State of Indiana could be united in one Association, the object being to advance the Master's Cause.

I wish to emphasize this—The object being to advance the Master's Cause. Anxious to be in fact what you are in name—LIGHT-BEARERS.

No time or money to be expended to send speakers out to waste their time in endeavoring to settle controverted side issues, that get no nearer settlement after years of discussion. But have your ministers seek localities where dying men can be found who will listen to the message of Salvation only in the Name of God's only begotten Son, Jesus Christ.

With each state united in this it is but a step to a National C[illegible] once of Delegates from each [illegible] and you have a Perfect Union [illegible] our Churches.

THE RESTITUTIO[illegible]

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 22, 18[illegible]

THERE being five Wednesday[illegible] the present month, our next paper bear date July 6. Consequently [illegible] will be no paper next week.

As papers read at our Confer[illegible] at Antioch occupy quite a large [illegible] of the present number, we have compelled to defer several comm[illegible] cations to future numbers of RESTITUTION.

ON Tuesday of this week Q[illegible] Victoria completed the term of [illegible] half century as occupant of the th[illegible] of Great Britain. The event was [illegible] the occasion of magnificent displa[illegible] London, as well as in other part[illegible] England. There has never been [illegible] riod of fifty years in the world's hi[illegible] more remarkable than this half [illegible] tury. Events and discoveries [illegible] would have made a past millenn[illegible] wonderful have been crowded into [illegible] limited circle of time. Sublim[illegible] have become common place ov[illegible] and marvels bordering on the mir[illegible] lous quiet ordinary affairs. It is a [illegible] riod measuring off a part of the "[illegible] of the end."

Publisher's Notes

The report of business transacted [illegible] our conference at Antioch is of ne[illegible] sity laid over to our next issue.

Any one desiring copies of THE R[illegible] TITUTION containing the papers [illegible] at the conference at Antioch, can [illegible] tain them at 25 cents a dozen by s[illegible] ing their orders immediately.

Fourth July Excursion Rates.

Excursion tickets will be sold [illegible] tween all ticket stations on the Pe[illegible] sylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh, [illegible] July 2d, 3d and 4th, good to ret[illegible] until July 5th inclusive, at one [illegible] for the round trip. No excu[illegible] tickets will be sold to [illegible] at [illegible] than twenty-five cents, nor to child[illegible] at less than fifteen cents.

Fourth of July Excursions.

Extensive preparations are bei[illegible] made by nearly all the cities and tow[illegible] on the line of the "Natural G[illegible] Route" to celebrate the coming 4th [illegible] July in the most interesting and el[illegible] orate manner. The numerous gas [illegible] oil towns in particular expect to ri[illegible] all past efforts, not only in the ord[illegible] ary 4th of July attractions, but mo[illegible] especially in the pyrotechnical displa[illegible] which with the combination of natur[illegible] gas and artificial fireworks, will [illegible] magnificent and awe-inspiring in t[illegible] greatest extreme.

In order that everyone may have [illegible] opportunity to visit their neighborin[illegible] towns and thoroughly enjoy the glor[illegible] ous Fourth, the Lake Erie & Weste[illegible] Railroad—"Natural Gas Route," wi[illegible] sell excursion tickets between all st[illegible] tions on its lines, at one fare for th[illegible] round trip. Tickets to be sold on Jul[illegible] 2d, 3d and 4th, 1887. Good going o[illegible] date of sale and good to return unti[illegible] July 5th, inclusive.

Tickets, time of trains, etc., can b[illegible] procured upon application to any ticke[illegible] agent of Lake Erie & Western Rail[illegible] road.

An Old Established Rule Continued.

Of late years, Railroad Excursions [illegible] on the Fourth of July have become so [illegible] general, that the public have had [illegible] cause to look for reduced rates on that [illegible] day as a matter of course.

This year there may be a doubt in the minds of some as to the continuance of this practice, formed from opinions they may have of the effect of Inter-State Commerce Law. If so, we are pleased to dispel them, and quote the announcement for that day made by the Vandalia Line. In substance it is as follows: The rate will be One Fare for the Round Trip between all stations. Tickets will be good going on July 2d, 3d and 4th, and good to return including July 5th, allowing four days for a visit or an outing. If the latter, the announcement reads, no better place can be found than Lake Maxinkuckee, which is no doubt so, as Boating and Fishing can there be indulged in to your heart's content. It is the Indianans' Home Resort.

LIFE IN CHRIST.—Gal. ii. 20.

I live, I live, who once was doomed to die;
I live, and yet not I,
But Lo who gave His life to make me free,
Christ Jesus, lives in me.

I live! Yes, quickened by his life I live,
In Christ, my life, I live,
And death can never reach with sting of sin,
This blessed life within.

Thus, hid with Christ in God, my sheltered life
Shall rest from carnal strife,
And learn to know the secret of the Lord
Within his living word.

Oh, blessed life of faith, and hope, and love,
So like to that above;
To rest, complete in him, with boundless grace,
In love's secure embrace.

Now faith and hope with kindling ardor burn
For our dear Lord's return;
Still waiting for that hope that comes apace—
The vision of his face.

And then, when he whom in our Life, appears
To those each hr still more dear,
And we appear in glory by his side,
I shall be satisfied.

SATAN'S MIMICRY OF THE DIVINE.

Christ set up a visible Church on the earth, to be his witness and representative before the world. Satan has also set up his counterfeit. The true Church is represented under the emblem of a bride, "the Lamb's wife;" the corrupt and false Church is also seen under the emblem of a woman. In Rev. 17 John beholds her seated on a scarlet-colored beast. This beast is full of names of blasphemy, has seven heads and ten horns. The woman is clothed in purple and scarlet, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls. On her forehead is a name written—"Mystery, Babylon the Great, Mother of the Harlots and Abominations of the Earth." She is drunk, but it is with blood, the blood of the saints and the martyrs of Jesus. This is the only place where John expresses wonder. But when he saw this woman he wondered with great wonder. The idea had never entered into the mind of the apostle that degeneracy and corruption in the professing Church could reach this issue.

The bride, the true Church, like her in the Canticles, comes up through the wilderness, leaning on the arm of her beloved—her Head and Husband, the Lord Jesus; the false Church, the harlot, sits upon the beast—the emblem of the powers of the earth. The beast supports her, and from him she derives her wealth and authority. In truth, she directs him, as a rider does his horse, and uses his power for her own purposes; among others, to destroy the servants and witnesses of the Lord Jesus.

What this mimicry of the bride of Christ, through the whole period of the Church's degeneracy until now, is, it is not needful to inform the thoughtful reader. When he asks himself what it is which, while professing to belong to Christ, has lost for support upon the powers of the earth, and has used those powers to shed the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus, he will be at no loss to determine.

The true Church mourns her absent Lord; she is a stranger in the earth, and waits for the Bridegroom from heaven; the false Church is at home in the world, and enjoys its wealth and honors.

The one by the world is hated and persecuted, even as her Lord was; the other is caressed and endowed with wealth, titles, and honors; from the world she receives her purple and scarlet, her gold, and precious stones and pearls. Christ has the affections of the true Church; the world the affections of the false one.

The true Church is that mystery hidden in the mind of God from the beginning, revealed in this dispensation, as the apostle Paul tells us, unto the holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit (Eph. iii. 4-6), that believing Jews and Gentiles should form one body, united to one Head—Christ; the false Church is also the development of a mystery hidden in the mind of Satan, which Paul saw working in his day, and which shows itself fullblown in this woman seated on the scarlet-colored beast.

That the Church of Rome is the root and centre of this mystery of iniquity, may be seen from one fact to which we already adverted as a mark of the apostasy of the last days: she enjoins celibacy upon all her clergy and upon all her religious orders. Under the pretence of superior holiness, this has led to the most scandalous vices, and the most abominable iniquities. It has also furnished that false system with an army of men qualified for the perpetration of the most heartless yet heart-rending cruelties. The Church of Rome could never have shed the blood of saints as it has done had not its priests and monks been devoted to celibacy. Superstition turned their hearts to iron, and made them insensible to pity, because they had no domestic or social ties (Tim. iv. 1-3).

This celibacy has also, doubtless, been advantageous to the Church's revenues. It has brought wealth into her coffers which she could not otherwise have hoped to possess. Thus Rome, for her cruel and mercenary purposes, by violating the instincts of nature, has swelled the world's torrent of vice and crime.

One of the claims of the Church of Rome to be the Church of Christ is her antiquity. We admit her premises, but deny her conclusion. We cannot but acknowledge that she existed, as the mystery of iniquity, in the days of the apostle Paul. We must admit that, in one sense, she is older even than Christianity itself. She is a reproduction of Judaism, or legality, as to the ground of a sinner's justification. As to her ritual and worship, she is a revival of paganism. Her purgatory, her holy water, her holy places, her hero-worship, or worshipping of saints, are all derived from paganism, are in fact, paganism with very slight modifications. In this view Popery is, without a doubt, as old as any other religion in the world.

The alliance of Christianity with political power was not the primary cause of the Church's degeneracy. Had she not been in a degenerate condition she would not have swallowed the gilded bait of Constantine, and moulded herself on the secular model. Her affections were to a great extent, alienated from Christ before she transferred them to the kings of the earth. Any one carefully reading her early history will not fail to see this.

It was philosophy, so-called, [which helped, in the first instance, to hasten on the corruption of the early Church. The Platonists and Pythagoreans held it as a maxim that it was not only lawful, but even praiseworthy, to tell a lie, or deceive, for the promotion of piety. This principle was adopted by many professing Christians. It fostered Gnosticism. It also caused many, in order to circulate their views and doctrines, to write and publish books under forged names, "The devils," says Sir Thomas Brown, "do not tell lies to one another; for truth is necessary to all societies: nor can the society of hell subsist without it." In this particular devils were outdone. This principle Rome still holds and [illegible] far [illegible]ices.

Another early source of corr[illegible] was the introduction into the public worship of pomp and ceremonial. This was done to gain favor with the pupulace, and to take away the reproach of the heathen on account of the simplicity of the early Christian worship. Gregory, surnamed Thaumaturgus, or the wonder-worker, went so far in this spirit of accommodation as to make the anniversaries of the martyrs similar to the heathen festivals. This went beyond the pomp of worship, and led to licentiousness. The tombs of the martyrs became places of feasting, sporting and dancing.

As early as the second century, to take the Lord's Supper was considered necessary to salvation. Hence portions of the bread and wine were sent from the church to its sick members. But what was still worse, the communion was administered to infants, as if innocent children could not enter heaven without the rites of the church.

As to baptism, Dr. Mosheim tells us "the remission of sins was thought to be its immediate and happy fruit, while the bishop, by prayer and the imposition of hands, was supposed to confer the sanctifying gifts of the Holy Ghost, that are necessary to a life of righteousness and virtue" (Eccles. Hist., cent. III., chap. iv. sec. 4). We need not wonder, on this showing, that in the following century men were accustomed to put off their baptism to near the time of their death, that they might ascend spotless from the water, where they had lost their sins behind them, to the presence of God. Even Constantine the Great himself was not baptized till a few days before his death, when Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, performed the rite for him.

These are the things which prepared the church to abandon Christ, and to put the kings of the earth in his stead. And this charge will lie as directly against the Eastern branch as against the Western. The Greek Church is as truly a part of the mystery of iniquity as the church of Rome is. In truth, we dare not attempt the vindication of any church which leans on the arm of flesh....

Until the appearing of the Lord Jesus, the Church is only betrothed to Christ. When he appears in his glory, the marriage will be consummated. He will then, before earth and heaven, take her to be the partner of his throne, the object of his infinite love, the sharer of all his bliss and glory. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints" (Rev. xix. 7, 8). "To this end Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish."

Here we learn who, in that day, will compose the church, the bride of the Lamb. They are all, wherever found, who are washed in his blood, and have walked in obedience to his commandments; all others being found without the wedding garment shall be excluded from the marriage-supper. The harlot chooses earth for her portion. In the earth she perishes. The church is in the earth a stranger and pilgrim, waiting for her Lord from heaven. From heaven comes her salvation. When her absent Lord has accomplished for her his ministry within the holiest, he will come again to receive her to himself, that where he is there she may be also. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." May God grant unto us grace that, after the pattern of our Blessed Master, we may be content until that day to be strangers and pilgrims in the earth! Amen.—C. Graham, in the Silver Horn.

The Grace of Profuseness.

Nowhere are words of appreciation so seldom given as in the immediate family circle. To the stranger within and without the gates are given words of praise, of encouragement. Like the little acts that help make life beautiful, they are seldom offered where love is deepest and interest unflagging. We take too much for granted that our joy and pride in work accomplished, in effort made, are known and understood. A walk through a graveyard, where words of appreciation are carved in stone, rouses the question, Was this an act of penance? are they carved in stone to make known a fact that was never told to hungry hearts or listening ears? [illegible]antine walls that [illegible]out a gate, [illegible] far [illegible]ere [illegible] and [illegible]rowful facts of life. How often a word of praise would stimulate a feeble thought into action! How often the indifference and half-concealed ridicule kills the effort that would result in creating influence and character! They of our own household have the first and dearest right to the best there is in us, the best we have to give.

A Philosophical Answer.

The value of services rendered by skilled workmen should not be calculated by the time it takes to perform task. Allowance should be made for the weeks and months spent by thorough workmen in learning how to do their work well. This knowledge has its money value.

While Judge Tracy was on the circuit, going from court, his trace broke. The judge spent a half-hour trying to mend it, but to no purpose. His patience was exhausted, and he expressed his vexation in words. A negro came along, and the judge told him of his trouble. The negro let out the trace, cut a hole in it, and the job was done. "Why," said the judge, "could I not have thought of that?" "Well, master," said the negro, "don't you know some folks is naturally smarter than others?" "That's so," said the judge "What shall I pay you for fixing my trace?" "Well, master, fifty cents will do," said the negro. "Fifty cents!" said the judge. "You were not five minutes at it." "I do not charge you fifty cents for doing it," said the negro. "I charge you twenty-five cents for doing it, and twenty-five cents for knowing how to do it."—Savannah News.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed specially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

"The Gospel of God Salvation and kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m. to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth! This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 176 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday in V. Insland and Heller's Block, Superior & Pittsburgh Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Ontario & Marshall Sts., free. Brethren from abroad or like minded others are welcome.

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of this coming?" The great upheaval in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar items, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, favoring careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, shaping in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with events. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It describes the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT.

—BY B. WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literal and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up: with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper. Cloth $3.50. Library binding $4.50.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 6, 1887. NO. 25.

THE RESTITUTION,

Terms--TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months--proportionate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION addresses itself to "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the final attainment.

A Chapter in Jewish History of Real Interest to the Jews.--No. II.

בני בכרי ישראל
"Israel is my son, my first-born." Ex. iv. 22.

מזרה ישראל יקבצנו
"He that scattered Israel will gather him." Jer. xxxi. 10.

וכרתי את־בית ישראל ואת־בית יהודה ברית חדשה
"I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31.

If it has not already been perceived by the careful reader that the writer of this paper acknowledges the Hebrew character of the Messiahship, he has now no hesitation in expressing his most decided conviction that the plain and obvious sense of the sacred writings, with a due, but no more than a due, regard to the use of figurative and symbolical language, is the only right method of understanding those writings.

He finds a plain rule provided by God himself in regard to the blessing of Israel in the future, which cannot be made of none effect by any traditions:—"Thus saith the Lord; Like as I have brought this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them." Neither has he any hesitation in affirming that such a departure from this principle as has existed more or less for so many centuries, is directly responsible for much of the infidelity which exists in the world, both among Jews and Gentiles.

The principle of interpretation now current in the religious world of nearly all denominations is called "spiritualizing," but it not generally known that it has been inherited pure and simple by Protestants from the Roman Catholic Church, which a glance at their respective commentaries will show. I shall here only quote one example. In the prophecy of Daniel it is written—"The God of heaven shall set up a Kingdom which shall never be destroyed." In the Roman Catholic English Version (called the Douay) a note on the word Kingdom is in these terms:—"The Kingdom of Christ is the Catholic Church." Dr. Thomas Scott, a Protestant Commentator, says—"The Kingdom of Christ was evidently intended; from small beginnings it has already made immense progress," etc.

There are now, and have been, in former ages notable exceptions to this style of interpretation. I need not refer to modern instances, many of which must be well known to the reader. I shall quote a case just 200 years old, in which the writer of a work of 560 pages, inserted in the very fore front of it, in large type, an appeal to the Jews. The work is entitled "THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE PROPHECIES, or the APPROACHING deliverance of the Church—etc. Written in French by Peter Jurieu, the present Minister of the French church at Rotterdam, and from this second edition faithfully Englished. London, Printed in the year 1687." The Appeal referred to is as follows:—"To the Nation of the Jews. I desire of that People that they would please to read this Book attentively and without prejudice; especially from the middle of the Second Part to the end: they can find nothing there that can irritate 'em. I confess the hopes they conceive of a Kingdom of the Messiah, which shall be chiefly for them, is built upon express and unquestionable Prophecies; that even their Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and that they shall be again gathered in their own land. And if anything be capable to recover them from their obstinacy, for the establishment of the Law of Moses, and against the Law of Christ; this is certainly the most likely method, which we make use of, because it grants them almost all the advantages which they expect."

Mr. Jurieu has a chapter consisting of 17 pages with this heading:—"The Second spring of Arguments to prove the thousand years' reign is the reign promised to the Jews. The promises made to them have not been fulfilled, but must be. The conversion of St. Paul is a type of that of the whole Nation." The chapter begins thus:—"The second spring of my Argument shall be the Prophecies and Oracles which promise unto the Jews extraordinary blessings, a reign upon earth; yea, an elevation to a kingdom unto which all nations must pay homage. These Oracles are without number! We must only produce some of them." Two pages are then occupied with quotations from the prophets, setting forth the purpose of God to establish the Kingdom of Israel in the land of their fathers in prosperity and glory; and says:—"There must therefore come a time that shall be the Reign of Messiah and the Jews, in which this Nation shall be exalted (as hath been promised them) above all the Nations."

Thus far we have treated mainly of the Messiahship in its bearing on what may be termed the political, ecclesiastical, and social amelioration of the people of Israel and the nations of the world. But this is far from being all that is involved in the Messiahship, as it is not all that is needed to fully satisfy the cravings and aspirations of the human family.

One of the Jewish historians quoted speaks of the purpose of his writing in these terms:—"Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." The "life" mentioned here was not more temporary life, but everlasting life: for we find the claimant of the Messiahship himself, as recorded by the same historian, speaking of it in this way:—"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And again, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

This question of "Everlasting life" looks back in history to the Garden of Eden. In the first book of Moses we read:—"the Lord God said, Behold, the man is becoming as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and live for ever; Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the Garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man: and he placed at the east end of the Garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."

The sentence of death had just been formally pronounced in these terms:—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This was the natural sequel to the breach of the law which had been committed by the first human pair, as recorded in the preceding narrative.

The mention, of "living for ever" here is the first among the very few occurrences of the idea of "everlasting life" in the Hebrew Scriptures. Another instance is in Psalms cxxxiii. and a third in Daniel xii. 2; and I know of only one more, where the question is asked—"The prophets, do they live for ever?"

The words in Daniel, however, are highly significant. They are these:—"At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." They distinctly point to what is amply treated of in the writings of the historians referred to, to be immediately quoted.

A prominent feature in the first book of Moses just quoted is "the tree of life" which is said to have been placed "in the midst of the garden." Exclusion from it was necessary to the execution of the penalty of death, which with the two exceptions of Enoch and Elijah, has come upon the whole race of mankind. As we see from Daniel, deliverance from death by means of a resurrection is to be the privilege of a portion of the Jewish people, who only are there referred to. The claimant of the Messiahship, as has been quoted, extended this privilege to "whosoever" of "the world," believe in him. Another promise made by him has a remarkable allusion to "the tree of life" already referred to. He is recorded to have said:—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

There is even a more pointed reference to what took place in Eden given by Paul in one of his many letters to disciples. He says:—"Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

"There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written. The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."

It seems proper to remark here that considerable confusion of ideas exists regarding the "everlasting life" thus promised. Many think that the term "life" here signifies simply happiness. But no Jew, who knows the Hebrew Scriptures, need be led away with such an idea. When God through Moses set before the people of Israel the consequences of their obedience and disobedience he clearly distinguished between "life" and happiness. His words were:—See, I have set before thee this day LIFE, and GOOD, and DEATH, and EVIL."....

Therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live: That thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him: for he is thy life, and the length of thy days." Substantially agreeing with the utterances of Paul and others, one of which I quote—"God will render to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life."

The various foregoing quotations from historians and others are but specimens of what they have put on record regarding the glories of the Messiah's coming kingdom, and the everlasting life provided for those who shall be privileged to reign with him over the nations of the earth.

For the sake of any reader who may not be aware of it, I may mention that the volume containing the entire collection of histories, discourses, letters, etc. (originally written in Greek) has been translated into all the languages of Europe, any of which may be purchased for a very small sum. The following are a few of the principal obtained on inquiry at the office of the National Bible Society of Scotland here. The New Testament in Hebrew, one shilling or 25 cents; in Russian, one shilling and three pence, or 30 cents; in German, five pence, or 10 cents; in French, three pence or 6 cents; and in English at various prices, but also as low as ONE PENNY or 2 cents.

I beg respectfully to submit the foregoing remarks for the careful and intelligent consideration of those members of the Jewish community into whose hands it may happen to fall, and to wish them every blessing which the truth of the God of Israel is fitted to bestow.

"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee;
The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee;
The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."

J. CAMERON.

Among the things which thirty-five years ago went to make up the crime of high treason in Italy was the possession of a Bible, which was in the list of revolutionary and forbidden books, and for a man to own it was to subject him to prison, the galleys, and even to death. Now Bible depots are established in every Italian city, and itinerant venders circulate the book freely. In a conspicuous store in the Corso, Rome, a whole window is filled with copies of the Italian Version of the Scriptures. The New Testament can be purchased for five cents, and a separate gospel for two.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

Some, I see, are rather busy with measuring rods of prophetic periods, and finding such a computation of their extremities with years in ancient and modern times, as to bring in the kingdom and coming of our Lord, about 1889. To such reckoning and computations I would say nothing by way of objection, only that failures teach caution, and calculations having had a proved uncertainty, we had best go slowly. And yet, there is enough in the aspect of things, chronologically, and currently in events, and in certain portraits of things imminent, whether in aspects ecclesiastical, political, or social, to produce expectation and make one watchful and wakeful. The Lord may come very soon indeed, and even before 1889. I know not,—and I know not, even, to the contrary. I know, that I have often felt and do feel, that it would be blessed, indeed, if he would come and bring rest, and renovation. For I am never likely to be satisfied, until I am renewed with immortal life, and I know that there is a charm in the thought and hope of actual reconstruction. Do we feel that we have been imperfectly born, that our earth-birth and our mortal life, have the mark of much imperfection? Well then, the great desideratum is to be born again of course. How natural, how reasonable, how necessary? That is, the longing is natural, and the realization a necessity. Blessed is, and will be, an entire reconstruction, while there is indeed an element in us of the future glory, in the experience and discipline of the present life, and in something like a proof and achievement of character, through sufferings and temptations.

Do we speak of 89? Who knows what is before us of gravity and importance before that? I think those who weigh things, and understand the critical situation and relation of nations, the secret and open working of elements threatening change, even to revolution, are all the while, thoughtful, and more or less deeply impressed. France and Germany, what startling possibilities are continually suggested? The volcanic force that is ever most irrepressible and menacing, seems to be in France. And it seems to be a force also at all times eluding or baffling calculations. A fierce unrest, or passion of resentment, kept under restraint for seventeen years is now and then revealed in a sudden flash of excitement, and then again put under the curb of prudence, and restrained for expediency's sake. Every thing is made subject to the logic of time and opportunity.

But letting France and Germany go there is enough for the burden of serious thinking. Just now, I am pondering the mixed and complex condition of things, the union, or rather, universal proximity and intermixture of good and evil. The wisdom of the press, generally, the wisdom of the world of the age, is a wisdom forecasting pronouncing and progress. But even granting it, does that forecast remember or consider, the terrible struggles and convulsions that are coming? Are the interblendings of good and bad, light and shadow, to be rectified without violence. Will the cry of peace do it? Will the preaching of what is called, the Gospel, make the good victor over evil? Is not the Gospel so misunderstood, and so misprached, as practically to illustrate in itself the conjunction or inter-blending of good and evil,—and how can such a medicine be a remedy? The good shall overcome the evil, but not by the promised method. Scripture plainly teaches the agency of force, and the breaking up of wrong and false conditions, by energies that will rend, and break, and shatter. I see in mind, the whole fabric of things torn, as a man tears cambric that he has measured,—torn with a sudden gesture, and unhesitating purpose. It may be that great good may hereafter come from extensive Bible distribution, and from missionary enterprises of the last fifty years and more, but prior to that, if I understand it right, must come war, revolution, up heaval and terrible shaking, and somewhere and somehow what we understand, or what Scripture teaches, as a coming of Christ to order, organize, reconstruct and perfect the whole system of things, and bring in righteousness, and establish the law and rule, and power of righteousness. Somehow, there is a resurrection of the dead, associated with that advent, and an instantaneous change of living and waiting saints. Call that last a resurrection of the dead, too; I have no objection. It is an equivalent of resurrection, in its instantaneous transition from mortality to immortality. I have often prayed—"O Lord, raise me from the dead," and felt that I would take a translation as a resurrection.

The fact is, one is pained at what he sees, and constitutionally and irreconcilably unable to recognize the present order as permanent. There is the vital incongruity and incompatibility of things. There are elements of evil ever active and threatening. There is a worm in every efflorescence of earthly glory. There is selfishness, infidelity to trust, and error in every sphere, and in every direction. There is much in itself good, but yet fettered and antagonized with the neighborhood and the influence of evil. Bones that have united badly, are re-fractured to attain sympathy. Structures that are radically unsound and unsafe, must be pulled to pieces and rebuilt. Nay, some materials must be not only broken, but ground to powder, in order to be in the condition best suited for reconstruction into something solid and durable.

Look at rum ruling men and ruining them. Look at its recklessness and calculation. Has it any heart, any conscience, any shame? By it, crimes multiply and become frightful. By it hearts are wrung and humanity outraged. Who can count the deeds of darkness perpetrated by it, the pain and despair wrought by it?

Look at gain, with all its pride and fraud, its selfishness without pity, and its ostentation without benevolence. Look at its enormous accumulations, and its boundless ambitions, its unscrupulousness and its conspiracies. Who can count its robberies, and its merciless exactions? Look at England with its Irish evictions. Will her noble lords abate from rent-rates, and give the miserable tenants air to breathe and leave to be? Yes, sir enough, surely when the poor mud huts and thatched cabins are broken into, and the wretched turned, crying and despairing, into the street. Surely judgment will overtake a nation thus cursing and in-human.

Look at the wickedness of men who profane the name of God with every breath. What blasphemies of men every where, by land and sea—among the crews of great sea-going steamers, and the crews of thundering railroad trains—of men in prosperity and adversity. Let a drought scorch the land and threaten destruction of every living thing. Then when God in mercy and kindness, opens the windows of heaven, and sends abundant showers of rain, the unthankful creatures prove their unworthiness, and give horrid piquancy to their ingratitude, by a profanity as reckless as ever.

Every thing is ready for reading when the hour strikes. Even in far-famed Connecticut, a land of reputed steady habits, what a strange spectacle did I behold a few days ago. In a single town of modest dimensions, are today about a dozen distilleries for the manufacture of brandy from apples. All done in a very orderly and quiet manner no doubt. Even the women tend the stills, and I was warned of the impolicy of stirring up things by remonstrance. Why, good and pious men do these things, and their good and pious fathers and mothers did them, half a century ago. How unwelcome would be interference! A church now orderly and prosperous, would be distracted by the invasion of a temperance crusade. Not even a missionary of the W. C. T. U., with all her refinement of manner, and splendor of diction,—her goodness of heart, and force of intellect, would be wanted. In vain, genius, consecration, or eloquence. These people love their old ways, their privileges of money making, the privilege of converting the fruit of thriving orchards into damning draughts of poison. Are they not peaceable, are they not church-going? And as to tracing the future course of their gallons and casks of cider—Brandy—are they expected to do that? They have other things to do. No matter if their brandy is be-devilled by buyers, with villainous things to make it go further and pay more, is that any concern of theirs? If there are deeds of darkness done, through the influence and inspiration of their brandy, if the world is made worse by their work, if it is caused by their agency, is there time to investigate such a question? This one "steady habit" of making money, by killing some and making many miserable, must not be interrupted. The right must not be controverted, nor the production arrested.

As I ride through beautiful valleys in New England, I notice large fields devoted to tobacco-raising. Are not the rows beautiful—is not the cultivation intelligent, is not the production remarkable? Let me ask a counter-question. Is God pleased with it? And another. Is the world made better by it? Will it be grown in the Millennium? Will the King authorize it, will he permit it? Think of the slavery of the millions to this poison! Do the smokers feel compunctions of consciences? They reck naught of sots or results. Who shall abridge their liberty? I could raise it, or I could sell it, but I have the impassable barrier of a forbidding conscience. It is better to obey the edict of a restraining, than to suffer the condemnation of an accusing conscience. What is the reason of this agriculture of poison? The reason is in the lust and indulgence, the unrepenting self-allowance of the user, and the loving-to-make-money, of the raiser.

Look again at the opium-raising of profit-loving England, where is her conscience? Its protest is drowned in her love of revenue. But some will be poor rather than get gain by iniquity. Better is the poor in his self-denial, than he who seeks to be built up with the revenues of unrighteousness. I repeat, all the present order of things seems destined to be abruptly disturbed. Many a man will be awakened by a thunder-clap from a dream of peace. Is it therefore worth the while for us to strive unceasingly to make every thing earthly minister to enjoyment? To make elegant nests to be lined with lamb's wool or eider-down? To be liberal and lavish on our flitting earthly present, and reluctant and niggardly toward the gospel and toward the poor? Is it worth the while?

Let us live literally as minute-men, ready for the day foretold by the prophets of God. Let us not live so as to be heart-broken at separation from the glitter and preciousness of earthly treasures, but full of joy at the revelation of our Master in glory.

O. COLEGROVE.

Dear Restitution:

The measure of our power as a people depends upon the genuineness and breadth of our loyalty to the truths and trusts which make us a people. One of these great truths is the literal resurrection of the dead; another the literal reign of the Messiah on this planet of ours; the destruction of death and him that hath the power of death, that is the devil; that we have proof that we are living in the last days; that perils are ever on the increase; and in view of all this we must not cover up the light we have seen lest darkness and condemnation settle down upon us so near the time of reward and we lose the crown of life promised to the overcomer. Great are the responsibilities of the hour and it will not do to cover up or allow the truth to be smothered by others when we are counseled to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. And if we prize the evidence of the near coming of the Master we shall be glad of every chance to defend it. We must speak the word of the Lord faithfully if we would hear the "well done" from the lips of our blessed Christ. If we only watch we can heed the injunction coming down through the ages, "Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with the cares of this life to such a degree that the day of the Lord comes upon us unawares." We are not only to be diligent in business but also fervent in spirit serving the Lord.

Strength is given for duty. If then we pray for strength, let there be first an acceptance of duty and an unreserved purpose to perform it and whatever God calls us to do at any time is important to be done, and he never calls us to do anything without accompanying the obligation with strength and help enough to enable us to discharge our duty faithfully. We distrust God when we refuse to do his bidding through fear of failure. Our future is eternally guaranteed if we stand firm; if we are faithful to God we are assured he will be faithful to us. Lean on Jesus then and he will rest you; labor for Jesus and he will bless you; live for Jesus and your soul shall mount up on wings as eagles, you shall run and never weary, you shall walk arm in arm with him and never faint. Yours in the blessed hope,

LAURA H. PERKINS.

The Breach Widening.

LONDON, June 7. The Russian ukase, forbidding foreigners to acquire estates on the Western frontier of Russia, is designed principally to put an end to the influx of Germans into Russia. There are in Russia so many German factories, workshops, warehouses and firms, the productions of which are of profit to Germans exclusively, that the Russian Government regards them as detrimental to the country, owing to their competition with Russian industries. Besides, most of the Germans in Russia are members of the German army reserve, and in the event of war they might become hostile outposts, familiar with Russian topography, resources and strategic condition, and might seek an alliance with the Poles. The ukase will not effect its object immediately, as it does not disturb foreigners who are already landlords. Many hold land under temporary concessions which will not be renewed when their terms expire. It is expected that the tenants will then leave their holdings and that the owners of the land will then find circumstances so adverse that they will be compelled to leave. This, together with the Russianizing movement in the Baltic provinces, will produce an increasing breach between Germany and Russia and render impossible a renewal of their former cordiality which was undermined by Prince [illegible]'s action at the Berlin Congress and his policy in the Bulgarian crisis.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

אין אמר ואין דברים בלי נשמע קולם:

There is no speech and there is no language: their voice is not heard. Psa. xix. 3.

The language, written in resplendency on the azure scrolls above, is addressed to the eye, not to the ear. From this world of ours, "poised in the crystal air," we look upward to peruse the luminous pages of that book upon which God's own fingers have traced lines—

"Shining in order, like a living hymn
Written in light."

The eloquence of the skies is not in voice, but in the glory-script of lights beaming out from suns and constellations of suns, from galaxies of interwoven Aheon, and from nebula of glittering star-dust, that crowd and throng, and whirl, and blaze in the universe of a creation of unfathomable infinitudes. Of these shining Scriptures only a near page or two can be read by unassisted sight. Beyond the deep mysterious blue, with all its magnificence of constellation and galaxy, the telescope reveals remoter skies sown thick with suns that stream with light across tracts of space untraversed except by angels on celestial pinions. Remoter still are lucent apocalypses of glory and of God that are revelations of the Omnipotent and the Eternal only to those Sons of God and those Morning Stars that hymned creation's earliest anthems.

Now what is man? O, child of earth, God's image molded out of dust, look upward once more, and, if a child of God by faith, read thy destiny in the apocalypse above as well as in that apocalypse written by the holy seer in the sea-girt isle. The Son of God is also the Son of Man. In this Divine Personage, our Lord Jesus Christ, our humanity has been transformed and transfigured into glory imperishable. As we look into the sun-jeweled spaces of heaven's measureless infinity, we rejoice to know that on the central throne of "the heaven of heavens"—the throne of his Father—he is seated who is also our kinsman. He that once descended into the lowest parts of the earth, is the same that also ascended far above all heavens, that he might fill all things."

Though there be no speech nor language, nor audible voice from the heavenly canopy, yet the illuminated glory-script entrances our vision and "proselytes our hearts." In Christ our connection is made both with the universes of light that will never darken, and with the ages of ages in an eternity to come. Up what golden stairs we shall be permitted to ascend to reach one of the upper mansions of our Father's House, in the on-coming eternity, no one can tell. When God shall make all things new—resulting in new heavens as well as a new earth—we cannot tell how far the transformation will extend. In Christ we are linked to Immensity and to Eternity, and may be ours, if faithful, to behold the new Heavens in order to see the revelations of God's glory in ages yet to come.

יחזק יהוה את לב פרעה: hardened the heart of Pharaoh.

The meaning of the Hebrew verb in its Piel form, which is the word form used in this phase, is strengthen, make firm, encourage, or the like. It is used when speaking of strengthening the hands, the arms, the loins, of persons, and it is sometimes rendered to encourage, to make courageous. It is used of strengthening nails, as to straighten stakes, to strengthen a kingdom, to fortify cities, to strengthen bars. It is also spoken of restoring the weak and sick to health and the fainting to strength. From this primary meaning of the word, as applied to Pharaoh, it is clear that God did not change the qualities of the heart of the wicked king, but made firm, or confirmed his evil cowardly heart, in order that his cruel, oppressive nature might be fully manifested.

Pharaoh was cruel, vindictive and oppressive by natural disposition. Instead of softening down, and yielding in submission to God, he became more and more stubborn and rebellious. The plagues only frightened him, their removal confirmed and made strong his base depravity. God's dealings with Pharaoh were not designed to break him down, but to maintain him in power till his incorrigibleness should be made manifest. When this was fully demonstrated, God gave his hosts a watery grave in the Red Sea. If Pharaoh himself survived, it was that he might be exhibited as a serpent without fangs.

And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman. John iv. 27.

It is most probably the common supposition that the reason why the disciples were surprised to find their Lord and Master in communion with this woman was that she was a Samaritan. The real reason may be seen from the following quotation from a Jewish work entitled Pirke-Aboth—meaning the Sayings of the Fathers. These sayings have been translated from the Hebrew Edition of Prof. H. L. Strack, of Berlin, Germany, by B. Pick, Ph. D., for Hebraica, from which we make our quotation. The sayings are numbered:

"5. Jose, the son of Joohanan of Jerusalem, said: Let thy house be wide open, and let the poor be the sons of thy household, and indulge not much in conversation with a woman. (They—the sages—said this with reference to one's own wife, how much more with the neighbor's wife. Hence the sages said: Whoever indulges much in conversation with a woman, causes evil to himself, and neglects the study of the law, and his end is that he becomes an heir of gehenna."

As the Jews shaped their course of conduct after the "tradition of the elders," the reason for the surprise of the disciples is obvious; and further comment is unnecessary.

STILL ANOTHER SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATION.

Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners. 1 Cor. xv. 33.

The Greek New Testament makes the phrase—"evil communications corrupt good manners"—a quotation of some well known proverb, as employed by the apostle. From Pirke-Aboth we quote another saying, by number:

"7. Nithai of Arbela said: Keep aloof from a wicked neighbor, and attach not thyself to a wicked man, and do not think thyself exempt from punishment."

As we understand Nithai, "Do not think to escape contamination and its final punishment." A good reason for Paul's solemn warning.

A PAST EVERLASTING.

Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hast formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Psa. xc. 2

Hugh Miller thus, in lofty conception, and sublime diction, casts a mental gleam into a by-gone eternity and its creation evolutions.

"There are no sermons that seem stranger or more impressive to one who has acquired just a little of the language in which they are preached, than those which, according to the poet, are to be found in stones; a bit of fractured slate, embedded among a mass of rounded pebbles, proves voluble with ideas of a kind almost too large for the mind of man to grasp. The eternity that hath passed in an ocean without a further shore, and a finite conception may in vain attempt to span it over.

But from the beach, strewed with wrecks, on which we stand to contemplate it, we see far out towards the cloudy horizon, many a dim islet and many a pinnacled rock, the sepulchres of successive eras,—the monuments of consecutive creations; the entire prospect is studded over with these landmarks of a hoar antiquity, which, measuring out space from space, constitute the vast whole a province of time; nor can the eye reach to the open shoreless infinitude beyond, in which only God existed; and, as in a sea-scene in nature, in which headland stretches dim and blue beyond headland, and islet beyond islet, the distance seems not lessened, but increased, by the crowded objects—we borrow a larger not a smaller idea of the distant eternity, from the vastness of the measured periods that occur between."

"The Day of the Lord."

Is Christ to come to salvation? Thus it is written. Heb. ix. 28.

Will the day come to burn up the proud and wicked—the man of sin—by its brightness, but be "the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings?" So it reads. Mal iv. 2; 2 Thess. ii. 3.

Take the resurrection, restitution, regeneration, the days of heaven upon earth, all the sweet, precious and loving words, employed to win the heart of man and group them as one bright word-picture of the second coming of the Deliverer to earth's deliverance, with all blessing to be blessed, and then ask what bearing these visions of beauty and bliss have as to the notion that the "antichrist" is yet to come?

Answer first. It ignores the sphere and meaning of "anti" as "against, opposed, contrary to Christ."

Second. It ignores the deadly opposition to Christ at his birth. Matt. ii., and at his death, Acts iv. 27; "The kings of earth stood up against the Lord and against his Christ."

Third. It ignores the fact that "the antichrist" is characterized, centered in the professing church, and named 1800 years ago as "against, opposed, contrary" to Christ, in doctrine and controlling authority, even unto the martyrdom of his saints, Dan. vii. 23–26; Rev. xiii. 5–6; xvii. 6, 18, 24. The horn is feminine, in accord with "the woman, both reeling in Rome till its doom in fire!"

Fourth. It ignores the fact that horn and woman both abide there and end only at this fiery judgment. Dan. vii. 11; Rev. xvii. 1–6; xviii. 8; and the kingdom of Christ. Dan. vii. 14.

Fifth. It ignores "the time appointed," Dan. viii. 19; Acts xvii. 31, and that of the French Revolution and our age of travel and increase of knowledge are God's landmarks into "the time of the end!"

Sixth. It ignores the Jesuitical origin and aim of "the future antichrist" theory—that it was to exalt or canonize Roman saints, apotheosize the Pope, and crush out all reformation; itself being antichrist in all its makeup—blindly!

Seventh. The ultimate answer is that at every sign and promise for hope of salvation, it thrusts itself in with, "No, not now, nor nigh at the doors!" Antichrist first! (The future antichrist has precedence always, where it is so accepted in the drift of opinion.)

Thus it deranges and blindly perverts the prophecy, the promise, and revealed providence of God over our age. Hence, it has no rights in "his church" except to be known and cast out with "the enemy" who sowed such senseless tares.

For this purpose "the judgment is the righteous judgment of God" to end this and all evil, deliver man and earth from the bondage of corruption, Rom. viii. 21; and fill creation with hallelujahs transcending the seven thunders!

Antichrist having about had his day faith now cries, "come Lord Jesus" to accomplish the oath-confirmed promise of salvation, for thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, for ever, amen. "In the love of the spirit."

J. B. COOK.

Notes by the Way.

I left home May 26th and stopped over night with Brother and Sister Miller at Dakota, Ill. Had a pleasant visit with them and also visited my old time friend Mr. Lapp, living near the same place. Arrived at Lanark at 4:40 o'clock the 27th, and was received into the hospitality of Brother and Sister Ohmes, where I remained until next day, when, in company with Mr. Fox, I made my way to his place in the vicinity of the Union Church. Held meeting over Sunday. Visited with the brethren and friends in the vicinity till time for conference at East Plum River. Met with the brethren Friday evening. June 3rd we had a very pleasant meeting. Had a picnic or basket dinner in the grove both Saturday and Sunday. Our people seemed to enjoy the meeting very much.

As it is not my place to give a report of that meeting we will leave it and proceed on my journey. Left Plum River Monday morning and proceeded to Lanark in company with Brother Myers and was again received into the hospitality of Brother and Sister Ohmes, where I remained until Wednesday morning when I started for the grove meeting to be held at the great flowing well of Brother Watkins in Story Co., Iowa. Taking the C. M. & St. Paul R. R. at 8:10 in the morning I proceeded to Collins, Iowa, where I was met and conveyed to the residence of Brother Rogers in Story Co., where I remained under their kind hospitality until Friday morning, when I started for the meeting in company with Brother and Sister Rogers, a distance of about twenty-four miles, our conveyance this time being a team and buggy. We arrived there about four o'clock p. m., and met Brother G. M. Myers and others, who had preceded us there.

Now to behold the great wonder of the age, the great flowing well, which empties into a great tank through two eight inch tubes which carry the water to the height of about eight feet above the level of the ground. The tank empties out over the top of these tubes into the tank, from which it is conveyed into an artificial lake of about twelve or fifteen rods in width and forty rods long. On this lake Brother Watkins keeps two pleasure boats for the accommodation of all who like pleasure on water. This is quite a resort for invalids, the water containing great medicinal properties. This great abundance of water is obtained at a depth of sixty-three feet. I might say many more things about the well and its water, but we forbear and return to the meeting.

By time to commence meeting quite a number of brethren had gathered in. I spoke to the people the first night, Brother Myers next morning, and Brother Eychaner in the afternoon. I spoke again at night and Brother Myers again in the morning. We then had our dinners on the ground after which Brother Eychaner spoke again and I again in the evening. And let me say that such a throng of people I have not seen for many days; it put me in mind of an old fashioned Methodist camp meeting, such as they used to hold in my boyhood days.

Here we met many of our brethren whom we had not seen for years; Brother Page, formerly of Antioch, two Brother Appleyards, of Odebolt, Brother Robbins, of Sac City, Brother and Sister Hills of Storm Lake, Bro. and Sister Hipsher and Cbown of Irving, two Brother Eychaners of Jasper County, Brother and Sister Eychaner, of Marshalltown, and a number of brethren and sisters with whom I was not acquainted before.

This was the best meeting I ever attended in Iowa, without any exception. We held a breakup meeting on Monday morning, when all the brethren expressed satisfaction upon the result of our meeting. Here we took the parting hand, here we left the great flowing fountain of Story County and came in company with Brother and Sister Eychaner to their home in Marshalltown. Stopped over night with them, partaking of their hospitalities. Next morning, taking our leave of them we made our way to the depot. We took the train for Gladbrook, getting to Brother Berry's about one o'clock and remained with them till morning. Will finish this when I get home. Yours truly,

T. J. WHITESITT.

How to View the Second Appearing of Christ.

The appearing of Christ to the true believer should never be contemplated with fear. While his coming will be the occasion of alarm and sorrow to the unbelieving, it will be the occasion of unspeakable joy to Christians. We are to love and to look and wait for his appearing, and this is evidence that his manifestation is designed as a source of blessedness. What wonderful blessedness will be ours in the kingdom of God when in sweet and holy conversation with many who have lived in past ages; when they tell us how the hope of Christ's second coming and kingdom strengthened them and encouraged them in persecution and suffering.

No greater incentive to faithfulness and heavenly mindedness can exist than the thought of being chosen by God to be a joint-heir and a co-ruler with the Christ in the kingdom. If this thought will not lead the soul up to talk and commune with God, we know not what will. Nothing is better calculated than this to wean the soul from the world, and to make it forgetful of self in its efforts to please God.

It is very strange that any should be so blinded as not to see the close relation between this doctrine and practical godliness. The true tendency of it, if rightly viewed and held, is to lead to a holy life. Its influence in this direction is most powerful.

To us it seems sad that any should treat this doctrine with silence or indifference, still more sad that any should speak or write against it. They are leading their fellow-Christians astray, and if saved, cannot avoid suffering loss. The subject is of such infinite consequence that we earnestly beseech opposers to reconsider this matter, and accept the word of God as true, however contrary it may seem to preconceived opinions.

THE REMOVAL OF THE VAIL.

THE PRESENT.

It is an obvious fact, that an intellectual covering, or vail, resembling an entwined hedge, full of thorny obstructions, surrounds the minds of all nations, and "That the whole world lieth in darkness and wickedness," Gal. i. 4; 1 John v. 19—a darkness which ancient and modern philosophy never could remove or evade. It is not only a covering of the mind, in not fathoming scientific and abstruse problems—it is a darkness impenetrable in regard to spiritual things. The Lord Jesus has proclaimed: "Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John iii. 2, 3. And although the Vail is already partly removed, it is not "swallowed up." For now, we see through a glass "in a riddle." 1 Cor. xiii. 12 (margin), and, how true is that word of the great Apostle of the Gentiles. What a diversity of opinions are found concerning the fulfillment of the prophetic word! there is "a running to and fro." Dan. xii. 4, although knowledge, or "the teachers" are increased. Some learned men not only disbelieve the personal coming of our Lord, but combat it in their writings. Some, who profess to believe the prophetic word, never speak of the restoration of Israel, and many of their explanations are far from clear, not having the true ring in them. Indeed, how very few of those, who are waiting for the kingdom to come, live in a daily expectation and joy, to meet their Lord? and in a heavenly atmosphere that fills their hearts and enables them to walk as priests of God. Rom. xii. 1. Without any reserve, we must acknowledge, that we are yet babes in Christ, babes in understanding, hoping for the coming day of freedom and joy.

THE FUTURE.

Israel, and the future, the ingathering of Israel, and receiving the first Hebrew: "the head dominion" Micah, iv. 8, of the nations, is a fact, which is plainly taught in the prophetic word—and at that time the Lord of Hosts shall make on Mount Zion such a joyous and intellectual feast, of which we are not able to give an adequate description, only we desire to point out, that the Vail wrapping or covering shall not be taken away by degrees, but that it shall be "swallowed up." At the present time, darkness of the mind is only taken away by degrees, but then, it shall be removed and destroyed—it will be expelled, like darkness is expelled by the rising of a clear morning light. No doubt, in higher decree the saints shall experience the same blessing, which was enjoyed by Solomon: 2 Chron. i. 7–12, "That wisdom and knowledge was granted unto him." Is Isa. xxx. 26, in connection with Isa. xix. 6, and Isa. lx. 19, 20, is given a glorious description of that conquest of light over the powers of darkness; and that, that light surely will embrace; "Intellectual powers" is plainly stated in Heb. viii. 10–12, where the Lord saith concerning the Jews, the house of Israel, "I will put my laws unto their mind, and write them in their hearts, and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people, and they shall not teach every man his neighbor and every man his brother, saying: know the Lord, for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest." In Zech. xii. 8 we read: "At that day, Israel shall be as David and the house of David shall be as God, as the Angel of the Lord before them."

What a joyous state! and what a glorious freedom it shall be, to rise to such a high standard of intellect, to be free from perplexing doubts, and to walk in the full light of God's countenance! Then the book of nature will be studied and the confession will be made carefully: "I believe in God, the Father, the Maker of heaven and earth."

That Vail, being taken away, the saints shall see the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! and fathomed the length and breadth and depth of that ocean: "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge." Eph. iii. 18, 19, and then the inner mind shall be full, (as far as they shall be able to comprehend) "that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." 2 Cor. v. 19.

At that time, Israel especially, will discover the vast extent of the Abrahamic and Davidic covenants of which "Their elder brother" after the flesh, Jehovah Jesus, is the beginning, the centre, and the end. Rev. v. 5. When they shall stand "at the mount" with Adonai Jehovah they shall experience: "a love which many waters cannot quench, neither the floods can drown," and when they shall taste the honey-drops taken from the slain Lion of Judah and will sing that new song, Rev. vii. 4; Rev. xiv. 1–5, which no other nation ever could learn, a privilege which never was enjoyed by the first Adam, then they shall understand the words of Isaiah xxv. 6–8, being partakers of that "banquet of present fat things" prepared for them by the faithful God of the covenant. Psa. lxxxix. 1.

But, above all, who is able to give a graphic description of that period, when the covering, now spread over all the nations, shall be swallowed up! In that day, there shall be one Lord, and his name One." Zech. xiv. 6, and in every place incense and a pure offering shall be offered to him. Mal. i. 11. Who can comprehend the degree of clearness which the Holy Spirit shall shed upon every page of God's inspired word, Acts ii. 16–21; when the Spirit will be poured out upon all flesh, indeed, every one shall see and observe the union and unity existing between the Old and New Testaments. Moses, the prophets and the Psalms will shine as a galaxy, and the Revelation of Jesus Christ will be an open volume of heavenly treasures and heavenly light. Then the garden of Eden will join hands with the garden of Gethsemane. Then the mountain of Moriah will be connected as a chain of so many links, with the mountain of Transfiguration, with Mount Olivet, and with the mountain spoken of in Isaiah ii. 2; xxv. 6, and all will centre, as in one focus, the hill of Calvary, where the Lamb was slain, as the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; yea, then the redemption of our bodies revealed in Romans viii. 23, will be experienced, bodies made glorious and strong, to receive the fulness and effulgence of the revelations of God, when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters that cover the sea." Isa. xi 9. One chorus will arise from the purified earth: "Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever." Amen.

RETROSPECT.

How clear in mind, how bright in pure ideas, and how delightful in contemplations must have been the soul of the first Adam! and how joyful must have been the communion with his Creator, when he heard the footsteps of the Eternal walking in the garden in the cool of the day! and although his mind was not matured by sweet experiences or reminiscences of the past, yet he was in such a state of sweet repose and tranquility of mind that his thoughts were as so many pearly dewdrops shining in the light of the morning. He had, as it were, the grasp of his own self; his individuality and intellectuality were unclouded and fresh. What an incomparable loss has been caused by his departure from God! and his fall was the ruin of mankind; but, thanks to God, the time is coming that the prophecy found in Isa. xxv. 6–8 must be fulfilled.—A. C. Tris, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

OBITUARY.

ZINK.—At Philomath, Benton County, Oregon, December 29th, 1886, Benjamin F. Zink, aged 57 years, 4 months, and 20 days.

He has been a member of the Church of God for nearly sixteen years, has lived in this county fifteen years, where he was all alone in this faith until the last three years when three of the family joined to that blessed faith, in the faith of the Lord's return to gather his children home at the resurrection morn, when the trumpet shall sound. So we do not morn as those who have no hope in Christ our Lord.

ALFRED M. ZINK.

ZINK.—At Philomath, Benton County, Oregon, Sept. 6, 1886, Willis Zink, aged 18 years, 4 months and 18 days.

He died in faith, believing the promises of the Lord to his faithful followers at his glorious appearing to awake us from our graves and give us a home in his bright kingdom. And we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

For the Information of Teachers.

The Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh will sell excursion tickets to Chicago and return on July 5th to 12th, 1887, for the annual meeting of the National Educational Association. Return coupons will be good until July 18th. Special extension of time for return trip can be arranged at the meeting through W. D. Parker, Superintendent of Transportation. The Pennsylvania Lines, operated by the Pennsylvania Company, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburgh Railroad Company, control direct and short routes to Chicago. The fare for the Teacher's Convention will be as low as via other routes. Pullman Palace Sleeping and Parlor Cars and comfortable day coaches run through on all express trains, landing passengers in the Union Passenger Station in the heart of the city. Before making final arrangements you will find it worth while to call upon or address the nearest ticket agent of the above named lines or Mr. F. M. Caldwell, D. P. A., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

He will surely enjoy the favor of both mothers and babies who invests another baby-play as available as "This little pig went to market, etc.," which is said a thousand times a year, while the happy mother counts the five little rosy toes to the music of baby's alternate suspense and ringing laughter.

A well-known Boston kindergartner has made, and "Babyland" prints, a series of nursery jingle-tales with running accompaniments of pictures and finger-play which mothers and babes go over together with equal delight.

There are two sets of pictures, one for the eyes and one for the hands. The latter show how the fingers can represent rabbits, pigs, mice, birds, flowers and clouds in the sky.

This series of baby-delight alone is enough to make the fortune of Babyland. But it isn't alone. There are puzzles so easy that baby can almost read them, and rhymes that sing themselves in her ear as she goes to sleep, and pleasant tales to come again in her dreams.

There is only one rich and beautiful Babyland. Send to D. Lothrop Company, Boston, five cents for a sample copy.

Dr. L. C. Thomas of Dover, Delaware, wishes us to state that he is absent from home and will be for several weeks, but letters addressed to him at the above place will be forwarded to him.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE CROSSING PATHS.

Our far diverging lines of life
Have for a moment crossed,
To touch, and wind away, and be
In the dim distance lost;
No chance is all our wanderings
Has brought us heretofore
So face to face, to pause, and speak,
And part, and meet no more.

As passing ships, where wide-flung sails
Are for an instant furled,
We hail, and barter words of cheer,
Brought from the under world;
With eager question, quick reply,
Across the deck we leant
Then part, and put the alleaves
Of ocean wastes between.

We turn and watch the fading sail
Until our eyes grow dim,
And the blue billows melt away
On the horizon's rim.
How sad it seems! a few brief words,
A kiss, a hand-clasp given;
Then—paths that cross on land or sea,
No more this side of heaven!

Well, let them cross, or cross they may,
And let them still diverge,
Sundered by leagues of desert land,
By mountain or by surge,—
We know there is one central spot
No traveling feet have neared,
Where earth's divergent, crossing paths
Shall meet and end at last!

Conference Report.

According to announcement the Church of God in Indiana met in Conference capacity at Antioch, Indiana, Thursday afternoon, June 9, 1887. The programme that had been prepared and published in these columns was taken up in regular order and with only slight variation followed throughout the entire meeting. In our last issue appear the different papers read at the Conference. These papers were recommended to be published in THE RESTITUTION that all might see the spirit that pervaded the meeting throughout, namely, a determination to do more and better work for the Master.

A committee on Bible readings was appointed to consider and report the best methods of holding Bible reading services. Also as to the desirability and practicability of preparing and printing Bible reading lessons. This committee reported as follows:

"Your committee recommend varied methods of Bible readings. Assigning references at outset to volunteer readers to produce passage when called for; distributing reference slips among class at beginning, to be read as called for during the reading; and where class is made up of persons who are ready at finding Bible passages, pre-assignment of references may be dispensed with. The leader may allow questions at the close of the reading, to be confined to the subject under consideration.

"The preparation and printing of Bible readings is both desirable and practicable. These readings can be published in our paper, THE RESTITUTION, so as to bring into the hands of all its readers a means of work which they can use in their several localities.

"These readings may be arranged by a committee which may be persuaded to do the work for some time to come free of expense, and the publishing will cost nothing more (through the courtesy of our publisher) than any other equal amount of matter in the columns of THE RESTITUTION.

"Your committee recommends the appointment of suitable persons as a committee to prepare and publish a system of Bible readings."

The following was then offered and carried:

Believing as we do that much good may be done in the name of the Master by holding Bible reading services, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed whose duty it shall be to prepare Bible reading lessons and cause the same to be printed and circulated among the brotherhood.

Resolved, That all the other State Conferences be and they are hereby requested to appoint committees to co-operate with and assist the committee of this Conference in this work.

A committee was then appointed for this work, consisting of S. Roxana Wiese, E. O. Thompson, Fannie T. Dwiggins, S. A. Chaplin, Robert Railsback and L. E. Conner.

A committee on church work was appointed whose duty it was to report to the Conference,

1st. The best method of keeping up an interest among the members of a congregation which has a minister who preaches for them.

2nd. The best way of keeping up an interest in congregations where there is no minister to preach.

3rd. How can the young people be best interested.

4th. How can those outside of the churches be interested and brought into the church.

This committee reported,

1st. The members should work in union with the minister especially in singing, praying, and exhorting one another, and in social meetings, using their influence in securing a congregation.

2nd. One of the members lead in meeting by appointment previous to meeting, and meet often.

3rd. Treat the young courteously and teach them that they too must appear at the judgment.

4th. By the members showing by precept and example that there is reality in the work.

A committee appointed to report to the Conference the best ways of doing evangelical work, returned the following:

"In the judgment of your committee the best way to do evangelical work is by the tongue of the enthusiastic, warm-hearted and clear-headed evangelist, such being the mode of the apostolic church. That the evangelist or the evangelists be supported by a fund raised by the several churches composing the conference. That tracts and papers, paid for out of a fund raised in the same way as the evangelist fund, shall be furnished free of charge for distribution.

"Second, that an another plan and auxilery to the first mode, Bible readings should be given by the evangelists or any other person competent to perform such work. In our judgment regarding women, as equally fitted with men for this work. And further that tracts and papers be placed in the hands of persons giving Bible readings.

The following was offered and carried:

Resolved, That it is not contrary to the teaching of the Bible for women to do the work of an evangelist, and we believe it to be our duty to encourage all Christian women in this great and glorious work.

The following churches were represented and are placed upon the list kept by the Secretary as belonging to this Conference.

Churches at Macy, Argos, Plymouth, Rensselaer, Antioch, Roll, Claysville, Pierceton, Hamlet and Teegarden. The Eagle Creek Church was not represented, owing to sickness.

Brother John Foore of Kansas reported the condition of the Master's cause in his State, as also did Brother H. R. Carter, who labored in Kansas all last winter. Brother S. T. Hook reported his labors which are mostly in Illinois, and show earnest and favor attended with success.

The Treasurer's report showed $23.50 on hand for evangelical work, and several churches reported amounts ready but not yet paid in that will swell it to about $50.00.

A committee was appointed to arrange places for work to be done by one or two evangelists to be engaged at our yearly meeting, which comes in three months. This committee consists of I. G. Roberts, W. Tuttle and Wm. Railsback. This committee was instructed to have Brother L. E. Conner start out one month previous to our next meeting and visit all churches in the State who do not now belong to this organization and urge them to send representatives and join us in this work for Christ.

A committee was appointed to correspond with other State Conferences looking to a National Conference of delegates from each State. This committee being A. P. Harsh, J. H. Willey, T. O. Taber, A. R. Underwood and R. S. Dwiggins.

This report is already long and I will close it. Brother B. W. Woodward, of Michigan, was with us and did some excellent preaching, as he always does. The meeting throughout was good, much work was planned for, and much depends on the different committees appointed, for the lasting good of the gathering together. To each member of a committee, I say, the responsibility is upon you. Do not wait for some one else, but act, and act now—not next week.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

Report of Meeting.

On Friday June 10th, our meeting began at Watkin's Grove, four miles south of Story City, Iowa. We had a good meeting. Brethren T. J. Whitesitt, G. M. Myers and myself did the preaching. The subjects discoursed upon were, "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." The meeting closed Monday, June 13th.

It is estimated that over six hundred people were upon the ground at one time, notwithstanding the rain.

The great flowing wells poured out volumes of sparkling water for the thirsty people, and we tried to show them that there was a well of living water of which if a man drinks he will never thirst again.

Our best meeting was on Monday, when brethren long separated united in a social meeting. Those who were present were mostly old veterans, men who have grown gray in the Master's service, men who have fought for the truth so long and so faithfully that their courage and their fidelity is beyond question, and the many tears of joy told more eloquently than words the story of our common hope. So long had we been separated that in some instances kind faces once familiar had so changed or faded from memory that at first we did not recognize them. But there was one thing we had not forgotten. Though many years had passed and many changes had come, we all had the same hope and faith. We rejoiced together in the promises to the fathers, and in the prospect of eternal life when Jesus comes.

The burden of the meeting fell upon Brother Watkins and his amiable companion who did all in their power to make it pleasant for all who came. The neighbors too were very kind. They not only attended our meetings but opened their doors and cupboards to share with us. God will reward them for their kindness, for has not the Master said that they "shall in no case loose their reward."

Here we met Brother L. W. Page, of Antioch, Ill., whom so many know, also the Appleyard brothers, faithful in the truth; Nathan Hill and wife formerly of Illinois; Brothers Wm. and Milton Eyebanker of Jasper Co., Ia., who are always at our meetings. Brother Hipsher and wife, of Irving, and Brother G. W. Chowe, who have long been in the battle field; Sister Gilbert, once a pioneer of the truth with her husband at Cordova, Ill., twenty-five years ago. Her husband has long ago fallen under the power of death, but in hope of a resurrection to eternal life. Her home is now in Iowa.

There were also new faces—new accessions to the truth—present. I may mention among them Brother Henry Leonard, of Zearing, Iowa, and Brother J. E. Robbins of Sac City, Ia. Sister Griffeth, 75 years old was also present. She spoke touchingly of her loneliness and the hope of a future resurrection when her dead would live again.

So we are scattering the good seed on the prairies of Iowa and hope that fruit will follow. May many rejoice in the kingdom of God as the result of this grove meeting and be saved by the truth first set before them at Watkins' great flowing wells. Yours for the gospel, A. J. EYCHANER.

Meeting at Irving, Iowa.

Sunday, June 26th, we spent in preaching at Irving. We had a good time. Four persons yielded obedience to the gospel of the kingdom. Grandmother Edmunds, aged 83 years, came forward and requested baptism. She is mother-in-law of Brother Levi Marsh whom so many of the brotherhood know. It was a surprise to us all. She became convinced that the only door into the Christ was through baptism, and with a heroic firmness she followed the Master down into a watery death, "baptized into his death," and arose in a new life in Christ Jesus. She now rejoices in the hope founded upon the promise whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Then there were baptized also Brother Hipsher's daughter, Mrs. Nobles, Mrs. Fox and Brother Sugart's daughter, a young lady of intelligence. In the morning we spoke from the text, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36. In the evening we spoke from the first Psalm, and tried to show the tendency and end of a sinful life and the blessedness and peace of a life of virtue and holiness. We return again the first Sunday in August when we hope more will be baptized. Yours in the hope, A. J. EYCHANER.

Conference Report.

The Conference met at East Plum River, Ill., from June 3rd to 5th, 1887. A goodly number were present and some from a distance, with Dr. S. I. Jacobs, T. J. Whitesitt, David Gans and G. Myers present to preach the word. Saturday was entirely taken up in discussing different subjects.

1. Shall we as a people live.

2. Shall we organize.

3. How shall we utilize our forces and to what extent to do the most good. Quite an interest prevailed in the discussion of these questions with no dissenting voices till the last of the second question, to organize, on which all seemed to be a unit, but one stood aloof from all.

With Brother G. Myers in the chair, Geo. Piper, M. M. Mitchell, D. Gans, were appointed a committee on arrangements, and the writer clerk.

Preaching Sunday forenoon by Bro. Myers, then a lunch and afternoon preaching by Brother Whitesitt. In the evening Brother Whitesitt addressed the people again. On Sunday a large number of brethren and sisters partook of the bread and wine in commemoration of our Lord's death and suffering. On Sunday our house was too small to hold the people; many had to stand outdoors at the windows. SIMON P. RENNER.

The Book of Jobab, called Job, Son of Zare, Son of Hruguel, Son of Hesau, Son of Isme, Son of Habraam.—According to the Septuagint.

CHAP. XLII.

1. And Job taking up the discourse saith unto the Lord;

2. I know that thou hast all ability, and that nothing is impossible with thee;

3. Who indeed is he that hideth counsel from thee; and is sparing of spoken (oracular) words and thinketh to hide thee? and who will tell me what I have not known, great and wondrous things that I have not fully understood?

4. Hearken unto me, O Lord, that I also may speak plainly; I will inquire of thee indeed, and do thou teach me.

5. I have heard a report of thee before with the ear, but now just now mine eye hath seen thee.

6. Therefore I consider myself of little account and have melted away; and I account myself earth and ashes.

7. And it came to pass after the Lord had spoken all these (oracular) words unto Job, the Lord said unto Eliphas the Thaimanite, thou hast sinned, thou and thy two friends. For ye have not said anything true in my sight, even as hath my courtier Job.

8. And now take seven yearling bullocks and seven rams a year old and go your way unto my courtier Job, and he will offer in the way of a fruit-offering for you; and Job my courtier will offer a votive offering for you, because if he doth not I will not accept his face: Yea, if it had not been for his sake, I had destroyed you. For ye have not spoken anything true against my courtier Job.

9. And Eliphas the Thaimanite and Baldad the Sauchite and Sophar the Minaite went their way, and did even as the Lord had directed them, and he unloosened their sin for Job's sake.

10. And the Lord increased Job; and when he had offered his votive offering for his three friends also he remitted their sin; and the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before in a duplicate way.

11. And all his brethren and sisters heard of all that had occurred to him, and they came unto him, and all that know him from the first; and eating and drinking with him they comforted him, and wondered at all that the Lord had brought upon him: and each one gave him a lamb and a tetradrachmos [four drachmes in weight value] of gold and unstamped [not coined].

12. And the Lord blessed the last of Job more than the first; and his chattels were fourteen thousand sheep, six thousand camels, a thousand yokes of cattle, a thousand female asses of the pasture.

13. And seven sons and three daughters are begotten by him:

14. And he called the first daughter Day, and the second Cassia, and the third Horn-of-Plenty:

15. And there were not found when compared with the daughters of Job any better disposed in that which is under the heavens, and the father gave them an inheritance among their brethren.

16. And Job lived after his affliction one hundred and seventy years; and all the years he lived were two hundred and forty: and Job saw his sons and his sons sons, a fourth generation;

17. And Job came to his end, an old man (or but an Elder) and full of days:

18. And it hath been written that he will stand up again in the midst of those whom the Lord standeth up.

This person is interpreted from the Syriac book as being a dweller in the Ausitic land, on the borders of Idumaia and Arabia; and he was first named Jobab; and his father was Zare a son of the sons of Hesau, and his mother Bosorra; so that he was fifth from Habraam.

And these are the kings that reigned in Edom, of which province he also was a ruler. First Balak son of Beor, and the name of his city Drunaba; and after Balak Jobab the one called Job; and after him Asom the one who was a Sheik (a leader, lit.) from out the province of Thaimani: and after them Adad a son of Barad, the one who smote Madiam, (Midian O. V.) in the plain of Moab, and the name of his city Gethaim: and the friends who came to him were Eliphaz of the sons of Hesau; king of the Thaimanites; Baldad petty ruler of the Sauchites; Sophar king of the Minaites.

The Coming of Christ Again.

When Christ went up into heaven from Mount Olivet, it was for the advantage and good of his followers; for his going away was the sending of the Spirit, who has continued with them all through the ages—for they are now being prepared for the kingdom—and when Christ comes again, it will still be for their advantage; for his coming the second time will be to receive them to himself. Oh, let believers in this precious truth rejoice in it more and more. Receive from it all the benefit it is designed to give, all the strength and encouragement it is intended to impart. No truth is used more frequently than this as a motive to growth and development in the Christian graces. Fellow-Christians who see not this truth, and who have never tasted of its preciousness and sweetness, may sneak slightingly of you and of the doctrine; some may so far forget their religious obligations as brethren, and the common courtesies of social life, as to sneer and ridicule. Never mind that. No opposition can take it out of the Bible. No sneers or ridicule can prevent the fulfilment of the prophecies. No persecution of the truth, or of those who hold it, will retake the Savior in heaven when the hour has come for his descent.

"God Knows."

Through all my little daily cares there is
One thought that comfort brings whene'er it comes;
"He this—" "God knows." He knows
Each struggle that my hard heart makes to bring
My will to His. Often when night-time comes
My heart is full of tears, because the good
That seemed, at morn, so easy to be done,
Has proved so hard; but then remembering
That a kind Father is my Judge, I say,
"He knows." And so I lay me down with trust
That His good hand will give me needed strength
To better do His work in coming days.

From Herald's Herald we take the following description of a visit lately made to the Sea of Galilee by Z. T. Sweeney a correspondent of the Christian Evangelist.

"After dinner (7 P. M.) a number of us walked down the shore of the lake and spent an hour in overlooking the scene by moonlight. I shall never forget the holy memories of that hour. The moon was shining brightly and the lake was perfectly calm. No sound was heard but an occasional howl from a jackal in the distance, and the silvery ripple of the scarcely perceptible waves that lapped the sand at our feet. An occasional cloudlet would cover for a moment the face of the moon and throw its shadowy form upon the beautiful waters and then pass away to leave the scene all the more beautiful for the momentary shadow. It was such a time as the poet mentions, when he says: 'The lips move not when the heart feels most.' We sat in silence, drinking in all the sweet inspirations the surroundings recalled, till at last, one of us started with gentle voice:—

'Oh! I love to think of Jesus
As he sat beside the Sea,
When the waves were only
Murmuring on the strand.'

All joined in and we sang it through. Then some one else began 'Sweet Galilee, blue Galilee,' which was also sung with a number of other songs suggested by the surroundings. It was an 'evening of song' never equaled in any of our experiences, and probably never will be surpassed till we shall sing with sweeter cadence than mortal tongue can sing, the song of Moses and the Lamb, upon the sapphire shores of God's eternal Sea of Life."

A Singular Coincidence.

In the course of conversation with the Rev. W. C. Van Meter, who is on a visit to this country in a brief interval of his mission work in Italy, he informed us that he has been enabled to print a large number of copies of the Gospel according to John in Italian for use in the Sunday-schools of Rome. The children there are following the International Course; the subjects of which just now are in that gospel. A singular coincidence, which shows the changes which God has worked, is that the gospel was actually printed in the room used as the torture-chamber of the Inquisition. The printer who had undertaken the work was obliged to leave his former business premises, and, looking around for a new location, selected rooms in an ancient edifice that appeared suitable. There he set up his presses and compositors' cases. A strange-looking iron ring in the ceiling arrested his attention, and on making inquiries about it learned that he was actually in the old Inquisition, and that the room he occupied had served as a torture-chamber. There within the walls that have resounded with the cries of men and women suffering for conscience' sake, he set up and printed the gospel of John.

The Last of the "Hermit Nations" Opened to Receive the Gospel.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come." Matt. xxiv. 14.

Here is a sign of the proximity of the end, from Christ himself, which it would seem could hardly be questioned by the most determined opposer. Some six years ago H. W. Beecher wrote: "I know of but one tribe or people who have not at some time received the gospel as a witness." Whether he referred to Thibet I do not know, but suppose he did. It will be remembered by those who were present at our anniversary at Hebron last year, that Bro. Blackstone, in his address on missions, referred to Thibet as the only nation which had not received the gospel; and also said, "A deputation of Moravian missionaries is laboring on the border of Thibet, and determined to enter the moment the door is opened." They were expecting English influence to open the way. The Faithful Witness for March contains a part of a letter written by a Moravian minister, Rev. Eugene Siebert, from which we make the following extract: "Our missionaries, I would add, have been laboring for a number of years in the West Himalaya district;..... and not until last year would [could?] they penetrate into Ladak, which is in Thibet proper. They are not tolerated there; and what concessions have been made have been through English official influence. They have, however, accomplished very much and very important preliminary work, in the way of translating large portions of the Scriptures,....and those have been printed and large editions distributed far and wide." He also speaks of four families having united with the missionary to form the first church of the Thebians "in his own hired house."

Thus the last of the "hermit nations" is opening to receive the gospel; the last impediments are being removed out of the way of "the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" How long it may take the witness to complete this, his final testimony, we know not; but we know when a case has been pending many days in court—when an innumerable company of witnesses have been called till the public become weary—the announcement that the last witness is on the stand, brings relief,—the end is expected at once. So here, the long array of witnesses have been hasting on their way year after year, and century after century,

"Bringing to every nation
The knowledge of its end."

until the world had almost forgotten the scene that shall follow the final testimony. But the announcation rings in our ears: The last witness is giving his testimony! How it should startle every one to inquire: Am I ready for the decision of the court? Then shall the end come! Saints of God, "lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Sinners, beware! the last call of mercy is ringing in your ears. Oh, make peace with him—

"Whose wrath you cannot bear;
Fly to the shelter of the cross
And find salvation there."

The Supernatural Claims of Jesus.

In a recent issue of the Sunday Republican there was an editorial on the "Egoism of Jesus," suggested by a late remark of a distinguished Unitarian clergyman in the East to the effect that a majority of that body "now recognize nothing as supernatural about Christ." The Republican thinks it ought not to require the culture of Unitarians to see that there is at least one thing about Christ that is supernatural, namely: "His transcendent, unapproachable egoism." While he is described by the Evangelists as "a perfect example of meekness and self-sacrifice," yet "his talk was constantly of himself." He "not only spoke continually of himself but put forth personal claims for himself the like of which had never been made before and have never been made since, and such as had never even been conceived before." The following illustrations are cited:—

Before Abraham was I am.

Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away.

Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.

He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me hath everlasting life.

I am the bread of life. He that cometh to Me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on Me, shall never thirst.

I am the light of the world.

I am from above.

I am not of this world.

I am the way, the truth and the life. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.

He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me. And he that taketh not his cross and followeth after Me is not worthy of Me.

"There have been," says the Republican, "great and good men in the world—and there have been great and bad men. There have been fanatics and impostors; but no man, however great and good, or great and bad; however wild a fanatic, or enormous an impostor, ever lived who dared to make such claims, or could even have conceived them, supposing he possessed the hardihood to assert them. Even now, eighteen centuries after they were spoken by this wonderful person, no man has dared to repeat and appropriate them. All men do not accept the words and recognize the supreme and absolute claims of this wonderful person, but all men—those against him as well as those for him—do by common consent, carefully abstain from the ground covered by these claims, and leave it to him alone." These lofty claims would indicate the most inordinate, not to say insane vanity, coming from a mere man. But they were uttered by one who was "meek and lowly in heart," and who could stoop to the humble service of washing his disciples' feet. They were spoken by one who treated with disdain all those adventitious aids which seekers after earthly fame and power covet so eagerly, such as wealth, the approval of the mighty, and an earthly crown and sceptre. What possible explanation is there of these remarkable claims, blended with an equally remarkable meekness and unselfishness, save the consciousness of his divine nature and mission?

The "Star of Bethlehem."

The Kentucky astronomer who is reported to have discovered the Star of Bethlehem is Prof. John M. Klein of the observatory at Hartford, Ky. He is indignant because of the doubt which has been cast by Prof. Proctor and others upon the genuineness of his discovery, and in a letter dated June 9, and published in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, he describes his method of observation and its results as follows:

"I belong to the modern school of astronomers, and have discovered that by the use of a smoked glass and a mirror attachment to my telescope I can detect heavenly bodies, even in close proximity to the sun, in broad daylight. Any schoolboy or any person who has gazed upon an eclipse of the sun through a smoked glass can readily understand the principle involved in my new method. It is not necessary for me to wait until the shades of night appear in order to detect a heavenly body, which by that time would be below the horizon, and consequently invisible from our latitude.

If Prof. Proctor will take the trouble to provide himself with modern astronomical instruments—with a smoked glass and a mirror—and endow his old-fogy mind with a few modern and progressive astronomical ideas, and will take a peep heavenward about 4 o'clock any afternoon this time of year, he will find the constellation of Cassiopeia in the position I have described it, and in the midst of that rich constellation he will see the Star of Bethlehem blazing forth with most intense."

Prof. Klein does not claim the discovery as being the Tycho B... which appeared in the year 1264 in a tract in the heavens... Cassiopeia and Cepheus, but claims it as the original Star of Bethlehem, and challenges any one to prove that it is not.

THE HEBREW'S LAMENT.

Thou art the land of all my dreams,—
Thy wanderer's heart is thine,
And oft he lingers by thy streams,
O holy Palestine!

A stranger in a stranger's land
O'er hill and vale I roam;
But hope forever points her hand
Towards my father's home.

They tell me that on Zion's hill
The Cross and Crescent shine:
But oh, my heart is with thee still,
Beloved Palestine.

I know that Israel's weary race
Are scorned on every shore,
And scarcely find a dwelling place
Where they were lords before.

Yet, 'mid the darkness and the gloom,
A light begins to break;
O Israel, from the dreary tomb
Thy buried hopes awake,—

And lips that raise the fervent prayer,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"
Shall change the wailings of despair
To the triumphant song.

And I may live to see the hour—
The hour that must be near,—
When in his royalty and power
Our Shiloh will appear.

Till then my prayers will rise for thee,
Till then my heart be thine,
O land beyond the stormy sea,
O holy Palestine.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. Thomas.—No. 10.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

Then again, they tell us, in their own words, that "Jesus was the begotten Son of God by faith, as the saints are the begotten sons of God!" Let us see, how are the saints begotten? Paul says, "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 26. So then, Christ Jesus became the Son of God by faith in Christ Jesus, did he? Paul also says to the church at Corinth, where he had been preaching the gospel, "I have begotten you through the gospel." So then, Christ was begotten through the gospel of Christ! Think of this. Could anything be more preposterous? But they forgot that the saints are to be at the most only adopted sons while Jesus is "God's own Son." The saints in being begotten by faith, receive only "the spirit of adoption," and are then "waiting for the adoption." Rom. viii. 15, 22. "That we might receive the adoption of sons." Gal. iv. 5. "God having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by or through Jesus Christ." Eph. i. 5. Thus we, mortal human beings, are begotten in mind, by faith in Jesus Christ, the word of truth, the gospel, and by baptism, which is a figure of burial, resurrection and adoption, we are adopted into the "household of faith," ultimately, if faithful, to be adopted in fact into the son-ship or God-family, by being made "partakers of the divine nature" by the gift of the Father of the family. But Jesus, the elder brother, was begotten, mind and body, as a person or being, by the Power of the Highest, Holy Spirit, and was therefore God's own, real and only supernaturally begotten Son. When we were the children of another:—"children of the wicked one"—the diabolos, in the flesh-nature, the Father granted the privilege to become the children of himself, the children of God (John i. 12), by being begotten by faith, and ultimately being born from the dead with Spirit-nature, thus becoming by gift literally adopted sons or children, into the God-family, possessed of the Father-nature. But Jesus, by his [illegible] begettal and birth, being God's own Son, and by his holy and sinless life as a sequence, was entitled to the Spirit-birth from the dead, to the Father-nature, as the first-born among many brethren; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. He inherited the family name, as well as the same which signified that God-nature, because of his right. He was therefore not an adopted son like his brethren, for he was God's own from his conception and birth. He was not even begotten by the Power of God thus become God's unique Son; it was not necessary for him to be begotten again like a mere man of a sinful mind and character, in order to be born from the dead with a divine nature. That is the vast difference between the begettal of the saints and that of Jesus.

Again they take another position and claim that Jesus became the only begotten Son when he was baptized, and the Holy Spirit then descended upon him, and he was then filled and anointed with the Holy Spirit, and the voice from heaven said, this is my beloved Son. But if this position be true, Jesus a son of Joseph, it follows that he was not God's Son until then; besides, there is not a word in the declaration that Jesus then became God's Son. It is therefore simply a groundless assertion. (But I will again notice this being filled with the Spirit.) And more than that; about eighteen years before Jesus was baptized, when he was only twelve years old, he showed that God was his Father, and said, "he must be about his Father's business," and thus informed his mother when she spoke of Joseph as his father, that he knew and understood that his real Father was God. This is positive proof that Jesus was God's beloved Son long before he was baptized, when he was a boy only twelve years old. "And he increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Luke ii. 48-52. Then again; John the Baptist called Jesus "the LORD" before he was baptized. He said, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Matt. iii. 3; Luke iii. 4, 21. This is additional proof that he was the Son of God before his baptism, and also that he was not begotten by Joseph—a mere man. David also called him Lord, and he said, "the Spirit of the Lord spake by me." The Spirit in all the Prophets spoke of him as the Lord. Did they mean the son of Joseph—a mere man? Just stop and think a moment. Were the prophets always talking about a mere man? When Isaiah, speaking prophetically of him said, "The Lord (the Father) hath laid on him the iniquity of us all, neither was there deceit found in his mouth; by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many." Did he mean a mere man? Oh no; Jesus as a person or Being was "the Lord," the Father's Son, from his birth. He was the "Holy One" whom the Father "formed from the womb, to be his servant to bring Jacob (the twelve tribes scattered all over the world) again to him, that Israel be gathered to him." Isa. xlix. 5-7. R. V. margin. He was the Holy One of Israel, of whom it will soon be said, "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion; for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." Isa. xii. 6. The Holy One of God. Mark i. 24. Yes, the angel told the truth, when he said, "that Holy One which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." He was begotten and born the Holy One, the Lord, the Son of God, the Messiah, the king of Israel; for he said himself, "to this end was I born BORN;" not to this end was I begotten by faith and baptized.

Then again they take another turn, and tell us that Jesus became the Son of God by his resurrection. Their words are, "he was begotten of God when raised from the dead, read Acts xiii. 33-35." Let us see; if Jesus was not the Son of God until his resurrection, then he was not the Son of God when he died—when he was crucified—and the Son of God has never died; and therefore Paul must be mistaken when he says "we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son:" and when he said, "He spared not his own Son but delivered him up for us all." Jesus himself also must have been mistaken when he told Nicodemus that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." Here we have positive proof by Jesus himself, that he was the Father's only-begotten Son when he was conceived, born, raised up and sent into the world and given to die as the Lamb of God, to take away the sin of the world. The passage referred to in the above Josephite quotation, Acts xiii. 33-37, contains a reference to Psa. ii. 7, "This day have I begotten thee." I have already shown that according to Dr. Young, this phrase includes the Spirit begettal, the birth, and the resurrection of Jesus—the raising him up from his conception to his resurrection, that is, raising him up by his begettal and his being brought forth at birth, and then "raised up again" by being born from the dead, and brought forth into the world at his resurrection. See verse 33, and also Heb. i. 5, 6. Note the absurb position of this Josephite; "begotten of God when raised from the dead"—begotten and born from the dead at one and the same time! No need of a word on this.

Then again he tells us that in verse 8, which reads as follows: "But unto the Son he saith, thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever;" the word "God" is from elohim, which being plural, denotes a plurality of beings—not Jesus as the Son of God only, but Jesus and his brethren. But this is another mistake; for "God" in this place is not from elohim but from Theos, which is not plural, and applies to Jesus as the only begotten Son of God, being called as directed by the angel, Jesus, Savior, God, the name inherited from his real Father, as before shown. But stupids "God" in the 8th verse of Heb. i. was from the Hebrew elohim; who does not know that elohim is rendered God, in hundreds of places, applying to the one "eternal God"—the Father; as in the following: "Hear O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord." Deut. vi. 4. The writer of the above must or ought to have known these facts, as well as other facts which show their statements to be positively incorrect and absurd. But such is the way they, either intentionally or unintentionally, misunderstand, misrepresent and mislead the people who place confidence in them. I confess that to me, their course is strangely unaccountable. I cannot avoid regarding it as literally blind infatuation.

Dear Restitution:

May 27th I left my much loved home, and took the Chariots of Nahum for Oshawa, Ont. Stopping at Toronto one hour, I reached my destination at 7 p. m. Found my good friend Emanuel at the car to help me off and give me a warm shake of the hand, and convey me to his pilgrim home where his good wife, Sister Jane, had a good cup of tea with all the eatables to nourish the inner man.

The next morning, while at breakfast, my good brother, D. Hogarth, was on hand to take me back to his lovely home, where I have always been made welcome during the past twenty-eight years, and never more so than during this visit. Everything was done to make me comfortable and my mission pleasant by all the brethren and sisters. I stopped over two first days, preaching twice on each day. Our chapel was filled as usual with intelligent and attentive listeners, some of whom had never heard me before.

On the last Sunday we ate the memorial supper. It was a blessed season, and the best of all we had the privilege of going to the water twice, where I immersed four mortal souls into the all-saving "name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," one male, an eminent school teacher, and three females, the younger about twenty-three years of age. It was a joyful time, to see the banks lined with attentive spectators. As they sat and stood a sister said to me, her mind ran back to the time John immersed in the river Jordan. My discourses were predicated upon the following Scripture. Rom. vi. 17; 1 Cor. iii. 21, 23; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; Acts viii. 12. Truth moved the audience.

During the week I visited the brethren in the vicinity at their homes, which were profitable seasons. Attended the silver wedding of Brother and Sister Pascoe. Between forty and fifty present. I was called upon by the chairman to make a speech, and with pleasure I complied with the invitation. It was a delightful time to all.

Twenty-eight years ago, on the first Sunday in this month, I preached my first sermon in this place, from John iii. 16. Much have I labored with them, and they have always done their duty to me, and I record this visit among them as the best of all. I had great freedom and presented what I believe to be the truth. My prayer is that God will reward them for their kindness to me and mine in the age to come. Fraternally, R. V. L.VON.

P. S. As my eye sight is bad, so that I cannot read common print, Bro. D. Hogarth read the Scriptures and the hymns. I leave on the 15th inst. for a visit and missionary tour east.

R. V. L.

FAIRCHILD.—At her residence near Knox, Stark Co., Ind., on June 3, 1887, Martha (Cline) Fairchild, aged 45 years, 3 months and 27 days.

Sister Fairchild was born in Highland Co., Ohio. In her youth she emigrated with her parents to Indiana. She was united in marriage to G. W. Fairchild, August 16th, 1857. In December following she was baptized and united with the Christian Church. In the year 1881 she embraced the doctrine of life only through Christ, the destruction of the wicked, the pre-millennial coming of the Lord and reign on the earth over the nations, with other views of Bible teaching as held and taught by us as a church. The record of her Christian life is one of good deeds. She left a husband, two sons, and a little grandchild to mourn the loss of one so affectionate and kind in the family circle. But there is hope in the death of the righteous,

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

The little church at Eagle Creek have met with a loss which they will feel deeply for years to come. How sad are these separations! But the glad reunion will come by and by. The funeral services were held in the school house where she had so often worshipped, a discourse being delivered by the writer based upon the fourteenth chapter of Job. JOHN L. WINCH.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 156 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 75 cents each, singly; 6 copies for $4.00; 12 copies, $7.20. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are inquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles [illegible] inventions, railways, telegraphs, telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of bygone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of Divine wisdom and the acts of the Unconquerable Will. We never read this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 600 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

Communications.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. Thomas.—No. 17.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

Then again; when we ask how it is possible that these Scriptures can apply to a man—such as, "I proceeded forth and came from God." "I came forth from the Father." "He was before all things." "O Father glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." "By him were all things created," etc., etc. They reply that all such Scriptures can be applied to Joseph's son because of his being filled and anointed with the Holy Spirit and becoming the begotten Son of God at his baptism. But such a reply is pure assumption without a particle of proof or the least Scriptural foundation; besides, John the Baptist was "filled with the Holy Spirit, even from his mother's womb;" Luke i. 15; and yet he was not an only begotten Son of God, nor could those Scriptures be applied to him; although Jesus said of him, Among them that are born of women, there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist," Matt. xi. 11. Now what did Jesus mean? Did he mean that he himself was no greater than John? For he himself had been born of a woman. He could not have meant that, else John's words would not have been true: for John said, "He that cometh after me is preferred before me; for he was before me; whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose." What then did Jesus mean? He evidently meant, among them that are born of woman by natural begettal and birth; knowing that he himself, although born of a woman, was supernaturally begotten by the Spirit-Power of his Father. Then also John's father, Zacharias, was filled with the Holy Spirit. Luke i. 67. So also, the 12 apostles and about a hundred and twenty disciples altogether, on the day of Pentecost were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and spake with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. Acts ii. 4. But not one of all these, not even the twelve Apostles, although they could work miracles by the Holy Spirit with which they were filled; yet not one of them was ever called, or thus constituted, an only begotten Son of God: neither could such language as the above—I came forth from the Father, etc.,—be applied to them; from the fact, that not one of them was "the Word made flesh," as it was in the case of Jesus. Permit me here again to illustrate this important passage. The Word was with God, and the Word was God; and the WORD became flesh. See R. V. A man—a carpenter—says "I will build me a house." He begins at once, and when that house is completed, the man's word, which was in the beginning, which was with him, and which was him (in one sense) and which he uttered by the power that was in him, and was him, because materialized so to speak, became a house, by the continued operation of the same power that was in him, and was him, and which spoke the word. ("He spake and it was done." Psa. xxxiii. 4, 9.) His word was fulfilled by the completion of the house. The house with all its arrangements, its size, form, style, place, etc., had its origin in the carpenter's power to think, conceive, speak, and act; in the thought and intent of his mind, the word of his mouth, and the action of his body, or physical power. When completed, it was exactly like the archtype or plan at first conceived in the man's mind: perhaps superior to any other house. The materials of which it was built had their origin elsewhere. They were produced from other sources, and by other powers. The house itself had no pre-existence; other than as the power, conception and purpose in the mind, and as the WORD of the man, its originator. This is a finite illustration.

But we will take a Scriptural one. See 1 Kings vi. 38; viii. 24. God said Solomon should build a house for the Lord; 1 Chron. xxii. 10; telling David the "fashion" or pattern. When that house was completed, as with his own "hands," 1 Kings viii. 24, 2 Chron. vi. 4; then God's word had become a house for his name, by the fulfilment of that word.

The materials made use of by the Spirit in producing the "prepared body" of Jesus, were human flesh and blood. See Heb. x. 5. As before said, God by the Spirit, "took hold" of the seed or flesh of Abraham and David, in begetting and manipulating. (See 1 Kings viii. 24) for himself a Son in the flesh of Mary; and the result was the production of the Son of God.

But we now call your attention to their chief objections and reasons against the Spirit begettal of Jesus, in their own words. They say, "We object to this story of the miraculous begettal and conception of Jesus because it nullifies the covenant [with Abraham and David] by bringing in one by the law of adoption, one who has not come from the bowels of Abraham, but who has come from an outside source, whose life has come from God." This language shows clearly that they do not understand the subject, and fail to apprehend the meaning of the Scriptures. Did not Mary descend from the bowels of Abraham and David as well as Joseph? Have I not proved this most conclusively? The Word says that as to the flesh, Jesus was to be the seed of the woman by the power of God. They say he was to be the seed of the woman by the power of a man. Thus they both add to and contradict the Word. They do not see that the seed of the woman, and the seed of Abraham and David as to the flesh, are the same. They do not see that Jesus could be the seed of Abraham and of David as to the flesh, from their bowels, without being begotten by Joseph. They thus ignore both the Word and the Power of God. It seems really unnecessary for me to say more on any of these points. I think I have clearly shown that instead of nullifying, nothing but a Spirit begettal could possibly fill and fulfil the covenants; that Jesus did, as to the flesh, come from the bowels or loins of Abraham and David, and not from an outside source; and just as much and just as direct as if he had been begotten by Joseph: that it was the Power, the origin, the life, the Word, that came down from God. They do not seem to understand that Jesus the Anointed was to be Son of God as well as Son of Man, literally as to his inception as a Being; that the kingdom is God's kingdom, as well as David's kingdom; that Jesus must therefore be by begettal and birth God's heir and David's heir—God's heir by being his literal legitimate Father; David's heir by a daughter or descendant of David being his mother. This is not, "by the laws of adoption" as they say, but the very reverse—begettal and birth heirship—an actual inheritor.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

One thing is certain, whatever else is thought or done or wished for, or pursued, a great and main thing is head and front before all, I mean rightness of heart. Here is a way and place for divine power, that one may not be within, like the rugged Andes, fruitless and verdureless. I am solemnly impressed with the idea of singleness toward God. There may be many things that look innocent and that may have much air of plausibility, But a heart born and moulded after the Blessed, is most concerned about that which is best. And things less than the best, less than the highest standard of action, and the perfect will of God, are therefore rejected, as even unholy and contemptible. For example, have I any part, by sympathy, with the pomp and splendor in London today? I quite respect the queen, and think her estimable, and her reign of fifty years has in it something wonderful of providential preserving care and goodness. But my heart is not at all in that grand ceremonial in London. Suppose the apostle Paul were alive and with us, what would he say? Would he crave a place in that mighty throng? He would have, as he did eighteen and a half centuries ago, the fire and power of Christ, love. That would govern and impel him, and be the master-might and glow of his life. He would turn aside to nothing inconsistent with that.

Was not Paul a patriot? Certainly he was. But chiefly he was a citizen of the heavenly country, and so earnestly so, I doubt if he would stop long to gaze at a magnificent pageant, and he would contrast the glitter of human greatness with the infinite glory of God. Would he take part in the bustle and parade of a scene like that we shall have here on Independence Day? I repeat then, the things that might be extenuated, that might be called laudable even, by a multitude of worldly folk, and Christians that one might term second-rate, he would entirely disaffect, and care for not so much as a penny's worth, simply because they would for him have no charm, no glory, no excellence, no advantage. By comparison they would be paltry and pitiful and he would have neither heart nor part in them. But the Christ love should have first place and absolute dominion. He would say, "My choice is made, my heart is fixed, my aim and mind and life are one and indivisible and immovable.

Now let us try ourselves by this high and holy principle. How are we, and how do we, in the light of it, and by the test and temper of it? Is there happiness or honor in indecision, or in a conflict of preferences and purposes? The beauty, the glory of the Christ-mind is in its absolute possession of your life, its entire and supreme control of it. There is just the intensity, the individuality of this, which gives freedom joy and power. What are monuments in honor of men, in the light of God? What are jubilees, parades, commemorations, dedications and unveilings? What are excursion trains, and processions, thunder of artillery, pyrotechnics, and all the enthusiasm of hero-worship? I can scarcely see anywhere time for such man-honoring expenditures. Time is short and swift and precious. I do not affect to decry all entertainment for poor, hard-worked men and women. But I speak of fellow citizens of the household of faith, who have outgrown the petty relishes and affinities of child-life, and who feel a nobler work of God within,—a spirit astir which leaves or gives no room, or time, or taste, for puerile studies or transient earthly enthusiasms. What an age is this for inventions of honor, and construction of monumental In not the creature glorified? Where is the honor of God planned and contemplated? Does a stately prayer, ordered to give a kind of dignity to an occasion, make it grand and noble? Does it truly consecrate it? I say again it is a time of complicated and elaborate laudation of men. Is Christ loved the more, and sought and served with new zeal and desire? Read the columns of rhetoric from the chosen orator of the day, and do they raise you toward the place where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God? Have they heaven-wending wings?

Now I say, there is no time for third-rate things. The call is to the highest and best. Mine it well. There is neither room nor time for aught but the best. The less valuable must be surrendered, and it ought to be, from a clear understanding, and from an elevated and incorruptible choice. It is time for the best thoughts, the best conversation, and the best behavior. What excellence will he attain who is content with the transient, the paltry and inferior? Who has time for novel reading, yacht or any other racing, for church or any other festivals, for political or any other parades, for neighborhood or any other gossip, for any or all the planning for superfluous pastimes, for any or all the thousand devices and varieties of mere policy and frivolity? The God-born and God-called man seeks a kingdom of super-earthly preciousness. He seeks it in God and from God. He struggles for it even—in temptations. He cries with an intense earnestness for it. The better nature in him is a holy passion for every possible good to which God calls him. Nothing less, not a whit, will answer his need or his petition.

Perhaps he has sacrificed something for an idea or belief. But it is not that only that I have to point out. Mark again this, it is the language and the action of choice. The better mind hates the sordid and meaner things, hates the time-killing, the waste of mind, the degradation, the nonsense and vacancy of "occasions," or that magnifies the intellectual and literary above the spiritual, and thinks to save the world even with colleges and universities. There is a holy hating, and hearty as well as holy. There is great virtue and force in righteous hating. It would be grand to preach a sermon on healthy heavenly hate of hateful things (not insects and reptiles that we do not much love, but) the hate of what the Lord himself hates, and what good Scripture-writing men of God have hated. It is all part and parcel of the kingdom of God within, that mates with and matches the kingdom of glory coming.

You know very well who hated the assembling of wicked men, not the men in their persons, but their assembling. And when, since land and water stood parted enough for man's habitation and convenience, has such a rage of assembling prevailed on the earth as now? When? Nothing will do but men must form into endless networks of conventions and councils till the world bids fair to be covered and swallowed up with them. Some of these are with the best intentions, and some are practically useful and grandly benevolent, but these have their counterpart in unions and aggregations that are selfish and sinister, covetous of earth, but yet not revealing the spirit of those to whom the earth is promised.

In re-reading what I have written above, I am querying if some reader might imagine a querulous trait or quality, in the latter portion at least. But if the personal return of our Lord is drawing near, and if we are not influenced by this fact to greater purity and elevation of character, how are we fulfilling the very charge of a chief apostle? O, it is good to have the clear, warm, strong, affectionate spirit of a man, God-informed and blameless, giving us the very life of his faith and doctrine and labor for our steadying and instruction. He taught us to look not at the things that are seen but those that are unseen. And it seems to me the spirit of the age is powerfully in the line of looking at the things that are seen. It may be all right, but I am puzzled to see how even great investments of capital in works of architecture, and in many other ways (not openly iniquitous either) is in harmony with a belief in the imminent parousia of our Lord. Outlays, calculations, enterprises are largely independent of ideas of changing dispensations. Let not frail mortal rashly judge, but I venture a suggestion of many things I see and hear, that are not according to that high and divine premonition of "Watch, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." ### Conference Report.

The meeting commenced June 13th, according to announcement, and was called to order by the President. Meeting was opened by singing and prayer followed by a sermon from Psa. lxxii by Elder Bennett after which we held a social meeting.

Adjourned until morning at nine o'clock. Social meeting opened by several prayers and a reading from John iv. by Brother Moses. Many and grave were the testimonies that were offered by the brethren. At 11 o'clock Brother Dwiggins preached an able discourse on "God's Power to Heal the Sick." Adjourned until 3 p. m., when we listened to a sermon from Rev. xxiii. 3, by Elder Woodward. Adjourned until evening.

Meeting opened Saturday evening by music, prayer, and reading Cor. xiii. Preaching from Christ's sermon on the mount. Meeting adjourned until Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. Social meeting opened by reading the last chapter in the Bible by the writer, to a large congregation. Then over one hundred testimonies were offered, after which Brother Dwiggins preached the dedication sermon to the largest congregation ever assembled in Dutton. Adjourned until 3 o'clock when we met to commemorate the scenes of Calvary. Two resolutions were passed, first, to appoint a committee to call a National Conference. Committee appointed: Noah Howard, Clark West, Newton Pike, Mary Woodward, K. N. Woodward. A committee was also appointed to select Bible readings for Sunday Schools. Committee appointed: W. W. Jamison, Calvin Winchester, Mary Smith, Essie Anderson, B. W. Woodward.

Meeting adjourned until evening when we reopened with a packed house. Brother Dwiggins preached a masterly discourse on the ministration of angels, with telling effect.

Would say in conclusion that the meeting was one grand success, the largest gathering ever assembled in the State at a Conference. Sunday and Sunday evening there were between three and four hundred present that paid good attention. Brother Underwood and wife were with us; they left the love and respect for them with the brethren of Michigan.

The cause is prospering finely since the organization in Michigan. All the brethren need to do now is to work and pray and set an example of Christian life, and to work with love and harmony, for if a house is divided against itself it must fall. Instead of a few isolated brethren here and there, are good, organized churches in different parts of the State. Brethren, keep on working and praying and God will recompense your labors, remembering that every soul you convert from the error of his ways will add a star to your crown.

SANCTIFICATION.

Jacob and Theodore Schoonerhoven were brothers, and strikingly alike in some things; among which was quick and strong perception, which gave them a talent for gaining property; for honest labor makes property, and shrewd perception takes it.

Jacob and Theodore were strikingly unlike in what philosophers call conscientiousness. They were educated in the sternest Calvanism. Theodore expected every good thing, and that every advantage belonged to him, and had a vague but comforting assurance that he was elected, if anybody was. Jacob, however, who was generous and unselfish, felt that if anybody was reprobated it was most likely to be himself. When the brothers were sixteen and eighteen a fatal epidemic prevailed, and many were dying. A general awakening occurred, and religious meetings were held night and day. Theodore was frantic with fear, when his confidence in election was shaken by a doctrinal sermon. He screamed aloud in the congregation, and rent the air with cries for mercy, distressed not so much by reflection on particular sins, and on the bearing of such sins on the law and honor of God, and the welfare of man, as by a general idea that he was a sinner.

The struggle was not long. He was soon rejoicing in an assurance of pardon. Whether he was influenced by constitutional peculiarity or not, it seemed comparatively easy for Theodore to be satisfied that he was pardoned and accepted. Jacob wore a serious countenance, sometimes wept, yet said but little, and attracted but little notice. He was, however, pained beyond description by a view of his sins, seen in the light of the divine character and law, as seen in their bearing on human welfare, and most of all as seen in the light of divine goodness. When he received the "oil of joy for mourning," he put on "the garment of praise" with great meekness, and quietly adored God, the beauty of whose attributes, character, will, laws, and governments, he beheld with new eyes; he heard the voice of God with new ears, and his melting heart received every divine impression. Every one said, "What a remarkable display of divine power in the conversion of Theodore Schoonerhoven. Jacob is rather thoughtful and may become pious, but Theodore is a perfect Gideon: what a gift in prayer and exhortation, and how he shouts!"

Theodore was foremost everywhere, urged on, flattered, and praised. Everybody knew him. Jacob labored by precept and example to save men, making no display. Few knew him. * * * * *

Jacob Schoonerhoven was asked to give his views of "sanctification." The interrogator walked him into the altar, and each seated himself in a chair. It was the interval between the services, and they were alone. "It is forty years," said Mr. S., "since my brother Theodore and myself experienced reliction. Soon after our conversation he professed sanctification, and urged me to seek for it. I considered the subject. Theodore, after being sanctified, was more forward, more confident, but no more disinterested. He was greedy of gain, shrewd in speculation, taking advantage of his keen perception to amass wealth; having his constitutional selfishness still strong, still blinding his judgment, and causing him to think he ought to be favored with all good fortune; men ought to work for him cheap; he ought to receive higher wages than others for public service or mechanical labor; what he sells ought to bring a higher price; what he buys ought to be got for little.

"My brother has never scrupled to buy property at a low price, which he knew was about to rise in value, and to sell at a high price that which was about to fall; he has not scrupled to buy cheap as possible young animals of great promise, from men who knew not their value, and to shift off young animals of no promise to men who knew not their worthlessness. All this, he said, was according to law, upheld by public sentiment, and agreeable to his conscience. I considered the subject of sanctification in the light of loving God with all my heart, and loving my neighbor as myself—not so much a work of the emotions as of the judgment—a work not of one moment but of a life-time; agreement, union, and harmony with God; self-lost in humanity; self-lost in God; living for the honor of God and for human welfare, at all times, seven days in a week, three hundred and sixty-five days in a year; in all places, at home and abroad; in the sanctuary, at the mill or at the market; in all business; laboring, buying, or selling.

"I went into the woods and prayed for sanctification, when the Lord said, 'Jacob, dost thou love my will, my law, and my government with all thy heart?' I said, 'I do, Lord;' and the Lord said: 'Dost thou love thy neighbor as thyself?' I answered 'I do, Lord.'" The Lord said: 'Very well, and now, Jacob, prove thy word in thy life.' I went to my house in a happy frame, singing hymns. A week after this I took down a work on military science, and was reading, having a great ambition for martial fame. The Lord said: 'Jacob, remember thy word.' I saw my ambition was self; I dropped the book, and never took it up again. I had made an arrangement to join a lodge of Masons, was on my way, riding fast, when the Lord said: 'Jacob, remember thy word.' I saw that my desire to be a Mason was self; I turned and rode home. I had coveted two colts which I knew would become horses of great value. They were rough and lean, and the owner, not knowing their value, would sell them low. I was on my way to buy them. The Lord said: 'Jacob, remember thy word.' I saw I was not loving my neighbor as myself; I went on, and said: 'Peter, keep your colts: they will make the most valuable horses among all I know.' Peter said: 'I did not think them valuable; but I believe you, for you and your brother know more about horses than any men I ever saw; I would give a thousand dollars for your knowledge. But now, Mr. Schoonerhoven, the fact is, I must sell them to save my house and land, which is mortgaged.' 'I will lend you the money,' I said, 'to save your house. keep your colts.' He did keep them, and finally sold them for five hundred dollars.

A man came to me to buy some city lots. I was about to take the price he offered, when the Lord said, 'Jacob, remember thy word.' I said, "Mr. Broderick, I cannot in conscience sell you those lots; that part of the city must fail in a few years.' It did fail, and I turned those lots into a farm.

Thus my sanctification went on. These lessons were never forgotten; self was banished from my buying and selling; the quick discernment of the value of property, and the foresight of coming changes which the Creator had given me, I the more need for my increase and wealth. It was evident to me that no man could gain wealth by speculation, and yet love his neighbor as himself. I have instructed hundreds of the honest, industrious poor, and kept them from the gins of speculators. My eye was single, my light increased, and my knowledge of right and wrong, of justice and humanity; my perception became keen to understand what was consistent with loving my neighbor as myself, to understand what it was to do to others as I would be done by.

"One morning I was awakened by the voice of the Lord. 'Jacob, arise and be sanctified. Remember thy word.' I arose, and coming from my lodging-room I met a committee of three, informing me that, for the part which I took in an anti-slavery meeting, I must recant, or come to trial. I remembered my word, chose my trial and was excluded. To be separated from the church of my early choice, tore my heart. The Lord said: 'Jacob, lovest thou me more than these?' I answered, 'Yes, Lord, I love thee more than all.' The cause of temperance long before cost me a similar trial.

"I had from early life set apart all of my income, above the plain support of my family, for charity, and with much prayer sought for the most needy. I had passed a day under the clear impression that a sore trial was coming. At evening I [illegible] in my heart and cried: 'Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.' The Lord said, 'Jacob, art thou ready to be sanctified in the loss of all?' I said, 'Yes, Lord, take all. Thou gavest, and it thou takest away, blessed be thy name.'

I answered a rap by stepping to the door. Three fugitive slaves, a mother and two daughters, were there. The mother mournfully said, 'Will you send us back?' And the Lord said, 'Jacob, will thou obey my laws or the laws of man?' I answered, 'I obey thy laws, Lord.' 'Come in,' I said. I landed them in Canada. I went to jail and lost all: house, land, herd and flock. I have gathered a little by hard work in old age. This little cottage is mine, with a few acres of land. My God is reconciled, my peace is like a river, and my treasure in heaven."

"I believe, Bro. Schoonerhoven, that you do not profess sanctification. I never heard you speak of it. 'I never speak of it,' said Jacob; "the word has become a term of reproach. Selfish, willful, proud men make high professions of sanctification. My brother Theodore is often referred to as a model sanctified man. He has amassed a fortune of a hundred thousand dollars by speculation, has always sought popular favor and civil office; has ever remained pro-slavery, opposed to the Maine law, and has gone with the most profane and debauched political party. OCCASIONALLY a brother writes to us relative to some business matter. We kindly say to our brethren and [illegible] that our only connection with THE RESTITUTION at the present time is, to edit it according to the best of our ability. When treasurer and keeping the books relating to the finances, we could attend to this kind of business because we had some chance to know how everything stood. Now we know nothing more about these matters than any one who has no connection whatever with the paper.

On Sunday, July 10, our regular appointment for preaching was at the Antioch Church about six miles from Plymouth. After the meeting held at 11 a. m., we resorted to a selected place on the bank of Yellow River, and immersed three persons into the all-saving Name; and, also, into the blessed relationship of children to God—a relationship that our Heavenly Father bestows upon all who, from the heart, yield the obedience of faith to the requirements of the gospel. The locality selected was at a place where the banks were fringed with the natural growth of the original forest. The day was beautiful. The sun shone down upon the whole scene of woodland and stream from cloudless skies, illuminating the immersing waters with a resplendency that made the symbol grave radiant with light from above so significantly emblematical of that light that illuminates the Christian's grave with bright golden hope. At 4 p. m., we returned to the Meeting House, and the little church, while singing a hymn of praise, gave to the new converts the right hand of fellowship and welcome to an association with the household of faith. After a short discourse on Christian privileges and duties we gathered around the Memorial Emblems so expressive of our Savior's sufferings and death, and parted hoping to meet and greet one another again when the dear Redeemer shall gather the church of the ages home to be forever with him in his glory. The gospel when preached in spirit is still the power of God unto salvation, and the blood of Christ still cleanses from sin.

"Dear Lamb of God, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved to sin no more."

Communications.

The attention of the brethren is called to the series of Bible Lessons being published in THE RESTITUTION. They are designed for missionary work in new fields; for Bible-classes in organized churches; and wherever their use will promote the cause. It has been felt for some time that a movement in this direction was needed. At the Conference at Antioch in June, a Committee was appointed to furnish such matter. The wants of the brethren are not fully understood. Suggestions, inquiries, and help from the brethren and sisters are earnestly desired by the Committee. Communications should be sent to Sister S. R. Winne, Pierceton, Ind., who is Chairman of this Committee. Persons who will conduct Bible classes will be furnished printed slips free if they will apply to THE RESTITUTION Office.

Lesson 2.

FAITH.

Scripture Reading, Rom. x. 1–18.
Singing. Prayer. Singing.
Remarks on the [illegible] by the [illegible]

Faith is from the Latin fides, faith, belief from fidere, to trust. It is reliance on testimony. In the Hebrew and in the Greek the word carries the idea of faith, fulness, steadiness, steadfastness, stability. It is resting steadfastly on God's word, it is holding the faith faithfully, it is trusting God without being "shaken," "moved," "wavering" or "doubting."

TO BELIEVE GOD, WE MUST BELIEVE THE BOOK, MUST HAVE FAITH IN THE WORD.

Texts in Proof.

Deut. xxxii. 1. Hear, oh earth, the words of my mouth.

Job xxii. 22. (Eliphaz speaking,) Receive I pray thee, the law from his mouth and lay up his words in thine heart.

Heb. xi. 6. But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is (that God exists), and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Examples of the manner in which men of ancient times believed or disbelieved God. In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

Adam disbelieved God, Gen. iii. 6. "and he did eat," and brought death into the world. 1 Cor. xv. 22.

The word of God to Noah, Gen. vi. 13, 14, "I will destroy them with the earth." "Make thee an ark of gopher wood." Gen. vii. 1, 2. "Come thou and all thy house into the ark." "And Noah went in, and his sons and his sons' wives with him into the ark.

Remarks. Noah believed God by believing his word. God said, "The flood is coming." Noah said, I believe it, I will make the ark, I will hide from the storm that is to destroy the earth." He did not say, "God has told me to build an ark, but I guess it will do just as well to take my family and the animals up into that high mountain yonder, and build some kind of a shelter there," but he believed it necessary to his salvation to do just what God had told him must be done, and that he must show his faith by his obedience.

Abram called, Gen. xii. 1, 4, "and departed as the Lord had spoken unto him."

Lot flees from Sodom, believing God. Gen. xvii. 22.

Disbelief and disobedience of souls Hearken unto the voice of the words of the Lord, destroy all that they have; 1 Sam. xv. 1, 3; but Saul and the people spared Agag and the best of the sheep and of the oxen and of the fatlings and of the lambs," etc.; vs. 19, "one is turned back from following me;" vs. 23, "hast rejected the word of the Lord;" vs. 26, "the Lord hath rejected thee from being King over Israel."

How faith comes, Rom. x. 17. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of the Lord;" (remarks by teacher on the importance of having the word of the Lord as the groundwork of faith).

Acts vi. 7. Priests were obedient to the faith.

Rom. iii. 28. Justified by faith.

Acts xxvi. 18. Sanctified by faith.

Acts xv. 9. Purify hearts by faith.

Rom. i. 17. Live by faith.

Rom. v. 2. Have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand.

Rom. ix. 30. Righteousness is of faith. x. 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14.

Cannot attain righteousness without faith. Rom. ix. 31, 32.

Faith stands not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God 1 Cor. ii. 5.

The gospel, the power of God unto them that believe. Rom. i. 16.

Children of God by faith. Gal. iii. 26.

To the Brotherhood in Michigan.

By invitation of the faithful and tried ones of our glorious hope of God, I attended their June Conference at Antioch, and I feel that it deserves more than a passing thought. This was the best Conference I ever had the pleasure of attending, not that any better feeling prevailed, or that it was more spiritual. The warm, hearty welcome, the fervent "God bless you," was not more earnest than at other times, but it was the best meeting because the most business was accomplished which was calculated to, and which will forward the cause of truth, and I wish every reader of our RESTITUTION would carefully read those papers as presented during that meeting, then preserve them for future reference; yes brethren, Brother Dwiggins struck the key note when he proposed the idea of every member in every church having something to do. The Lord has a place for each of us and something for us individually to do. One of our greatest mistakes has been to throw all the work upon the ministers, forgetting that every member of Christ's body has its office to perform. Our lack of preaching material has been the means of much loss of valuable time, for after the evangelist has built up a church they have to be left while he fills other pulpits, tells the glad tidings to other eager listeners, and they are left to starve and die. What is the cause of all this? No responsibility of individual members, no order, no financial system to meet the necessities of each church. Must it always be so? No. God forbid, if he will forgive us for wasting so much time in the past, the coming years shall place a brighter record on its pure white pages. The Indiana brethren are now wide awake to the all-important subject of organization, and by their declaration of principles adopted by their Conference, are able on a nice printed sheet to present to the world a declaration of what the church of God in the Abrahamic faith as a whole believe and what is meant by the "One faith." Now brethren let us be awake to this subject. The brethren in our sister state are working nobly, determined to evangelize the entire state as fast as possible, let us do likewise in Michigan. The dear Father has blessed us wonderfully, spiritually and financially, since we organized and went to work in earnest. Our watchword is onward but not one step backward, and the doors of the Lord's house are wide open to receive all who love his cause and will work for it. Come with us and we will do each other good, and together further the Lord's cause. Yours with Christian love.

Selections.

What Do We Owe to the Jew?

Let us briefly consider some of those blessings which they have conferred on us. We owe to them the sacred Scriptures. God made his revelation to Jewish minds. To Jewish eyes were spiritual visions granted; to Jewish ears were divine words spoken; Jewish hands inscribed them on the sacred page; Jewish lips first made them known. The eternal word took on itself a body, before the word became flesh. It still abides. Who can estimate the value of the Bible? It is said that he who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is a benefactor to his race, how much more he who writes a good book; but, here is the best of books—a pillar of fire and a pillar of cloud to guide us through the wilderness, to the promised Canaan. We owe to the Jews the record of God's mind and will, which is "more to be desired than gold, and which is sweeter than honey and the honey-comb."

To the Jews we owe our best methods of education. They were the best educationalists our world has ever known. Parents taught their children in early youth to read the law of God, the mother as well as the father—girls were instructed as well as the boys. Schools were everywhere opened, and they seem to have been able to solve the problem which has perplexed even the present age—how to combine secular and religious instruction.

To the Jews we owe the art of alphabetical writing. They seem to have known nothing of it when they escaped from their bondage in Egypt. Did they invent it when in the wilderness? The opinion, which is supported by some of the ablest historians, is, that it was taught by God himself. "Moses carried the two tables of stone up the mountain, and God himself, with his own finger, wrote the law of the Ten Commandments in alphabetical characters. He gave Moses the first copy, set him the first lesson, and taught him how to read it. Moses taught the Jews, the Jews the Phœnicians, the Phœnicians the Greeks, and the Greeks the other nations; and it is now generally admitted that we owe to the Jews the art of expressing our thoughts by alphabetical signs, which has done so much for the instruction, pleasure, and advantage of the civilized world.

We owe to the Jews the first theory of constitutional government. Kings in the earlier periods of the world's history were irresponsible rulers; they governed as their inclinations or passions prompted them. They stood above the law, their will was law. But the Jewish kings administered the laws which had been given to them by him who is the King of kings and Lord of lords; they did not govern the people of Israel according to their own personal pleasure, but within the limits of the prescribed constitution.

Where shall we stop in the enthusiasm of the benefits for which we are indebted to this remarkable race? From it has come the sublimest poetry—the hymns which best express our loftiest ascriptions of praise, the prayers which best express our devoutest feelings and holiest aspirations. The church with all its helpful means of grace is a Jewish institution. And its national history furnishes us with examples of the noblest types of men, the grandest, the most heroic, the saintliest that ever walked the earth. Jesus, our blessed Savior, was a Jew, he who was God's Unspeakable Gift, "without whom we should be of all men most miserable," and having whom, "we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Scattered amongst the nations, they have been some of the greatest benefactors of the world.

Let us, then, recognize our obligations, and seek to pay back the debt we owe. In a thousand ways has the influence of God's ancient people permeated and blessed our individual, domestic, social and national life, contributing to our well being, our morality and our religion. Gratitude is one of the finest dictates of our nature; it is commanded by the law of God. Ingratitude is branded as the basest of crimes, as one of the most heinous sins. The services which have been rendered by the Jewish race should not remain unacknowledged or unrepaid. Too long have they been neglected, despised and oppressed. Let us give them back that Savior which, in a sense, they have given to us. Let us try to draw away the veil which covers their hearts, and may God by his Holy Spirit anoint their eyes that they may see Jesus of Nazareth as their promised Messiah, and turn to him who is the Hope of Israel—nor shall our "labor be in vain in the Lord."

"Higher honor, only meaneth
Greater service, to be done,
Perfect self-renunciation
The reward and work in one."

Probable End of Mohammedanism at the End of this Century.

We have seen that the seventh chapter of Daniel describes a little horn (the Papal Antichrist) which was to rise in the West and become the most prominent figure in the last ages of Christendom. In the very next chapter, however, he describes another little horn which was to rise in the East, out of the subdivisions of the Greek Empire, and become the most prominent figure in the subsequent history of the Jewish people. It is to this we turn our attention at this time.

This vision describes the fall of the Persian before the Macedonian Empire, the breaking asunder of Alexander himself, and the rise of four horns that succeed him. These are the four sections into which Alexander's empire was divided. Out of one of these the little horn was to rise. That one was Syria. Its fulfilment is to be found only in the rise and progress of that widespread and long-continued system of iniquity and Satanic policy which has overspread the Eastern world for centuries, just as Romanism has the West. We mean Mohammedanism.

This little Horn was to attack Christianity, to magnify itself against the host of heaven, and to cast some of the stars down to the ground, and to cast the truth down to the ground.

This was terribly fulfilled in the first conquests of the Moslems. Their opponents were chiefly the Eastern Christians and the armies of the Greek Empire. Their victims received no quarter except by embracing the Koran, and multitudes of people and pastors perished in the awful tempest. When we remember that Syria, Palestine, Persia, Asia Minor, and North Africa were the very seats of Eastern Christianity, and that it was in a generation almost wholly obliterated from all these regions, and we only find today a few scattered Nestorians, Armenians, and Copts, who have almost forgotten the very elements of Apostolic Christianity, we can realize how complete has been the desolation of this Oriental scourge.

It was to be "because of transgression" that God would thus suffer his cause and people to be spoiled and scourged. Oriental Christianity had become as thoroughly corrupt as the Roman Papacy. Image-worship filled all the Greek churches, and Mohammed considered himself a real purifier of religion and destroyer of idolatry. And the latter he surely was, although he brought in a more terrible substitute.

It was especially to desolate the Holy Land—take away "the daily sacrifice and tread down the place of the sanctuary," and to set up "the abomination of desolation." The word "sacrifice" does not occur in the Hebrew. It is simply "the daily" or "continual," and it may refer to worship as much as sacrifice. We know that in the year 637 Omar captured Jerusalem and set up the Mosque of Omar on the site of Solomon's Temple. The place of the sanctuary was, indeed, cast down, and the old Bishop went out of the city crying, "The abomination of desolation is set up." Since that time for twelve hundred years the Turk has been the desolator of Jerusalem and Judah. It was to recover the city of Jerusalem from this humiliation that the Crusades were undertaken. But the Turk still treads down the ancient land, and will till the seed of Abraham inherit again.

This power was to "be broken without hand." And so the Moslem power has been breaking now for many years by the Unseen Hand of God, and all the fostering and sedulous care of Europe cannot much longer keep the Turk alive.

The time that should elapse according to Daniel viii. 14, from the initial date until the end of its oppression and the restoration of Jerusalem was to be 2,300 years. If this period be measured from the most natural points of departure—viz., the beginning of the Restoration by the Decree of Artaxerxes by Ezra (a) 457, or by Nehemiah (b) 444; or from the close of the Old Testament (c) 400, we reach the following dates in order of time, respectively—(a), 1844; (b), 1858; (c), 1900.

In 1844 Turkey was compelled to pass an Edict of Toleration, revoking the law which prohibited a Turkish subject from embracing Christianity under pain and death. Our next important date is 1856, and that marked the close of the Crimean War and the Treaty of Paris, by which Turkey virtually passed into the hands of the European powers, who have since acted as pall-bearers for the slowly dying corpse. In 1860 a cruel massacre of Christians in the Lebanon compelled the interference of France and England, and the renewal of the Treaty of Toleration, with stringent provisions for its observance, including the appointment of a Christian Governor of Syria. In 1877 a further dissolution of Turkey followed. After a series of atrocious cruelties in Bulgaria, committed by Turkish officials and soldiers, Russia declared war against her ancient enemy, and in a few months left her a shattered wreck, only saved by England's interference from the loss of Constantinople. The Treaty of San Stefano left Turkey despoiled of part of Armenia, all of the Dobrudscha, Roumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Montenegro, Cyprus, and with Great Britain as protector of Turkish interests in Syria and Palestine.

In 1882 the Egyptian war struck a final blow to Turkish power in that land, and revealed the imbecility of the Sultan. Every day shows more clearly the speedy approach of Turkish dissolution. The country is so bankrupt that it cannot even pay interest on its enormous debt. And its incorrigible worthlessness and wickedness make it an event to be heartily desired by all good men. The latest dates, according to the figures given, expire with this century. May God grant that with them may expire this infamous and monstrous imposition.

It should be added, that in the closing chapters of Daniel the exact duration of Mohammedanism proper in its oppression of Jerusalem is 1,260 years. There are two dates from which to measure this: 622, the Hegira; and 637, the fall of Jerusalem under Omar.

In lunar, calender and solar years the dates reached by this 1,260 years are 1844, 1860, 1878, 1882, 1897. The first of the Decree of Toleration, the second its Enforcement, the third the Treaty of San Stefano, the next the Egyptian war. The last is still to come, and with it perhaps the final stage of Islam's fall.

Mohammedanism as a system is still intensely alive. From its great university in Cairo 10,000 students are ever going out as evangelists of Islam. It holds 175,000,000 of the human race yet under its thrall and they are almost inaccessible to the Light. Its followers are rapidly increasing every year. It will not be fully destroyed until Christ's coming. Then as the Word of God declares: the Beast and the False Prophet shall both be cast into the Lake of Fire.—A. R. Simpson, in Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

It is the honey in the glass, and not the elegance of the glass that draws the bees; and it is the power of the gospel in the hearts and lives of its professors, and in the preaching of the pulpit and labors of the pastor, which gives the Word success.

Joseph Rabinowitz and the Jewish Movement in Eastern Europe.

The remarkable conversion of Joseph Rabinowitz, of which we have given an extended narrative in the Prophetic News, together with his subsequent labors among the Jews, are sufficiently known to the friends of Israel, and his recent visit to England has impressed all who came in contact with him with a strong conviction of his unfeigned faith and fervent love, as well as his singular adaptation to the Jewish work. A council of a representative Catholic character has been formed, whose endeavor it will be to assist this servant of God by sympathy and advice, as well as by supplying him with the necessary material means to carry on his labors. This step was taken partly at the earnest request of Professor Delitsch some time ago, who is in thorough sympathy with the movement, and who is convinced, from his knowledge of the case, that only in England the requisite spiritual, moral, and financial support could be secured.

The importance of the movement in South Russia must be estimated, not by its numerical strength, but by its intrinsic character. It must be viewed in connection with the present condition of the Jewish nation, and in the light of the Prophetic Word. A crisis is evidently approaching. Talmudism and the attempt to modernize Judaism, and to reduce it to rationalistic Deism, have both failed and proved themselves to be without vitality; yet the national consciousness has been roused and strengthened by the recent experiences of the anti-semitic movement. The Jewish Mission has been abundantly blessed; to a greater extent than is generally believed, not merely in numerous conversions, but in spreading the knowledge of Scriptural and vital Christianity among the Jews, and circulating the New Testament. But in our missionary efforts among the Jews we have dwelt almost exclusively on the conversion of individuals, who found a spiritual home in Christian churches. The consequence of this has been that we have not impressed sufficiently on the Jews that the Gospel does not come to them, so to speak, ab extra: that the question, "Is Jesus of Nazareth the Messiah and Lord?" is not so much a question between the Christian Church and the Jews, as in the first instance a Jewish question; and the prevalent feeling among the Jews is that to become a Christian is to become as it were a Gentile. It seems to them like being broken off their old tree and grafted into another tree.

It appears, therefore, as an indication—a foreshadowing of a national movement, when we hear of Jews (however few in number) who have come to the conclusion that their dispersion and condition during the last eighteen centuries is the consequence of their rejection of Jesus—that Jesus is the promised Messiah, Son of David, and King of Israel; that the writings of Evangelists and Apostles are the continuation of the Divine Record entrusted to the fathers; that salvation is by grace and righteousness—not by the works of the law, but by faith in the crucified and risen Redeemer.

We must regard it as the Lord's doing, and an answer to our prayer, to see Israelites who call themselves of the new covenant, and to hear the gospel proclaimed in Hebrew by Jews, who, in the spirit of Zechariah, Mary, and aged Simeon, bless the Lord God of Israel, who hath visited and redeemed his people, and raised up a horn of salvation in the house of his servant David, and in the spirit and very words of the Apostle Peter, declare unto their brethren, "Unto you first God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you."

Mr. Rabinowitz reaches a multitude of Jews in Russia, hitherto almost inaccessible, by his preaching and his Hebrew tracts as well as by personal intercourse. His influence extends beyond Russia, and is felt almost throughout the Jewish mission field: for the same tendencies are at work among the Jews of the Austrian dominions and Germany. The movement gives an impulse and encouragement to all who labor among the Jews.

We would, therefore, earnestly ask all Christians to bear in mind and to help his work, as a great evangelistic movement, bringing the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ to multitudes of Jews in a manner most suited to them, and in harmony with the history and position of their nation; spreading the New Testament and Scripture publications; and stirring up a spirit of inquiry, such as we have never seen in God's ancient people, whether Jesus is not the promised Messiah, the centre of Israel. We must leave to God's hands the development of this movement: we can only rejoice in a testimony of Jewish brethren confessing their faith in Jesus, not although, but because they are Jews.—Prophetic News.

Trust and Work.

Do your work, but do it in quietness and confidence; do your duty, but do it without this corroding anxiety; and he who even in the desert spreads his table for the birds, who clothes the flowers in their embroideries of beauty, will feed and clothe you. That trust which, unconsciously, God's humble creatures show, that do you show reflectingly and consciously. Trust in God for those lower things, because he gives, and will give, and has given to you, higher things than these. Do not degrade and drag down your life in the mire by the spirit of mean, selfish, grudging, untrusting accumulations. If you seek first the kingdom of God, all these things, or things transcendently better than these, shall be added unto you. There is nothing wrong in your trade or merchandise, and your daily work to earn your own living; that is altogether right; so far from being a rival business to these, the seeking of the kingdom of heaven is a divine law which should regulate, a divine temper which should pervade and transfigure them. Only for the sake of all that makes your life worth living, for the sake alike of your temporal and eternal happiness, do not seek the dross of earth more, and love it better than the gold of heaven. Let conscience and faith enter into every necessary act of your daily life. Learn to feel habitually that the life, the true life, the spiritual life, is more than food, and the body than raiment. Let justice, goodness, kindness and purity be your aim; not the selfish scramble of scheming competition, not the brutal appetence of sensual desire. Do not let your daily necessities blunt the edge of your ideal aspirations: do not sink into groveling appetites or money making machines. Man lives by bread, but he does not live by bread alone.—Farrar.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

WESTHEE'S GREAT WORK ON THE PROPHECIES.—IN TWO VOLUMES.

Vol. I. The Eastern Question in its Egyptian—its British—its Russian—its Ottoman—its Hebrew—its American, and in its Messianic Phases.

Vol. II. The Coming Age, its Nature and Proximity. A new work of eleven hundred and fifty pages, for six dollars per copy, about one half a cent per page. (1) A scheme of Individual and Co-operative Benevolence, worthy to be patronized by every Christian and Bible Reader. It proposes to place a copy of this excellent work in the possession of every family or person that has, or that reads the Scriptures, as a cheap, safe, and ready Key to that Sacred Volume; and side by side with it as an invaluable aid in its intelligent Reading and Exposition. (2). Its claims to be a safe and interesting Key to the prophecies, established from the work itself. (3). Brief summary given. (4). A list of miscellaneous topics, named, and discussed in the Work, subjoined. (5). Nature, element, and use of the Prophetic Scriptures: (6). Ways and means proposed for the extended circulation of the work: Read, Digest, Circulate. (7). The scheme itself in one of very great moment, since it aims to meet the demands of pressing want, felt by every student and reader of the prophetic Scriptures, by circulating a book, whose object is to afford a safe, cheap, and ready Key to the investigation of the prophecies, a full exposition of the great chains of prophecy, and a lexicon of symbolic terms, so as to free the Bible from those obscurities which are the result of not being familiar with its grammar of tropical language. A scheme, whose definite and only object is to place such a work in the hands of every Bible reader, is worthy of general patronage, as it affords the means of rendering the examination of the prophetic Scriptures a pleasure, and their interpretation intelligent and satisfactory. (8). Does Westhee's work furnish such a Key and Lexicon? Of this, a careful perusal of the Volumes, will furnish abundant proof. A brief, distinct outline of their more prominent features, will afford all the satisfactory testimony that can be reasonably demanded.

Its field is the world. It traces the foot-prints of Jehovah, as he walks sovereign of the nations:—elevating, or working their overthrow at pleasure; mustering armies or dispersing them; removing diadems, or crowning princes at will. Westhee's work assumes, that Jehovah, as the Creator of the earth, and the Author of its life, has a right to carry out his purpose in all its infinitely varied departments, and to shape its future and ultimate destiny: that he has a perfect right to keep secret his purpose and plans, relative to the earth and its population, or to reveal them to whom, and in the manner he may deem proper, selecting his own agents, and conversing with them as seems best; that he has a right to delegate any being he sees proper to choose, to be its visible and acting governor, to occupy the throne of universal dominion, and to select any family, that more readily suits his purpose, to colonize the earth, and to give birth its seed of perpetual and endless royalty: in a word, that the Divine Being, has, over his creation, at least, the same power that man claims over his own workmanship.

Assuming these points as axiomatic, our author throws wide open the petition gates of national fields, and follows the Deity among families and empires, noting remarkable transactions, as they unfold the plans of Jehovah, relative to human government, and the universal and endless reign of Messiah. Our author never loses sight of the divine Majesty, nor fails to recognise his hand-writing upon the palace walls of doomed and falling royalty.

Let us follow him in the rapid, yet impressive sketches, of his origin, growth, noted acts, and future missions, of seven great national families. Read his summary of Egypt:—A valley of surpassing beauty, and fertility: composed of every variety of African soil, wafted on the waters of the Nile from all parts of that Continent, drained by the river with its tributaries: thus formed, to be a home of infant Israel, where they were to be cherished by Jehovah till they should multiply into a generation. At the time appointed, in the Divine Council, Joseph, through a remarkable chain of Providence, is sent forward into Egypt to prepare the heart of Pharaoh to resolve and nourish his own son Jacob (first born family) till he should expand into the primary nationality predicted, into that land (Blessed be Egypt, my people)—"Goshen," expressly made, and enriched for my people, Israel, Is. xix. 25. There they grow during the many years of their freedom, and then groan under long and weary years of severe bondage. Their cries are heard; and by an infliction of terrible judgments, the oppressor falls, and the oppressed go free. For the infliction of such a cruel and protracted servitude, Egypt falls under the despotic rule of foreigners, which has continued to the present time; and will fetter that land till the return of Earth's Great Deliverer.

How vast and infinitely varied have been its revolutions, of races, dynasties, and nationalities; its political, religious and social changes. This land of Ham has been full of wonders. Its history is replete with the doings of the God of Israel, and defines with singular emphasis, his immutable purpose. Following Egypt, in its progressive history to the present, it is described, during the period of its partial occupancy by the British Empire, then traced into the scenes of the coming conflict.

(2) Leaving the land of the Pharaohs, our author takes a hasty glance at the origin, growth, and special history of the Prince of modern nationalities—the British Empire. Its peculiar locality is briefly described. Its agricultural and commercial wealth, and its peerless mineral resources, are noted. The Anglo-Saxon family is, in its origin, traced into the Orient; and the modern locality of the ten lost tribes of Israel is investigated. Are the Anglo-Saxon Israelitish? is a problem fully and impartially laid before the reader. The mission of the British Empire, in the purpose of Jehovah; the part she is to act, in the great political drama, now approaching, as the head of the great Southern Confederacy of nations, is stated, defined, and intelligently scrutinized. The British Phase of the Eastern Question, abounds in great national problems, and events now in their graphic paintings, and of most thrilling interest.

(3). The Russian Empire, for reasons which prophecy and history bring to view, comes next in place, as King of the North. The Russian field is bounded; and its peculiar features graphicly set before the reader, and fully described. Its races, tribal, at first then, after centuries of nomadic life, national, we followed through their emigrations, divisions, and despotic developments, till, numbering 100 tribes, speaking 40 languages, with a German head and Slavonian body, they stand forth as the Gog of Ezekiel, and Daniel's King of the North.

The Russian position in the coming struggle is noted. That despotic power is made the head of the great Northern Confederacy that is brought by Jehovah to his judgment throne upon the mountains of Israel, as described by Ezekiel, xxxviii., and xxxix.

(4). Ottoman Empire: With the Russian and British Empires, our author associates the Ottoman Empire, as a rampart between the Lion and the Bear: the northern power being the constant aggressor. Seven times during the last thousand years, first under Grecian occupation in the "latter time of their kingdom," (Dan. viii. 23), and for the last four centuries, under Ottoman rule, has Constantinople, been seriously threatened by the boundless ambition of the northern Autocrat.

The Almighty arm has been apparent in keeping back the King of the North, till the return and national union of Judah and Israel (Ex. xxxvii. 16–28), and the resurrection of the Hebrew monarchy, in the land of promise, preparatory to the Coronation of Messiah as King on God's holy hill of Zion, and his reign as heir to David's throne over the house of Jacob forever. Psa. ii., and Lu. i. 32. The Ottoman Empire, therefore, by virtue of her official position, is as impregnable to Russian overthrow, as the purpose of Jehovah, for the reason that the return of Israel and Judah hangs upon the holding back of the Russian Power.

(5). The Hebrew family is traced from the call of Abraham, and the promise to his seed as the central family of Messiah's Empire through its eventful history of nearly 40 centuries, till it is organized, the second time, into a kingdom under Messiah. That history as given by Westhee in his "Eastern Question," cannot fail to interest and instruct every Bible reader. It is a new delineation of old facts. The Parental care of Jehovah over Israel as his own special family, shines forth on every page of the history of their remarkable birth, growth, chastisements, under a protracted captivity, their return, national union, and endless prosperity, under Messiah. Their history covers twelve epochs. The author, by condensing the facts of their history, carries the reader, rapidly onward, seizing every opportunity to present the Divine Philosophy of their reverses, and the absolute certainty of their return and national union on the mountains of Israel. The instruction contained in the Hebrew Phase is worth more than the price of the entire work.

(6). American Phase.—Westhee's sketch of the origin, growth, and mission of the Great American Republic cannot fail to secure the most profound attention of every American citizen that reads and masters its contents. Jehovah is seen in the events which led to the discovery of a New World. Its shape, and its vast physical resources; the origin of its population, its admixture of all races, for the purpose of constructing a new man; its position in the Anglo-Saxon family, made a combination at once new and exceedingly attractive. It is a sketch comprehensive, yet not lengthy, and contains facts, providential movements, and a collection of brief incidents, such as cannot be found in any other work.

(7). Messianic Phase of the Eastern Question.—This Phase our author has described in a very summary manner, from the fact, that the elements of Messiah's reign are extensively dwelt upon in other great national movements which the author had already described.

The Coronation of Messiah on God's holy hill of Zion, closes his volume on the Eastern Question. No one can read this volume without a full conviction that it is a live work, written by a live man, one that is familiar with his subjects, and sees the Deity; its national problems, and that he exhibits skill in their solutions.

The Second Volume, (first issued) is called the "Coming Age, its Nature and Proximity." As the Age is future; and as it is the Age of Messiah's royalty, which follows the great national movements, towards the Orient, its golden event, the whole earth full of the glory of the Lord, Num. xiv. 21), it is in its nature, the concluding volume. To such let us follow our author into the second field, the earth as under the reign of Messiah, new earth, new people, new and endless era. His second golden text is 2 Pet. iii. 7–13. The earth itself is to be reduced by fire to a state of chaos. This seventh catastrophe (the Earth having passed through fire) will be succeeded by a new creation or re-construction called New Heavens and a New Earth. This will be the most perfect physically, of all that have been. It will be clothed in its bridal vesture. Its surface, clothed in more than Eden-bloom; its waters—pure river of life; its atmosphere void of all death elements; its light, its temperature, and all its attributes, everlasting in their most perfect state, will be suited to the highest type of organic life. On this earth thus made new, and furnished with every natural object in perfection, man in his highest type, physical, moral, and intellectual perfection, shall reign under Messiah, Son of God, and David's son and Lord, over the house of Jacob for ever. Our author then describes the reign of subjugation (Rev. xx. 25), followed by the joint reign of the Father and the Son. Rev. xxi., and xxii. Such being described as the Nature of the "Coming Age," he enters immediately, and with spirit, into the Scripture testimony, as to its Proximity, fully investigating seven chains of prophecy, which extend from about the time of their delivery to the holy seers, in a series of consecutive events to the age itself, or to its immediate vicinity.

In his examination of these extended lines of prophecy, he has been careful to distinguish the literal from the symbolic elements of each vision. In these chains of prophecy, he has clearly and conclusively demonstrated our present position in Prophetic history.

His first through line of prophecy is the vision of the metallic image, and the stone increasing to a mountain. Dan. ii. 44; the second through line, is the vision of the four wild beasts, of Dan. vii. His third chain of prophecy, is traced very critically through Dan. viii., to the xii. inclusive. His illustrations of the symbols, and the facts of history, carry conviction to the mind of the attentive reader, that his subjects are within his grasp, and are handled with no ordinary intelligence, and that his interpretations are quite reasonable. The prophetic shade passing out of the Old Testament, through the symbolic prophecies of Zechariah, are followed through the New Testament as enunciated by Jesus (Matt. xxiv., and Lu. xxi.); by Paul in 2 Thess. ii. 1–8, relative to the Man of sin; and by John in the Apocalypse. His examinations and interpretations of the symbolic visions of John are pointed, full, critical; and when thoroughly investigated, and made familiar, produce thorough convictions of the accuracy and famous value, in the study of the Apocalyptic prophecies. Connected with the destiny of Israel, he has critically examined and expressed his thoughts on the prophecies of Ezekiel, xxxvi., to xlviii., relative to the promise, the national resurrection and union of the whole house of Israel (Judah and Israel), the overthrow of Gog upon the mountains of Israel and the new division of the land. In his investigation of the through lines of prophecy he has furnished for the attentive reader a fund of very useful information. The signs of the times have, by our author, received much attention. He has very clearly defined their classes, their character and intent. He has conclusively demonstrated the great apostasy of our times by men's criminal neglect of making themselves familiar with the signs of his triumphant return in his kingdom as the Nobleman (Lu. xix. 12, 15). This volume is also replete, with marks of an overruling and superintending providence, of Jehovah and the future, and eternal government of his beloved Son.

Such is a very brief outline of the plan of Westhee's great work on the Prophecies: a work, which, for its size, the grandeur of its topics, its close reasoning and unity of thought, has no peer in the English language. It is a vast store-house of prophetic thought; especially on those prophetic Scriptures, whose fulfilment lies beyond the bounds of sacred history, and can only be found in profane history, either accomplished during the years and centuries of the Christian era, or such as are in the process of accomplishment, but extend into the future.

To such prophecies Westhee's work will be found to be a ready key and lexicon which should at all times be convenient to the Bible reader and student of prophecy.

Our author, having learned the unsatisfactory character of the commentaries relative to the interpretation of obscure prophecies, has given special attention to the exposition of such parts of the Divine Revelation. Hence the special value of his work.

Of this class of difficult prophecies, please consult his interpretations of (1) Isa. xviii. 1, 2, "Ho to the land shadowing with wings which (is) beyond the rivers of Ethiopia;" also on Isa. xix. 19–25, relative to the "Pillar of witness," the "Highway out of Egypt to Assyria;" "whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, blessed (be) Egypt my people (the land I have made for my people) and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." Though the reader may not agree with all of our author's views, advocated in his work, he will still find his thoughts interesting and quite suggestive. The reader will be ready to ask, if our author's views are not correct, what do the passages mean? Please give us others more reasonable. It is one thing to reject an interpretation; quite another to furnish a better and more probable substitute.

Having presented to the reader a summary sketch of the plan of Westhee's prophetic work, which is a connected and rapid narrative of Jehovah's plans and movements in colonizing the earth, arranging its families, tribes and nations around his own beloved family of Israel, the apple of his eye, and tracing that family by revelation and history to its restitution from its long dispersion, their national union under Messiah, the heir of David's throne, we shall now take the liberty of placing before the reader some specimens of some miscellaneous topics named and discussed in his work.

1. The coronation of the Son of God as King upon his holy hill of Zion, thus demonstrating the central locality of Messiah's kingdom. 2. The official reign of subjugation. 1 Cor. xv. 25. 3. The joint reign of the Father and the Son. Rev. xxi. and xxii. 22, 25. 1, 2, 3. 4. Our location in the prophetic Scriptures. 5. The special agents preceding the return and reign of Messiah. 6. Signs of that return, physical, national, religious and social. 7. Constantinople as connected with the Eastern Question, and the political complications of the European world. 8. The great national confederacy of the North, under the control of the Russian Empire. 9. Great national confederacy of the South, under the control (visible) of the British Empire. 10. Jerusalem, under the future restored Hebrew nationality and royalty of the Messiah. 11. The Anglo-Saxon world. 12. The Mongolian world and the Dragonic power—paganism. 13. Great contest between the Anglo-Saxon and the Mongolian races. 14. Messianic world under the reign and dominion of the Messiah. 15. The supposed will of Peter the Great of Russia, its far-reaching national policy. 16. The divine construction of the European balance of power system. 17. New heavens and new earth; the propriety of the names. 18. Restitution and union of Israel and Judah under David. Eze. xxxvii. 19. House of Joseph, birth-right, and the numerous and powerful nationalities born of that family through Ephraim and Manasseh. 20. House of Judah, appointed to redeem, educate and rule. Gen. xlix. 10; Isa. ix. 6, 7. 21. Family of Jehovah. Deut. xxxii. 8–13. Its origin, growth and destiny. 22. Priesthood of Messiah; location of the antitypical temple. 23. Manasseh, personal and tribal; what relationship between it and the great American Republic? 24. The seal of the United States; origin of the device; whence? 25. Ephraim and the ten lost tribes; where are they? who are they?

The history of the Hebrew family in the seed of Isaac, from the call of Abraham, to the union of Judah and Israel under the Messiah, with a brief sketch of associated families, the drift of all history, sacred and profane, are the most interesting and entertaining narrations of human existence, and of human actions, since they are the history of God's plans and movements, the history of the workings of his system of Providence, as shown to Isaiah and Ezekiel, set in motion to carry forward his purpose relative to the union of Judah and Israel under the government and endless reign of his Son Messiah on the throne of his father David, over the house of Jacob forever. For such historical narrations we should aim to cultivate a taste in every Bible reader. We should inspire in the minds of our youth a taste for the reading and literature of the coming age, when a king shall reign in righteousness.

The themes that interested Christ and his apostles, that occupied the minds of holy men of old, should be the delight of such as expect in the resurrection state to dwell in their society. The grave will not impart any new affections. What pleased us here, will delight us in the resurrection. Things that are soon are temporal, but the unseen should enlist our affections, as they are eternal. The most noble characters of earth have their biography in the Bible. Read the epistle to the Hebrews; what a catalogue of worthies is found in its chapter on faith. What are the great men of Greece and Rome compared with these? What Gentile lands of antiquity produced such men as the patriarch Moses and the prophets? How superior to Nebuchadnezzar was Daniel, Isaiah to Homer, Jeremiah to Virgil, the prophets to Grecian philosophers. What a vast field for holy and endless investigation is locked up in the writings of the holy seers!

It is assumed by some professedly pious people that the prophetic Scriptures cannot be read with any special profit or interest, since their contents have no practical bearing on the Christian, that they are speculative rather than practical. Let us look into these Scriptures, their nature, extent and use.

What is prophecy? Ans. A declaration of something to come, uttering truths and events in advance. A holy prophet is one that speaks for God. Holy prophets are holy men that God commissioned to declare his messages to man; pro for, and emi, to say or speak. God sent persons to speak for him. The words they uttered were God's words, prophecies, words for God. What they uttered for God were prophecies of God or words for God. The sacredness and value of such utterances can be thus very distinctly seen. God never commissioned a person to utter a message for him unless that message had in it all the dignity, power and authority of Jehovah himself. Who then dare say that the message is not in the highest sense practical? Strictly speaking, the Bible, so far as it is the word of God, is all prophecy, since it is a revelation in advance of God to man and for man. In a more limited sense, every revelation that relates to man's future destiny, the resurrection of the dead, future life, Christ in his official character, faith, hope, in a word, the gospel is composed, in all its elements, of prophecy. The entire system of redemption is built upon unaccomplished prophecy. What should we know of Messiah's reign or of the Christian's hope? Take away the element of prophecy, and the future is as intensely dark as night without a luminary. Prophets then speak for God on all subjects which he designs to accomplish. Through them God spake to the people. Heb. i. 1. Holy men of God. 2 Pet. i. 21. There were prophets during a space of 1000 years. Their modes of communication were by the Shekinah; Ex. xix. 23; xxix. 42; Num. viii. 89. The Urim and Thummim. Num. xxvii. 21; 1 Sam. xxviii. and xxx. 7; Ezra ii. 63. Revelations by visions and dreams and by inspiration; Bath Kol, voice from heaven. See Job iv. 13. There are sixteen books of prophecy, four major prophets and twelve minor prophets.

"The testimony of Jesus is the spirit prophecy." Rev. xix. 10. "To him gave all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Acts x. 43, See Luke xxiv. 27, 44. The prophets speaking for God gave the life of his Son in advance. Why then is not their record as practical as the same record given by the four evangelists?

All our knowledge of men and things, of the future state, is from prophecies; the hope of the promise, the gospel itself, is the glad tidings of prophecies yet unaccomplished. Prophecy is the golden chain that extends from a fickle, corrupt age to the glories of Paradise. Let us not expose our ignorance and stupidity by undervaluing prophetic knowledge. The Bible without prophecy is a book of blanks. Blessed are they that read, hear and keep.

The subjects of prophecy are exceedingly numerous, and, in their nature, more precious than rubies; more to be desired than much fine gold, sweeter also than the honey and the honey comb. Let us cultivate a taste for the unseen, for its brightness is glorious. What precious treasures in the store house of unfulfilled prophecy! Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for those that wait for him.

WAYS AND MEANS FOR THE CIRCULATING OF WESTHEE'S WORK.

It must be accomplished by individual and by co-operative efforts, both classes being required to develop the resource of each district. To the wealthy means are abundant. A willing mind is all that is required to make them, at once, very efficient agents in carrying forward the scheme proposed. To convince them, therefore, of the great good to be accomplished by the circulation of such a work, is that which should be secured. The work should be read and its parts fully explained as to its being a key and lexicon in prophetic lessons. Then let the scheme for its circulation be explained and fairly and fully laid open. Once fully enlisted in the enterprise, they could be induced to assist in supplying their district, and in contributing funds to furnish copies for those absolutely poor. Thus the wealthy are made missionaries in this great scheme of benevolence.

The second class are those who are in moderate circumstances, neither rich nor poor. This class can lay claim to the majority in almost every community, including principally those in active life, in the departments of arts, trades and professions; persons who are the movers in all benevolent movements, and who, by active co-operation, keep the wheels of social, moral, civil and religious operations in constant activity. Accustomed to motion, it is only necessary that they should discern the character of the enterprise to secure their aid in the work. To such the scheme should be made quite familiar, and with their co-operation success must follow. It is proposed to make use of every agency, honorable and Christian, to interest this great class of workers in this scheme of benevolence.

Third class. This class is composed of such as have such means only as could be readily consumed in what might seem to be the necessaries of life. With this class the scheme has much to do. There are, in the matter of living, many real wants. Others, called such, may lay no claims to be ranked among the accessaries of life. Many articles of food, drink and clothing are made apparently necessary by improper and expensive habits. To consult economy and health means would be readily released, sufficient to pay, in a few months, for a copy of Westhee's work. In deciding whether you can furnish yourself a copy, take the following methods. Sit down and with paper and pencil calculate what are really the necessaries of life as to food and clothing; you will soon find, where, by close scrutiny, small amounts can be saved so as to less than a year; perhaps in a few weeks, the sum $6.00 can be obtained; $6.00 in one year would be about one cent and a half per day. This could be obtained by a very little self-denial on some few minutes of extra work. Habits of strict economy would readily supply the necessary funds. In the course of a year multitudes of chances to make or save the amount occur. There are articles in daily use which are expensive and injurious to health. It is not proposed as a necessity that any one should abandon an injurious habit, but simply to moderate its use one fourth; this will give you funds and better health. Please try this; experiment on those habits which should be moderated or abandoned. One fourth of the cost of those useless or injurious articles for one year can be received as the price of the work. Keep a strict account of these healthy or economical abatements for one year, and those sums will be received as the full price of the work. A small amount of extra work will secure the same.—

Fourth. Another method for raising funds to pay for the work is suggested, by voluntary associations, or by co-operation. Let societies or reading associations be formed, where there shall be regular Bible readings by topics, such as biographies of noted Scripture characters, particular families and nations. Let those topics be examined and discussed. At those weekly meetings a few cents, one-half dime or dime should be contributed. Funds would thus soon accumulate so as to put the work beside the Bible in many families.

Fifth. Other means can be used as occasions and peculiarities of districts may require, having in view the one object, to place a copy of the work in every family where there is a Bible or a Bible reader. General Agent.

Faith and Action.

Innocence unsullied and untried has a loveliness all its own, but it lacks the pathos of suggestion, the depth of significance, and the strength of permanence, that make the glory of virtue that has borne the brunt of battle, and has known the bitterness of defeat, the agony of retrieval, and the exultation of recovered victory. We talk proudly of the faith that has never felt a doubt, that has been pierced by no perplexity, and shows no mark of the sweat and stress of conflict. We look askance on difficulty of faith, have no mercy on lack of assurance, and reckon them happy who are convinced without trouble and believe without effort. That is not quite the Bible estimate. The Psalms echo with the prayers of hard-pressed faith, and throb with the cries of agonized doubt. The New Testament speaks of faith as a fight, counts them happy who endure, and pronounces blessed the man who encounters and overcomes temptation. If "strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life," how should faith be easy, since faith is that gate, that way? The truth is, that we invert the divine standard of values, and put last what God puts first. We count enviable the landlocked harbors of unthreatened belief, that are protected from assault by their very shallowness and narrowness. We are blind to the providential discipline which ordains that men should wrestle with difficulty, and in overcoming it attain a tried and tempered faith possible only to those who have passed through the furnace of temptation.

Nature sometimes creates minds independent of circumstances. She also creates other things which appear to be equally so. Take one example. Owing to their geographical position, the central and western regions of South Africa are almost constantly deprived of rain. They contain no flowing streams, and very little water in the wells. The soil is a soft and light colored sand, which reflects the sunlight with a glaring intensity. No fresh breeze cools the air: no passing cloud veils the scorching sky. We should naturally have supposed that regions so scantily supplied with one of the first necessaries of life could be nothing else than waste and lifeless deserts; and yet, strange to say, they are distinguished for their comparatively abundant vegetation, and their immense development of animal life. The evil produced by want of rain has been counteracted by the admirable foresight of the Creator in providing these arid lands with plants suited to their trying circumstances. The vegetation is eminently local and special. Nothing like it is seen elsewhere on the face of the earth. Nearly all the plants have tuberous roots buried far beneath the ground, beyond the scorching effects of the sun, and are composed of succulent tissues, filled with a deliciously cool and refreshing fluid. They have also thick fleshy leaves, with pores capable of imbibing and retaining moisture from a very dry atmosphere and soil; so that if a leaf be broken during the greatest drought, it shows abundant circulating sap. Nothing can look more unlike the situations in which they are found than these succulent roots, full of fluid, when the surrounding soil is dry as dust, and the sandpeople say seems utterly destitute of moisture; replete with nourishment and life when all within the horizon is desolation and death. They seem to have a special vitality in themselves; and unlike all other plants, to be independent of circumstances.—Bible Teachings in Nature.

Fathers and mothers, read the advertisements in another part of this paper of new books for the young. Remember, your child will read something, and in this day of trash in the literary world, designed specially for the young, it is the positive duty of every parent to place good books in the hands of his child.

THE COMING REIGN.

O we dream of a day that is nearing,
A day of sweet promise and trust,
When the captive and long-sodden city
Of Zion shall wake from the dust;
When nations in beautiful garments
Shall shake off her burden of pain,
And the north and the south without mourning
Shall loosen her captives again.

When the gospel for Messiah of Ages
Shall bring its bright mandate down,
And shall take as a gift from the Father,
Of earth's mighty kings one the crown,
When the fierce haughty colors of nations
To him in submission shall bend,
And the cruel cold steel of the warrior
Be changed for the hook and the plow.

When the saints in their raiment of glory,
Shall sit with him on his throne,
And shall rule on all nations and kindreds
The blessing of Abraham known:
When the law of the Lord shall praise him
With song it is not rather may learn,
And the palm on the conqueror's forehead
When even His footstep may turn.

O we dream of a day that is nearing,
A day of rest, peace and trust,
When the earth in her restitution of beauty,
Shall be the bright home of the just.
When forgotten the day of our trouble,
The tears shall be wiped from our face,
And the sorrowing and crying and anguish
Have never in Eden a place.

NO MILLENNIUM PREVIOUS TO THE SECOND ADVENT.

It is the general belief of all the great denominations, and hence of most Christians, that the Millennium will be ushered in through the proclamation of the gospel under the ministry and the various agencies of the church. And by the Millennium they mean a thousand years of righteousness and blessedness in which Christ, while still up in heaven, will reign spiritually on the earth. It is confidently asserted by John Angell James that "what is wanted—all that is wanted, under God's blessing, for the world's conversion to Christ, is—an earnest ministry, and an earnest church." And referring to "the ministers of religion and the members of our churches," as the principal agencies "of accomplishing this greatest of all happy revolutions—this wondrous spiritual renovation," he says, "These are the men to whom the world will stand indebted for its restoration to God, to happiness and immortality." We have made choice of this language of J. A. James, a well known and highly esteemed writer, because it echoes the common teaching of the churches.

Men often speak and write as if their labors, or the labors of the church, would introduce the Millennium. Such men should ponder the words of John Knox. "What were this else but to reform the face of the whole earth, which never was, nor yet shall be, till that righteous King and Judge appear for the restoration of all things."

"In sermons preached specially in behalf of mission funds, and in speeches on the missionary platform and in published addresses or appeals for the same object, ministers will often describe with glowing eloquence, the universal triumphs of Christianity. Under the present system of means, every evil, they tell us, is to fall before the spread of the truth, and righteousness is to exist and prevail every where. The whole world is to be subdued and turned unto the Lord. But where do we find such teaching and such descriptions in the New Testament? They are not to be found any where in the Book. Where is it taught that the thousand years' reign is to be a spiritual reign while Christ remains up in heaven? The exact opposite to this is taught in numerous parts of the Word. The Scriptures plainly connect the restoration with his returning from heaven, and his setting upon the throne of his father David. They never teach the universal or even the general acceptance of the truth in this age. Indeed, they teach the reverse as clearly as language can be made to teach it. False hopes, false expectations are raised in the mind of the church, by which it is moved to give to the cause of missions. Now there should be no more waning in our love and zeal for missions, and it would give us joy if the amount of money contributed to send the gospel to the heathen was much larger than it is; but let the truth be told; let no false appeals be made; let the true design of the proclamation of the gospel be made known. The fulfilling of God's great purposes does not require the aid of dishonest human means.

Every believer in the Pre-Millennial Advent of Christ is a friend of missions. Believing that the kingdom cannot be established until the elect number who will be co-rulers with Christ are gathered out of the nations, they sympathize with the multiplied efforts that are put forth both at home and abroad to win men to the truth. This belief, instead of hindering Christian activity and labor, is a powerful motive to it. How shall we meet Christ at his appearing, if we do not fulfil his will in his absence? How can we expect to be rewarded in the kingdom, if we are not faithful, and if we do not overcome? The very tendency of faith in this doctrine—if the doctrine is Scripturally apprehended—is to beget and foster the missionary spirit. And it is a well known fact that many who have gone to heathen lands are looking for the appearing of Jesus before the conversion of the heathen; they expect the conversion of some; and in instances of extraordinary prayer and faith and labor, they may witness great blessing and numerous conversions; but they do not expect their conversion as nations, or in large numbers, previous to the Advent. And in the word of God, no authority is given to them to expect it sooner.

But it has often been said, and though refuted a hundred times, it is still affirmed, that unless the world is converted under the Gospel dispensation, it will prove the Gospel to be a failure. We deny this. The statement is based on a total misapprehension of the design of the gospel in the present age. No believer in the Pre-Millennial Advent regards Christianity as having failed in its mission. We do not believe that the word of God has returned to him void, but that it shall accomplish that which he pleases, and shall prosper in the thing whereto he has sent it, as he declares by the mouth of his prophet. The gospel is sent to save those who believe, that out of the peoples,—the masses of humanity, a holy and peculiar people might be gathered for the Lord, to whom with the Christ shall be given the rulership of the kingdom.

The view of a constantly increasing morality and religion, of an ever widening spread and triumph of the truth till it culminates in the conversion of the world, will not bear the light of Scripture. It can find no support in the word of God. There is not indeed a shred of Bible authority for such a view. However pleading such a view may be, however much to be desired the thing itself may be, the Scripture holds out no such hope. In this age there will be no universal reign of righteousness; the age will close with abounding and alarming wickedness and lawlessness. Satan will have a temporary triumph before he is bound. The anti-christ will be allowed a short but terrible reign before he is destroyed. The teaching of Christ and Paul and other inspired teachers conflict with the common teaching on this point.

We believe in the faithful use of the present agencies of the church in order to gather out from the world as many as will obey the call of God, but we do not by this means hope for the world's conversion. We have no Scriptural basis for such a hope, and such a hope, therefore, if cherished, would be delusive. Thousands have been deceived by having embraced that hope, and now, in their turn are deceiving others. The church is exhorted to watch and look for the Lord Jesus, but it is no where exhorted to watch and look for the Millennium prior to the Lord's coming. A time of yet greater apostacy followed with terrible persecution and trouble, is rapidly approaching; and many will awake from their dream to find themselves unprepared for the things that are upon them. Not a single text can be found in the whole Bible that teaches the Millennium prior to the Advent.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE KINGDOM REJECTED.

It would be well for those who raise objections to our view of the kingdom of God to pause, and re-examine the grounds of their opposition, for we are persuaded that they are opposing the true Scriptural teaching on this subject. On the part of multitudes this opposition arises from their having listened all their life to spiritualizing teachers, and they find it difficult to run their thoughts on any other lines than those they have been accustomed to. And many who look somewhat into this matter have not got free from the trammels of their early creed; they are still under the influence of their first teachers. And not a few are afraid of being thought shanglings; and others are afraid of losing their church position, or their social standing, or their income. But none of these things should weigh against an impartial searching of the Scriptures. Truth should be esteemed of greater value than wealth, or honor, or the friendship of men whether in the church or in social life.

This doctrine, disbelieved by many professors, finds no favor with the world. Sinners and ungodly men oppose it; and while by a faithful proclamation of the truth some will yet be won to accept it, the Divine Spirit has foretold that the multitude will reject it.

It is the repentance and the self-denial, it is the preparation, the spiritual and moral qualification for the kingdom that men object to. That is the real ground of their opposition. Their deeds being evil, they love darkness, knowing that the light would reveal their evil deeds. The conditions of heirship to the kingdom are unpalatable; the human heart with its love of self-pleasing rejects them and seeks to justify itself in its opposition.

In the present day men not only object to the kingdom of God, as the Scriptures teach it, but many of the learned, the philosophical and scientific unbelievers, are trying to set up a kingdom of their own, a kingdom according to their own carnal desires and vain imagination, which they call the "kingdom of man."

But the very fact that the Bible teaches a holy kingdom, and that holiness is absolutely necessary as a qualification for heirship, is an evidence that the whole conception of it is divine. Sinful and depraved man would not teach a kingdom from which all sin would be excluded. He would not deny heirship to all but the pure in heart. The Bible in teaching a holy religion furnishes its own evidence that God inspired holy men to write it. Is it credible that man, loving the unlawful gains and the carnal pleasure of sin, would write a book to condemn sin in every form, and even require the weakness and depravity of the mind resulting from actual sin, to be entirely removed? Is it credible that man would require, as a condition of future blessedness, inward cleanness, purity of motive, holy thoughts and desires, and a life of righteousness and benevolence? If man had formed a plan of salvation for himself, is it likely that it would have begun, on the human side, with self-abasement, with sorrow for sin, with confession of sin, and with the begging for mercy at the hands of God?

ERRATUM.

In my article, RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.—CONCLUDED, I am made to say the opposite of what I mean. In second paragraph, 4th line from bottom of column "did take place when they came from Babylon," should read "did not take place," etc. S. H.

"And They All Began to Make Excuse."

We read about a great king who made a supper and sent word to the invited guests to come in and partake of the rich feast that he had prepared, but, that they, instead of being glad, and making haste to present themselves at his table, all began to make excuse; one had just got married, and one had bought some oxen, and another some land, not one could come.

I thought as the story came into mind, how like to people now. The invitation to the King's table is still out, his servants are asking the guests. But one says, "My friend is sick, I cannot go today;" another, "I must wait till my companion is ready to come too;" "I do not want to go alone;" or "I am too young, when I am older I will go." They all begin to make excuse.

Is it wise? Is it obeying the King? when he says come today? If it were a fair, or a Fourth-of-July or Christmas tide, there would be no excuse, the guest would be there, but oh, when Christ calls, when he says "come, for all things are ready;" men will dally and trifle, and wait till they fling life away.

Pleasure's haunts are full, she calls not in vain, men linger not for storm, or sickness, or care; they crowd her tables, they joy in her voice, but when eternal life is at stake they wait, and wait, and wait till the day of grace goes by. "Do not linger longer, come today." S. ROXANA WIXON.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and is so taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar terms, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 20, 1887. NO. 27.

THE RESTITUTION.

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and six months in proportion.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The Restitution proclaims the "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint rulers with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for admission.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION OF REV. XX. 1-6.

"And I saw an angel coming down out of heaven, having the key of the abyss and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss, and shut it, and sealed it over him, that he should deceive the nations no more, until the thousand years should be finished: after this he must be loosed for a little time. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and such as worshiped not the beast, neither his image, and received not the mark upon their forehead and upon their hand; and they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should be finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: over these the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

If these first six verses follow the nineteenth chapter in chronological order, as they appear to do, it is impossible for the church to be in this resurrection; they must have been raised previously. In the vision of the nineteenth chapter, they come with Christ from heaven. They are present at the punishment of the beast and the false prophet, and of those who worship the image of the beast, and therefore, their resurrection must have been a previous event, unless they come with Christ as perfected, glorified spirits while their bodies are sleeping in the dust, of which there is no proof. Then follows in the first three verses of Rev. xx., an account of the binding of Satan. And then, in the next two verses, an account of the resurrection of the witnesses. There are two things to be noticed in the language employed here which, to our mind, exclude the church, or the body of Christ, from this resurrection. There is one general class of persons referred to, but two things are said of them. One is, they have been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God." Another is,—and this is made prominent; it is said of them specially, referring to their character previous to their martyrdom,—that they "worshiped not the beast, neither his image, and received not the mark upon their forehead and upon their hand; and they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. . . . This is the first resurrection." Now the phrase, "And they lived," applies simply to those who had been beheaded." How can it apply to the vast body of believers who lived before the revelation of the man of sin, and who have not suffered martyrdom? Some, it is true, have sealed their testimony with their blood in all ages of the church's history; but that does not affect our position. We are here speaking of the generality of real Christians from the time of Christ until now who have fallen asleep; and also of those who will be beheaded in the three years and a half of unparalleled tribulation under the persecution of the beast, or the man of sin, who is punished at the second coming of Christ. And the conclusion we come to is, that the phrase, "And they lived," or lived again, simply refers to the latter class, to those who had been "smitten with the axe" for their witnessing for Christ, and not to the former. Following this are the words, "And they lived, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should be finished. This is the first resurrection." The living again of those who had been beheaded a little while before the beginning of the Millennium, is one resurrection; and the living again of the rest of the dead at the end of the Millennium, is another resurrection. Of these two resurrections, the living again of the martyred witnesses, is the first, both as to priority of time, and pre-eminence. But how could this include the millions of Christians in past ages who fell asleep through disease, or the decay of nature? John not only saw these, seated on thrones and acting as judges, when he saw the souls of the martyred witnesses, but he sees them before the thrones are set up, before the kingdom of the world is taken by Christ, before Satan is imprisoned, and before the beast and the false prophet are cast into the lake of fire. He sees them following Christ from heaven before these events transpire. Nay, he sees them before he saw the seven trumpets, before he saw the bowls, before he saw the great multitude, before he saw the "hundred and forty and four thousand, sealed out of every tribe of the children of Israel," and before he saw the book close sealed with seven seals; he saw them among the first objects upon which his eyes fell after he was called up into heaven; he saw them arrayed in white garments, with crowns of gold on their heads. Then after he sees these crowned saints in heaven, he is permitted to have a vision at the opening of the fifth seal, of them that had been slain for the word of God; but they were not yet resurrected; and they cried to be avenged on their enemies; but the time for their resurrection had not then come; others, they were told, would be slain for the testimony which they held, and they must wait a little and be raised to life with them. How is it possible, therefore, that the resurrection of the church should not take place till the resurrection of these slain witnesses, since John sees the church crowned in heaven while the souls of the witnesses are manifesting anxiety to be raised from the dead, and they are told to wait, for the time for their resurrection is not yet come. Besides, the period of time in which they play their part is quite distinct from the period in which the church live and act. And the prayer which they offer would not be pleasing to God from the lips of any in the present period, or the period of the church. They manifest solicitude for the pouring out of righteous judgments on their enemies and murderers. They even seem to be in haste for God to let loose his vengeance on them. And in desiring God to judge and avenge their blood on them that dwell on the earth, they desire what God has promised to do at the end of the age when the antichrist is destroyed; but this desire and prayer would not be pleasing to God from any of his suffering saints in this age of grace and mercy and forbearance. It will only be proper at the consummation of the age, or when the age is closing in terrible judgments. This is evidence that the periods of time are distinct. While the true church are dwelling on the earth, and the Holy Spirit is dwelling in the church, and the number of the elect is not yet perfect, there is a hinderance to the revelation of the man of sin; and however numerous may be our enemies now, and however fierce their wrath, we are commanded to love them, and do them good; but when the church is called up at the parousia of Christ, and that wicked one is revealed, and those who will not worship the beast and his image are slain, a period quite distinct from the present will have arrived; the age will be just closing; the doom of the rebellious nations will be impending, divine judgments will be gathering ready to be poured down. This will be known to the saints living in that hour of trial; it will be known as part of the divine plan that the blood of those killed under the power of the desolator will be avenged; and hence the prayer, which would be out of place now, will be in place then, for God to avenge their blood on their enemies. This is the prayer of the souls of those whom John saw under the altar, who had been slain for their testimony for Christ. From all these considerations, we conclude that their resurrection takes place at the close of the great tribulation, when the last saint has been slain for the testimony he has held; and that the resurrection of those who now sleep in Jesus, will take place when Jesus comes into the air, and before the man of sin is revealed. But both companies, be it observed will belong to what is, by way of eminence, called the first resurrection; they will all share in the glorious privileges of the Firstborn.

After the church comes down from heaven with Christ, the beast and the false prophet are cast into the lake of fire. After the punishment of the beast and the false prophet, the devil is laid hold of by an angel that comes down from heaven, and is shut up in the abyss for a thousand years. Then it is after the imprisonment of Satan that the martyr-saints are raised from the dead. The conclusion, therefore, seems inevitable that the church, the dead in Christ, must have been raised previous to the martyr-saints whose souls cry out from under the altar, previous to the binding of Satan, and previous to the taking of the beast and the false prophet and casting them into the lake of fire; for they descend from heaven with Christ previous to the transaction of the first of these events.

Paternity, (Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. U. Thomas.—No. 18.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

Were Jesus a Son of Joseph, then he would not have been "God's own Son," Rom. viii. 2, 32, then he could only be God's heir by adoption, like ourselves, as before shown.

Again; they say, "2nd. The covenant made with David is equally explicit in telling us that the heir to the throne was to be David's Son, was to be David's seed, of the fruit of his body, of the fruit of his loins, and to proceed out of his bowels. This story of the miraculous conception of Jesus conflicts with all these statements and completely sets them aside." This I have already shown to be a misapprehension of the covenant with David. Instead of the supernatural begottal and conception conflicting and setting aside the statements of the covenant, those statements were exactly fulfilled, and could not possibly have been fulfilled by a more natural begottal and production of a mere man. Nothing but a Son begotten and conceived through the augency and action of the Spirit Power of God, with a body prepared of the seed or flesh of David could possibly have fulfilled the terms of the covenant, and thus produce a literal and real Son of God, and heir to his throne and kingdom; and at the same time a literal descendant or "seed of David according to the flesh," and therefore heir of David's throne and kingdom. Besides, take notice, that the covenant does not say, nor neither does it follow, that David's promised Royal Son, whose inception as to the flesh-substance, began with Solomon, should be begotten by David in person, or by any of his descendants, but simply as to Paul and Peter both explain the covenant, and even David himself, when he said "my flesh shall rest in hope," and not see corruption; speaking of the death and resurrection of Jesus. He thus shows that the promised Messiah was to be his Son because he was to be made of his flesh: that Jesus was to be "the Son of David according to the flesh," or as worded by the Diaglott, "as to the flesh;" which flesh did actually proceed out of the bowels or loins of Abraham and David just as direct as if he had been begotten by Joseph; of which flesh-substance Jesus was made in Mary his mother, David's seed or descendant, as before shown. It is pure assumption and assertion without the least proof, that Jesus must have been begotten by a man, a descendant of David, because he was to be made of the flesh of David which came from his loins. God could just as easily produce his own Son, the Second Adam, by Spirit-begottal, using the flesh of David to do so, without the aid or agency of a man, as he produced his own Son, the first Adam, by creation, using dust, without the aid or agency of a man. Why, it is written, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

Again; they say, "This story contradicts and completely sets aside the genealogy by both Matthew and Luke." (What do they care for the genealogies? It is themselves that set them aside.) But the reader cannot fail to see the incorrectness of this assertion after having read what I have said, and carefully examined the genealogical table as given and explained above. Other supposed discrepancies over which Josephites stumble, can be easily reconciled, by careful examination and study. Nothing could be more absurd and silly, than some things put forth by astute Josephites as difficulties and disagreements, asking for reconciliation: such as whether the wise men guided the star, or was the star them; and "was the star of the first or second magnitude, or a planet, or meteor." Then they trump up pretended difficulties, and then like Ingersoll ridicule them. Then again turn round and exclaim "terrible frauds." They seem to think because there are some little things which they don't understand, that they are therefore irreconcilable; and of sufficient importance to justify repudiation of the whole account. Oh what folly!

Again; they say, 4th; "There are several statements recorded in the writings of the Apostles telling us that Joseph was his father." Now to show how much truth and candor there is in this statement, I will here repeat a few facts before shown. The words "Son of Joseph," occur only four times in all the Scriptures; twice by the ignorant Jews, once by Luke, and once by Philip. As to the wicked ignorant Jews who knew nothing about the Spirit-begottal of Jesus; their calling him the son of Joseph, could not of course be any evidence, or of any consequence whatever; and as to Philip, he spoke of him once like the other Jews as the son of Joseph; (and he was legally the son of Joseph—his adopted son) but this was on the first day he saw Jesus, before he was an apostle, and before he fully understood as to his origin and character, and which Jesus afterward explained to him. And lastly, as to Luke; his language was positive proof that Jesus was only "supposed" to be the son of Joseph.

Again 5th; they change "(as was supposed) the Son of Joseph," because, say they, "the word enomeo signifies just this; defined law, legal, hence legitimate," meaning by legitimate, according to the natural law of begottal. This is another mistake. The word "supposed," is not from enomeo, but from nomizo, which is defined "to reckon (or suppose) lawful." They evidently know this, or ought to know it. But there are three kinds of law; natural, supernatural, and human or civil law. Jesus was a legitimate Son because he was begotten according to God's supernatural law, which is a higher law than either natural or human law, and therefore not according to the natural law of begottal. He was also Joseph's legal Son, that is, according to civil law, because he was the Son of Mary his wife, and not begotten by any man who was not her husband; but not Joseph's natural Son, because not begotten by him. The Josephites say Jesus was an illegitimate Son if not begotten by Joseph!! And yet they know that an illegitimate son is one begotten by a man who was not the legal husband of his mother. They know therefore, that it is not possible for Jesus to have been an illegitimate Son. And yet that is the way they talk. It is as much as to say, if Jesus was not the natural Son of Joseph, then he was the son of some other man not Mary's husband, and therefore an illegitimate. I consider this blasphemy. If I am right, will they not be ashamed when Jesus comes, and they find as they surely will, that he was actually God's only direct Spirit-begotten Son? Oh, shame will then be the doom of blasphemers, and more than shame.

Again 6th; they say the phrase Son of Man, occurs many times, applied to Jesus. "This expressions must have some signification at least. What can they mean if Jesus was not a Son of man but begotten by God direct. They must be untrue." Yes, Son of Man must have some signification at least; and have I not clearly shown what its meaning is? That it means just what it is used and defined to mean throughout the Scriptures whenever it is applied to Jesus; and especially defined by David, Paul, and Peter? That Son of Man means son of Abraham, and son of David? Not that Jesus was begotten by Abraham or David, or any other man in order to be Son of Man. But he was called the Son of Abraham, Son of David, Son of Man, because he was their seed or descendant, as to the flesh; not as to begottal. Not that he must have been begotten by the will of the flesh, and according to the natural law of generation, as they foolishly assert; but to be a Son of Man according to the Word, it was only necessary that he should be produced by the impregnation of the human-flesh-germ in a woman, and by her blood built up, and ultimately born; thus becoming a being in human nature, even though such impregnation was produced by the direct power of God. Jesus was to be a Son of David simply because made of David's flesh; not a son in every sense, but in that one sense; not as to begottal, but as to the flesh. This is the testimony of the Word itself "as to the flesh." But, says one, it is an established law, that "like begets like;" and therefore only a human being could begot a human being. True according to natural law: that is, true in part only, for although like begets like, yet no two persons by the same father and mother were ever exactly alike. But how many times has God ignored, suspended, or set aside natural law, either wholly or in part, when his purpose required; and effected what was necessary, by supernatural law and power? May we not say in hundreds of instances? In the case of every miracle in both the Old and New Testament? It was necessary that the Son of God should be more than a mere human being—a more man. Hence he was produced by the joint operation of both natural and supernatural law.

The word "seed" which occurs so many times in the Scriptures, signifies simply as defined by Dr. Young and others; progeny or offspring; which of course necessarily includes the flesh germ from which the offspring is produced. So "the seed of the woman," defined, is "the substance which nature prepares for the production and the conservation of the species." Or in other words, the ovum, (an egg) which is defined "the body formed by the female, in which after impregnation, the development of the fetus takes place." In natural generation, the power of impregnation is in the male, and is therefore technically called the seed. But the flesh germ, the substance, the egg which by impregnation develops into the offspring, is in the female. This of course applies to animals as well as human beings; as in the case of the male and female fowl and other animals; the female producing the egg, and the male causing impregnation. In the case of those persons who are begotten by the gospel, the seed is spoken of as being both "the seed or word of the kingdom," and the persons who are begotten by that word. Matt. xiii. 19-23; Luke viii. 21-15; 1 Pet. i. 23-25. Another definition of seed is, "that from which anything springs; first principle; original; as the seeds of virtue or vice."

In the light of this explanation and illustration, it will be seen that in order for Jesus to be the seed of David as to the flesh, it was not that he should be begotten by David or any other man: that it was only necessary that the woman, his mother, should be a daughter or descendant of David. This was clearly God's way, as revealed in his word. He by his own Power impregnated the human germ in Mary and thus produced "his own Son," a Being who was Son of David as to the flesh, and Son of God as to the Spirit;" just such a wonderful Being as his purpose required. Josephites seem to think God could not produce a Son of David without having him begotten by a man—a descendant of David. They might with equal propriety, nay even more, assert that David could not have a son who was not begotten by himself in person, because the promise was "which shall proceed out of thy bowels." God is able to produce a being his own way, and in various ways. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" asked the Angel when Sarah distrustfully "laughed, saying, shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?" Gen. xvii. 13. God produced his Son Adam, in one way, his Son Jesus, the Second Adam in another way, and his sons, the brethren, of Jesus in still another way. There is no more reason for rejecting the miraculous conception of Mary's Son, Jesus, than the miraculous conception of Sarah's son, Isaac; although accomplished by the Spirit in two different ways, yet both were equally supernatural. So also the conception of Jacob. So have there been numerous miraculous things and events accomplished in the development of the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.

Dear Restitution:

I wish to say to the readers of The Restitution that Brother John Foore, of Galesburg, Kan., has been holding a series of meetings for us, commencing Sunday, June 19, and ending Monday night, June 27, preaching in all twelve discourses. On the first Sunday we held a basket meeting in the grove, near Winebaugh School House, four miles distant from our regular place of meeting, where the elders of our congregation have heretofore occasionally held meetings. Brother Foore preached two able discourses that day to quite an audience, and we trust that the word preached may find lodgment in some honest hearts at that place.

On the second Sunday of our meeting we held another basket meeting in the grove in our own vicinity, and the remainder of our meetings were held at night in the new Christian Church, thanks to them for inviting us into their house. The interest to hear and the number in attendance increased from first to last, and we hope much good will result from this meeting.

On Tuesday morning before our dear old brother took his leave we met on the banks of Lost River and beheld three obedient believers buried beneath its yielding waves, to rise to walk in newness of life. They were two married daughters and a son-in-law of Brother and Sister McDonald who were overjoyed to see their children coming into the fold of the Great Shepherd. Brother McDonald remarked to one of the brethren that "this is a day of rejoicing."

This is the third time that Brother Foore has come and held meetings in our community and we know of no one who has borne the burden and heat of the day more than he has. We know that he has made much sacrifice of time and also of means for the cause of the Master. He preaches the gospel in its purity, and has no use for hobbies, nor neither have we. He is much beloved by all our brethren here, and his happy, earnest manner of presenting the truth to the people and his Christian deportment is highly commendable and has won for him the respect of others and removed much prejudice. We hope we have not heard the sound of his voice the last time in mortality, but if such should be the case, may we live in that way and manner that we may be permitted to meet with him and all the faithful in that bright Eden home where they never take the parting hand, and where no farewell tear is shed. May the rich blessings of our Heavenly Father be upon him wherever he may be, is our prayer.

Dear Restitution:

I thought I would say a few words to my friends who read The Restitution. I am up and down during the day and sometimes can walk a quarter of a mile by resting several times. I cough and spit much. Sooner or later it will wear me out. I am just waiting the Lord's time, I am aiming to die at the feet of Jesus, the life-giver. I am alone here, away from those of like precious faith. My wife and self ate the Lord's Passover Supper the seventh of last April by ourselves. My nearest neighbor lives one-fourth of a mile away; he is a Baptist deacon and a very kind man. If it had not been for him we would have suffered much, but he was the Good Samaritan to us. The Lord reward him.

Last Thursday my wife was seventy-one years old and this day makes me sixty-seven years old. The Restitution comes to us weekly with its load of cheer and comfort to the lonely pilgrim; it contains more Bible truth than any other paper. I fail to hear from some of the old brethren; where are they? Have they drifted away from their first love? Permit me to exhort you to return to your first love. If you do not return you will loose the crown of righteousness for the restitution age and then for the never-ending ages in the kingdom of God and of Christ and the saints. This is the time of the joint rulership of God, Jesus and the saints, after the subjects are selected and all wicked persons have suffered the second death and the devil also is destroyed—none left but the loyal. This is the time the earth is filled with the glory of God. Amen and amen.

I had a letter from Brother J. S. Hatch; he is still strong in the faith. I shed tears of joy when I read some of the articles in The Restitution. How I would have enjoyed being at the Antioch meeting, but do not expect to be at a meeting of the brethren this side of the kingdom of God. I am striving for a crown of righteousness thereto. Pray for me that I may be steadfast to the end of my pilgrimage. I am in the world but not of the world. I would like to live till the Lord comes for his people, but do not expect to. Good by to all,

Jonah Peirce.

Success in Preaching the Gospel.

For the last month I visited the following places. First, Clinton County at the Plummer School House; held meeting over two Sundays, then visited Huntington County and held meeting some ten days. While there I formed the acquaintance of Brother Lewis H. Schlosser. He is a brother that is apt to teach and all the dear brethren among whom he may labor in word and doctrine should give him encouragement. We need all the help we can get. Many of us are getting old and we need younger ones to take our places soon, if the dear Lord does not soon come.

From Huntington County I went to Gospel Grove and held meeting over two Sundays. From there went back to Tipton County and held meeting over one Sunday; also preached the funeral of Brother and Sister Atkinson's child, that died at the age of three years and three months. From Tipton County I came here to Clinton and held meeting over last Sunday. The immediate results was nine immersed, and three that had been immersed united, making in all twelve, and some four to be immersed at my next meeting.

I return to Huntington County the third Sunday in August and hold a grove meeting near Claysville, then to Gospel Grove and hold a protracted meeting over the fourth Sunday in August, and from there to Clinton County and hold a grove meeting over the first and second Sundays in September. From here I go to Paris, Edgar Co., Ill., and hold meeting over two Sundays, and from there to Lanark, Ill., and hold meeting over the the first and second Sundays in August. So my appointments are given out up to the first and second Sundays in September. J. S. Hatch.

Dear Restitution:

I know that my subscription expired May 7th, and I am so thankful for its continuance. It is a great pleasure and comfort to me and the greatest solace I have next to my Bible, for we hear nothing from the pulpit here to equal its teachings. Their fashionable and aristocratic preachers dare not advocate such unpopular doctrine. One of the preachers of the Campbellite Church said the doctrine was true but it would not do to preach it—and he is such a popular man.

We are having a great deal of trouble with sickness at present and have had a great deal at times ever since we were married, and were it not for that bright and glorious time soon to come for the suffering ones I could scarcely bear up under much more affliction. It is feared that the yellow fever will come here this summer and we expect to leave here by the first of July, at which time I will renew my subscription, if nothing occurs to prevent. I cannot renew at present owing to our misfortunes. I solicit the prayers of the brethren and sisters. Have tried to get some trial subscribers but failed. In the one hope,

Mrs. R. E. Bullion.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us, should give their Name, Post Office, County, and State plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk: money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or in ordering the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your Address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will have us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

---

We have just received two articles from J. Cameron, Edinburgh, Scotland, for THE RESTITUTION.

We received an article from Sister E. Coffman for the Youth's Column, which has unfortunately been lost or misplaced, as we cannot find it. This is much to our regret.

AN "irrepressible conflict" is still the result of the Oriental Question among the Great Powers of Europe. Egyptian and Bulgarian affairs are now the disturbing elements.

FROM the effects of the excessive heat, that has prevailed throughout the country, numerous deaths have occurred. Yellow fever prevails at Key West, Florida; 119 deaths have been reported. Shocks of Earthquake have been felt in Egypt and on the Italian coast, as well as on some islands in the Mediterranean. In addition to these items accounts come of destructive storms in the vicinity of New York City—also in several other localities East and West.

M. Godet, a somewhat celebrated expositor and commentator, recently published an article in the Revue Theologique on "L'Enseignment de Saint Paul concernant la Vie Future," The Teaching of Saint Paul Concerning the Future Life, and as an editorial notice was given that no reply would be admitted, E. Petavel-Olliff published a response in the, "Revue de Theologie et de Philosophie," entitled, "Quelques Difficultes du Dogme Traditional concernant la Vie Future," "Some Difficulties with respect to the Traditional Dogma regarding the Future Life." This has been re-published in Pamphlet form, and a copy, in the French language, has been kindly sent us by the author from Geneva, Switzerland. Although we have not that thorough knowledge of the language, so indispensible, for the work of translating, we have given one section of the pamphlet to our readers in the present number of our paper. As we have learned from the Rainbow, that Mr. E. White contemplates translating the Pamphlet for that Journal, we may, for the remainder await his rendering into English before placing any more of the Review before our readers. Many thanks to the Author.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Matt. iii. 15.

The baptism administered by John, our Lord's forerunner, was a baptism instituted to be administered to persons confessing sinfulness and pledging themselves to the practice of righteousness in their life after their baptism. A hereditary descent from the father of the faithful was not the only requisite for the reception of this rite. This relationship might have sufficed the unrepentant Sadducee and self-righteous Pharisee when presenting a sacrificial offering at the Temple altar; but John had come to teach the necessity of a heart change. Neither kinship to Abraham by lineal descent, nor ceremonial purification would avail the candidate. Personal righteousness was the imperial necessity in this crisis of the ages. John's baptism was not for the self-righteous nor for the race-righteous, but for the repentant at heart—a repentance resulting in the righteousness of life. The outcome of John's close requirements was that the people and the publicans justified God by being baptized, while the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God, being not baptized of him. Among the repentant sinful, and the unrepentant race-righteous, appeared a person, holy, harmless, and undefiled,—a person divinely righteous in both nature and character, demanding baptism at the hands of the great Reformer. John was perplexed. How can a baptism connected with a confession of sins, and with repentance unto righteousness, be adapted to one already perfectly and independently righteous? The answer is, "I come to do thy will, O God." It was the righteous will of God that his own dear Son should come into this world "to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."

The death and resurrection of the Son of God's love was involved in the great plan of redemption. In God's righteous purpose the baptism into the deep dark floods of death was predestined for the world's Redeemer. To fulfil God's holy will the loved Son must die. Perfect submission in obedience—even unto death—was absolutely requisite to consummate all righteousness. Of this future obedience unto death, as the Father's righteous requirement, Christ's baptism by John was both the pledge and symbol picture. A sinless Redeemer does and suffers what is righteous, that the redoomed sinful may become righteous through his redemption. Unto him who loves us, and washes us from our sins in his own blood, be present and eternal praise. Let us be glad and rejoice that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin.

IMMORTALITY ACCORDING TO THE BIBLE.

The words spirit and soul are met with more than sixteen hundred times in the Scriptures, but no one ever finds the expression "immortal soul" or "immortal spirit." God only. It is said, possesses immortality. M. Godet is well aware of the correctness of this fact. Very many authors have come to the conclusion that the immortality of the soul—in the commonly adopted traditional sense—is not a Bible doctrine. Men of all creeds have come into accord respecting this matter. We cite for example M. Thomas-Henri Martin, whose work on The Future Life received the approbation both of Pius IX. and M. Ernest Renan. "We agree voluntarily," says M. Martin, "that the philosophical doctrine, pure and simple, of the immortality of the soul is not to be found in any place in the Scripture." M. Renan reminds us more than once, that the first Christians were "a thousand leagues from the conceptions of the immortality of the soul which have been derived from the Greek philosophy; they—the Christians—thinking that all men die one time, but that the wicked die twice; for after the resurrection and judgment they are plunged into nihility."

"Neither the doctrine of the immortality of the soul nor the name itself can be found in the Bible" says Olshausen. The venerable Delitzsch, also, explicitly declares, that "in all the Bible there is nothing that implies the natural immortality of the human soul."

M. Reuss is of the same opinion. He affirms repeatedly that "the philosophical thesis concerning the immortality and the indestructibility of the human soul is absolutely foreign to the religion of the Bible." On the 30th of October 1885, Professor August Sabatier maintained exactly the same thing in the very midst of the Theological Society of Paris, with no one to contradict him. M. L. Bonnet, whose caution is well known, often speaks, in his commentary, of a "heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul. The Scripture knows nothing," says he, "concerning the sterile notion of a state of sheer Spirit—of an immortality of the soul independent of the resurrection, and the special renewal of our whole being. This false spiritualism is as contrary to a true philosophy as to the Gospel." M. Godet is of a different opinion. On his part the natural indestructibility of the soul is a supposition to be implied from biblical intuition. In other words, if the Bible never mentions an immortality natural and inalienable, it is because this doctrine is apparent enough without being stated. Here our difficulties begin. 1. It seem to us that if the immortality of the soul is so obvious as to be taken for granted, then no one could call it in question; yet it, nevertheless, has continually been disputed. The Epicureans at Athens, and the Sadducees in Jerusalem, denied the immortality of the soul, and also any life at all after the death of the body. These two sects were numerous and powerful. In the time of Isaiah there was not wanting a people whose motto was, "Let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we die." Consequently the immortality of the soul could not be so obvious as to need no formal statement.

2. "The Biblical sphere is limited to the sphere of morality" says M. Godet. So be it, if he will concede to us that precisely as the immortality of the soul promotes morality it, in the same degree, avails for the interest of religion. The belief in a future life is, of itself, at the very foundation of religious morality. But he makes the immortality of the soul something above the Bible sphere. Strange inconsistency that the Scriptures give no intimation upon that which pertains most intimately to its sphere. As Luther says:—"We are not Papists but Christians; we know nothing relative either to faith or morals except what is amply and explicitly taught in the Holy Scriptures." One may entreat to know why the scholastic doctrine concerning the immortality of the soul should be the sole exception to this principle so generally embodied in the very heart of Evangelical Protestantism.

3. One may be permitted to say, for himself, that the Bible has a very superfluity of declarations for the support of doctrines which might have been taken for granted far better than that of the essential immortality of the soul. For instance the existence, the spirituality, and the eternity of God are frequently and explicitly affirmed. "God is a Spirit," says Jesus; "One must believe that God exists," writes the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. He is frequently spoken of as the One God "immortal," "eternal," "imperishable."

In order to believe in man's natural imperishableness we should be pleased to come across the place—which has not been the case as yet—where one single passage applies, either one or the other of these epithets to the human soul. But we are compelled to relinquish any such satisfaction.

4. But may it not be claimed that—as a general thing—one should avoid attributing to a man opinions which he has never expressed, and gratuitous suppositions, which have no basal connection whatever with what one might term, constructively, a process at law?

What would be said of a judge, who would send one to the scaffold merely because he had "the intuition" that this man was a murderer, and that too without so much as considering any counter pleadings whatever? This is something like what is done when anyone attributes to Bible writers the opinions of certain Pagan philosophers. Imbued with their Platonic conceits, the adherents of the traditional dogma are by far too often forgetful to bear in mind that principle so essential to all truly Exegetical science;—Sensum ne inferas sed efferas—i. e. you must not bring the meaning into but must bring it out,—or, you must draw out the meaning of the texts, and not thrust a meaning into them.

5. In this case one has something more than a mere absence of proof; he has something in proof to the contrary. Very far from leaving it supposable that the soul is absolutely imperishable the Bible categorically teaches that it is mortal. A celebrated Hebraist, whom M. Godet will not be very ready to challenge, Prof. Franz Delitzsch, has acknowledged this: "According to the Bible view," says he, "the soul can be put to death and lodged in the dust; it is mortal." Num. xxiii. 10; xxxv. 11; Isa. xxv. 18. [Comp. Ps. vii. See texts in Heb. —ED. RES.]

6. But there is still more. In a hundred passages, both in the New Testament as well as in the Old Testament, the Scripture teaches that sinners will be completely destroyed. The sacred writers have exhausted the resources of the languages of which they have made use. The New Testament terms are the very same which Plato employs to designate that annihilation of which he had the most perfectly clear conception. It is impossible to apply to the silence of Scripture, in regard to a feigned, natural immortality, the familiar proverb, "Silence gives consent." It would become better to speak of silence as disallowing. The more so as the explanation drawn from an evidence unexpressed is by no means entirely satisfactory to M. Godet. After making mention of this for the sake of remembrance, he then proposes a second consideration. That this phenomenal silence arises from this—that in applying such an epithet as immortal to the soul, (luminous only from its entire absence) the Scripture "might appear, by connecting such an element to our nature, to attribute an existence to us not depending on the divine will." "Appear to attribute!" Is this not to say that this would be to, introduce an incorrepient epithet? or, in plain words, a dangerous term? Is there not exceeding danger from this in our own days?

The Bible dreads exalting the pride of man. In our age there is the utmost reason for the existence of such a fear. Men have become so very modest as to dare most recklessly to record that immortality to all that the Bible reserves only for the truly faithful. They can, without peril, place on their own heads one of the most majestic ornaments in the divine crown. Is it not most just to affirm—on the contrary—that never has human pride displayed itself with more audacity, never has man-worship (Fr. anthropolatrie) so advertised itself with such great impudence. Without doubt God has eroded man in his own image, but most surely if man be an image he is not the reality itself. The sun mirrors itself in a basket of water, but that emanation of luminousness is not a sun, for it easily vanishes. That tarnished mirror of divinity, the human soul, has but the brittleness of glass. So, indirectly, and with great reason, M. Godet finds himself censuring the churches for prodigally heaping upon man such an expression as "immortal soul," which, for many excellent reasons, the Bible has always carefully avoided doing.

M. Godet has even made us one important concession. He concedes that "immortality appertains to God alone in an absolute and inalienable manner;" and that he always has "the right to withdraw from anyone the gift of immortality." But if the immortality of man is not "absolute and inalienable" if it depends on the good pleasure of the Creator, then it is, in fact, relative and conditional. Without a moaning doubt, M. Godet is himself, also, a conditionalist; with this difference, however, that he does not accord to the soul the liberty of suicide; which, in our eyes, is an immortality forced upon humanity to damage greatly its liberty. Nevertheless, in all he writes, M. Godet has shown that he realizes the really destructive effects of sin.

"The soul of the vicious," says he, "is dissolved under the deleterious action of its own depravity." In conformity with Littre, "dissolves itself;" that is surely to be destroyed. Could M. Godet himself attach to the term of which he made use, any different signification? "Dolutere" comes, intermediately through the Latin—from a Greek verb signifying to destroy, to kill (λυειν, Gr., to kill; deleo, Lat., to blot out, to kill.—ED. RES.)

"The soul," elsewhere says M. Godet, "corrupts itself through its lusts." "Corrompre," that is, "to break the whole into pieces, and, consequently, to spoil, or putrify, to ruin, wipe out." The propriety in employing these resemblances demands that corruption puts an end to the soul as a resultant analogy. By merely consulting the dictionary M. Godet must, from these premises, and taking our point of view, share with us in our conclusions.

The Restoration of the Kingdom to Israel.

When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, it is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, who also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus (not another) shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Acts i. 6–11.

It was not the fact of the restoration of the kingdom again to Israel, but the time, as Christ's answer fully sustains. It is not for you to know the times or the season which the Father hath reserved to himself, agreeing exactly with what Christ said on another occasion. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only."

The disciples, in Christ's and the apostles' day were premature in their belief with regard to Christ's second coming, and the simultaneous establishment of the kingdom. This was Paul's view of the matter, which will be found by turning to his second letter to Timothy, chap. iv. He says, I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom, Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine, vs. 2, 3.

Why the necessity for this, Paul? The answer is found in the third and fourth verses. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. Are we who are living near the close of the nineteenth century, near the closing scenes in the great drama of earth's career, witnessing the fulfilment of this prophesy? Also in his first letter to Timothy iv. 1, 2. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils? In Paul's second letter to his Thessalonian brethren, he corrects them in regard to the speedy coming of the Lord. Hear him: "Now we beseech you brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him; that ye be not soon shaken in mind, nor be troubled, neither by Spirit nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." 2 Thess. i. 1–3. In the remainder of the same chapter the apostle gives a graphic description of a power which had begun to develop itself, but had not at that time reached the zenith of its power; it is believed to be none other than Daniel's "little horn power," a fac-simile of Catholicism. Paul's man of sin fully exemplifies the Popes of Rome in their different aspects or phases.

The difference which now exists between the Catholic and Protestant sects, is simply in the fact, that the former interdicts the circulation of the Scriptures and the reading of the same on pain of excommunication, torments of hell, and the forfeit of prayers for their egress from purgatory. The Protestants do not forbid the circulation of the Scriptures, but on the contrary encourage it; so far they are justly entitled to praise. And further they have, of late years, (tacitly at least) repudiated the God-dishonoring doctrine of eternal torture in hell fire. This dogma, like "the Salem witchcraft," is virtually one of the past, because no man who sets any value on his reputation as a scholar cares to stand up and be counted as its advocates. No Bible doctrine is so fully proven as the doctrine of the restoration or restitution, (words of the same import, viz., from the verb, to restore) which means to bring back to a former state or condition.

In the Acts of the Apostles, chap. iii. 19–21, we find the following, viz., Repent ye therefore and be comforted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. And he shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you. Whom the heavens must receive (retain) until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those who follow after, as many as have spoken have likewise foretold these days. vs. 24. This testimony takes in a very wide field or range. The kingdom of God, of his Son, of Israel, (terms used interchangeably) of which kingdom in its restoration, is simultaneous with Christ's second coming. See the proof before cited in Acts and in 2 Tim. iv. 1. The kingdom thus spoken of is a plain tangible (not a mythical) kingdom. All the properties or constituents inhering in a kingdom are alike applicable to this also, viz., territory, king, subjects, laws and capital city. Jerusalem was used as such with Israel in the type, and it will be the capital again. The New Jerusalem, "built again on its own little hills," no more utter destruction, but to be safely inhabited. It will be the capital city of the new earth wherein will dwell righteousness." In these "days of fables," which have become such by a departure from the word, as the legitimate sequence.

Modern theology has a great horror of anything literal or tangible to the corporeal senses. The idea prevails (but erroneously) that literal is opposed to spiritual. The scattering of Israel, as all are ready to admit, was literal, but their gathering must, as they say, be spiritual, but no such warrant can be found in the word for such an arbitrary dividing or classification. Excessive spiritualizing or mystifying the Scriptures, appears to be the order of the day among the Protestant sects as well as among the Catholics. No wonder that infidelity is on the increase and is so rampant as it is at the present day under such teaching.

It is right that late to measure the real universe. By day it is dark. We see only this earth and earthly sun. By night God withdraws the veil, reveals eternity with its far-off shores of sparkling worlds, and fills the soul with infinite longings, which make it conscious it has a universe within, greater than the universe without, and which can be satisfied only with God. —Kerr.

DIVORCE.

"And he saith unto them, whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. And if a woman, shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery." Mark x. 11, 12.

"But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery, and whosoever marrieth her that is divorced, committeth adultery." Matt. v. 32.

It is strange, with this explicit language of Jesus before them, that the lawgivers of professed Christian nations, should have framed the laws of divorce as they have. Marriage is a divine institution, and as such, all laws relating to its obligations, should be made in accordance with the divine will. God joins men and women together in the conjugal relation, and "what God hath joined together, man may not put asunder." When the man has given himself to the woman and the woman to the man, in the presence of witnesses in the legal way, promising to be for each other alone while they shall both live, no law has been made, no law can be made that will divorce them, so long as they keep that covenant. When the husband commits fornication, he is already divorced from the wife, because the covenant, to keep himself for her alone has been broken. He is the sinning party; she can separate herself legally, and rightfully from him, and be free to marry another. And so with the wife if she commits fornication, the husband is free and may marry another.

Neither shall put away the other, "Saving for the cause of fornication." How plain and simple the law! How easy to understand!

It matters not that men and women are said to be divorced for other causes according to the laws of the land: they are not divorced, and are not free to marry again: the marriage covenant has not been broken; they are still husband and wife. Whoever marries, having been divorced for any other cause "saving that of fornication," commits adultery, and all laws, permitting persons thus to marry, are wrong, and in direct opposition to the language of the Savior. Our laws in reference to this matter sadly need revision. They deceive even professed Christian people, and by deceiving cause them to commit sin. The wife is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth: but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married when she will, only in the Lord," God's word needs careful reading, and when read the most strict compliance must be given to its precepts. God requires obedience more than he requires burnt offerings and sacrifices. "Obey my voice," is the requirement from him, and "I will be your God, and ye shall be my people," the promised reward. There may be cases, where compliance with the strict letter of the Savior's law may seem to the mind of the flesh to be hard and almost impossible of fulfilment, but to the Christian, intent on obedience, and looking to an incalculable weight of glory, there is nothing impossible about it.

In cases of drunkenness, of cruelty, of unbelief, of incompatibility of temper; the Savior gives no license to separate, obtain a divorce and re-marry.

The re-marriage, in any one of these instances is adultery. The wife is not to depart from her husband, but if she depart, she is to remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband. The husband is not to "put away his wife," and if he puts her away, or departs from her; or, if she departs from him, has he any right, judging from the context to marry another? Most assuredly not, he must remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to his wife. Paul, would not contravent the language of Jesus. The "departing," gives the one that is left no license to marry again.

In the instances that Paul gives of unbelieving wife or husband, one of the parties had been converted to Christianity and the other not, and this, after the marriage union had been formed. If the unbeliever departed, the other party could only let him or her go; there must be no strife about it; believers having been called to peace. The brother or sister, was not under bondage to hold the unbeliever in such cases. God had called them to peace, and if they did not strive about the matter, how did the wife know but that she might save her husband; or the man, but that he might save his wife, proving conclusively, that although the unbelieving one had departed, the husband was still a husband to the living wife, and vice versa.

If "the departing," gave the other party the right to marry again, then would not Paul say, "For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or, how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?"

The wife is still considered a wife, and the husband a husband.

It has long troubled me to think that there was any conflict between Paul and Jesus, or that Paul had added any thing to the explicit language of Jesus. He has no conflict, he has added nothing. There is only one cause for separation, where the innocent party may marry another.

I know that this is a delicate subject, and one that but few care to handle. Yet where there is danger of dear ones sinning from ignorance, and thereby endangering their hope of future life, ought not some one to speak? ought not the matter to be made plain? Loyalty to God and his word, and love for the household of faith, compels me to speak. God help all the waiting ones, to be careful in all things. Lovingly. S. R. WIXOM.

BIBLE LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.

Lesson 9.

FAITH.

The world is suffering for lack of faith, skeptics are ever trying to remove the ancient land-marks of historic facts, because persons with present environments do not act as the Ancients did, with different environments, they deny that such and such things ever occurred. Almost every position taken by religionists called faith, whether it is found in the Bible or Heathen Mythology. Christ seems to have seen this time in prophetic vision, when he said, "Nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth," Luke xviii. 8. Without faith, it is impossible to please God. The Bible speaks of one Faith. The faith once delivered to the saints. Paul says, "I have kept the faith. Notice the definite article "The" is used to denote a particular faith. "Faith is a confidence in respect to things hoped for, a confidence of things not seen." Heb. xi. 1. Sawyer's Trans.

Paul says in Rom. x. 17, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." Then we must look in the Bible for the Faith that pleases God. Christ said "Ye believe in God, believe also in Me." What shall we believe about him? All that is taught in the Old and New Testament concerning him. In looking for an example we turn to the great apostle Paul. He says, he has kept the Faith. We find that when he found what his duty was, he arose and was baptised straightway, and began to teach that Jesus was the Christ, although he was persecuted all his life, and became a martyr for the cause of Christianity. He exclaims when near the close of his life "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the Faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life which the Lord, the righteous judge will give, and not to me only, but to all those who love his appearing." He places the reward when Christ comes to raise the dead.

Paul was a great preacher because his subject was great. He did not have large audiences or fine churches. He says himself that he preached the gospel from house to house, in prison and by the way-side, in the synagogues of the Jews, and the courts of Kings as well as the little flock, called the church of God at Corinth, and the other churches that he established, and his letters come to us today like a divine benediction. Let us follow his example, accept Christ as our Savior, live a life of devotion to his cause, that when Christ comes the second time, without sin unto salvation, we may appear with him in glory.

National Conference.

The committee appointed at the recent conference at Antioch to correspond with State Conferences in the matter of a proposed National Conference composed of delegates from each State, recommend and request that our conferences everywhere at their next meeting consider the question of a National Conference, and upon approval at once appoint delegates thereto; they also invite correspondence relative to the proposed National Conference, which will receive attention if addressed to the chairman of the committee at Plymouth, Ind.

LIFE'S STORMS ARE PASSING.

The storm has broken, and the heavy blast
That stifled morn's free breath, and shook its dew,
Is dying into sunshine; and the last
Dull cloud has vanished from yon arch of blue.

I know it is but for a day, the war
Must soon be waged again 'twixt earth and heaven;
Another tempest will arise to mar
The tranquil beauty of the fragrant even.

And yet I joy as storm on storm awakes;—
Not that I love the uproar or the gloom:
But in each tempest over earth that breaks,
I count one fewer outburst yet to come.

No groan Creation heaves is heaved in vain,
None's e'er shall be repeated; it is done.
Once heaved it never shall be heaved again;
Earth's pangs and throes are lessening one by one.

So falls the stroke of sorrow, and so springs
Strange joy and comfort from the very grief,
Even to the weariest sufferer; so brings
Each heavy burden its own sweet relief.

One cross the less remains for me to bear;
Already borne is that of yesterday:
What of today shall no tomorrow share;
Tomorrow's with itself shall pass away.

That which is added to the troubled past
Is taken from the future, whose sad store
Grows less and less each day, till soon the last
Dull wave of woe shall break upon our shore.

The storm that yesterday ploughed up the sea,
Is buried now beneath its level blue;
One storm the fewer now remains for me,
Ere sky and earth are made forever new.

COLONIES IN PALESTINE.

In November, 1882, Mr. Lawrence Oliphant took up his residence at Haifa, under the shadow of Mount Carmel, and commenced a series of delightful letters to the New York Sun upon Palestine and the domestic life of its people. Thanks to Mr. Dana the letters, which are spread over a period of three years, have been gathered together in a book.

Western Palestine has been so thoroughly explored from Dan to Beersheba by the officers of the Palestine Exploration Fund that sensational discoveries are hardly to be expected; rich gleanings were, however, necessarily left behind, and of these Mr. Oliphant has gathered up his full share. An exhaustive examination of Mount Carmel brought to light the ruins of six ancient towns in addition to fourteen found during Capt. Condor's survey, and showed the extent to which its lovely hills and dales were cultivated, and the high state of civilization which must once have prevailed there.

The changed condition of Palestine is in great measure due to the large influx of colonists during the last twenty years. The first to arrive were the ill-fated American Adventists, who settled down at Jaffa, but soon disappeared under climatic and other adverse influences. The Americans were followed by colonists from the "Temple Society," founded by Prof. Hoffman, of Wurtemberg, who had decided that it was the first duty of those who were waiting for the second coming of the Messiah "to restore the land to which so many Biblical promises especially attached." In 1869 four colonies were established: on the slope of Mount Carmel, near Haifa; at Jaffa; at Sarona; and in the immediate neighborhood of Jerusalem, where Prof. Hoffman now resides. The society numbers over 5,000 members, of whom 1,000 are in Palestine. An interesting description is given of the results produced by the influence which the simple, honest farmers and artificers have exercised upon the surrounding Arab population, and of the striking contrast between these results and those produced by the influence of the Carmelite monks, who have held Mount Carmel for seven hundred years. New stone houses have sprung up in all directions; the value of land has increased threefold; omnibuses, owned and driven by natives, now run four or five times a day between Haifa and Acre, where fifteen years ago a cart was unknown; a carriage road has been made between Haifa and Nazareth, a distance of twenty-two miles; and one can now ride and walk with safety at all hours in places where formerly no one ventured for fear of being waylaid and robbed.

The most interesting colonies are, however, those of the Jews, and of these eight have been established during the last two and a half years under circumstances which would have discouraged people "animated by no higher sentiment than that of merely finding a living." Four of these colonies are near Jaffa, and two of them are under the protection of Baron Rothschild, who will doubtless see that they have such pecuniary support as will secure their future. It has frequently been maintained that Jews are not well fitted to make good agricultural colonists. From this view, it is pleasant to find, Mr. Oliphant strongly dissents, and as the question is of some interest in view of late occurrences in Russia and Roumania, we quote his words:—

"So far as energy, industry, and aptitude for agricultural pursuits are concerned, the absence of which has always been alleged as the reason why no Jewish colony could succeed, the experience of more than two years has now proved that such apprehensions are groundless, and that with a fair chance Jews make very good colonists, and are likely, in fact, to succeed better in this country as agriculturalists than in America." Besides the colonies, a large Jewish agricultural college near Jaffa, founded by the Israelite Alliance, has for the last fifteen years been educating Jewish youths in agricultural pursuits; and though at first it entailed a heavy outlay on its promoters, it is now a financial success. On the southern slopes of Carmel a thousand acres of pasture and arable land have been purchased by the Central Jewish Colonization Society of Roumania, and here is being tried the interesting experiment of associating Jews and Moslem fellahin in field labor. The political aspect of the recent immigration of Jews from Russia and Roumania is discussed in the chapter "The Jewish Question in Palestine." The Russian Government, by adopting the policy of encouraging Jewish immigration into Palestine, and of protecting immigrants when there, has obtained a ready excuse for political interference in the country. Like the French Government in the case of the religious orders, the Russian Government pursues one policy at home and another abroad: the Jew driven to emigrate from Russia is forced as a colonist upon the unwilling Turk, and then protected.

Less satisfactory colonists than Germans or Jews are the Circassians who have been settled at several places east of Jordan, and on the coast plain south of Carmel. The site of Cæsarea, with its extensive ruins, has been given to Slav Moslems, who have emigrated from Bosnia and Herzegovina since those provinces were handed over to Austria; and near Acre a Persian colony has collected round the successor of the founder of the Babi, who lives in complete seclusion at a ville on the plain.

To those who remember Palestine twenty years ago nothing shows the progress that has been made better than the present condition of the great plain of Esdraelon. At that time it was annually harried by Bedawin; now it is in the highest state of cultivation and the Bedawin have been forced east of the Jordan. The plain, it appears, is divided between two great proprietors, the Sultan and the Sursooks, the richest bankers in Syria, and this has perhaps led to the grant of a concession for a railway across the plain.—The Athenæum.

THE SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS.

There is nothing which affects me with such a serious feeling as the sight of a company of children. For I know that there may be a saint or a fiend, a benefactor, or a criminal, wrapped up in each one of those mysterious bundles of humanity. And which it shall be depends on the teaching and the training which we shall give to them. For while I am a strong believer in predestination, I do not hold that each child is a seed from which a saint or a criminal is certain to blossom. Rather I would say that the child's heart is a seed-plot, where the germs of life or the germs of death are planted. And according to the seed will be the harvest. You are familiar with the oft-told story of Michael Angelo stopping in an obscure street of Florence and putting his shoulder to a piece of discolored, unsightly marble, which lay half buried in the mud, trying to lift it out of the dirt. "What are you about?" cried his companions. "Oh, there is an angel in that stone," he said, "and I must let it out!" And so getting it into his studio, he went to work to release it. That is very well; because it happens to be Michael Angelo, the father of the angels, the fashion of saints and seraphs, who came along. But it might have been some ingenious Mephistopheles who came along. And he would have seen a fiend instead of an angel, and set himself to bring out his black ideal. Ah, that is the serious and exact fact. Our cities are full of boys and girls playing in the streets; but they do not meet with good Michael Angelo's at every turn. On the contrary, there are fiend-makers watching them from open bars; artists of ruin leering at them with lustful eyes from every street corner, and demon-manufacturers only asking the chance to shape the white marble into a thing of doom instead of making it a thing of beauty and a joy forever. And my feeling is that the peril is so serious that the whole Christian community ought to form itself into a popular vigilance committee for the protection of our children.

The danger is, that a kind, social stupor may creep over us, so that we shall dream ourselves to sleep with our platitudes about 19th century progress and culture, and all that. We ought to have our eyes open to the perils of rising generations that we should not call those persons croakers who sound the cry of danger.

"One swallow does not make a summer," says the proverb. True: and you say that one ruined child does not prove that the danger is universal. But one vulture does indicate that there is prey lying somewhere very near us. And the vultures have come in flocks, from licentious France, from drunken Ireland, from priest-ridden Italy,—these birds of omen have lighted upon every street corner, ready to pounce down upon our children, with the temptations of beer and cigarettes, and corrupt books and degrading vices,—that they may slay them and then feed upon their moral death. "The slaughter of the innocents" is going on right under our eyes. That is why we try to rouse you to fight the liquor traffic, and the trade in obscene books. It is for the sake of the children, that they may be saved and not destroyed. "Beautiful sight," do you say, "on the Lord's day, to see the army of little ones marching to Sunday School, with banner and song?" Yes! and thank God for it. But if you were to station yourself on some lofty lookout, you would see a vast army of children going for beer and strong drink for their besotted parents, revelling in every kind of vice and profanity. These are the advanced guard of that foreign army which is marching upon us to overthrow our free institutions and to destroy our Sabbaths, to debauch our morals, and to tumble down our homes. One black-winged vulture is enough to make us snuff the pestilence from afar. But behold a cloud of them, "Wherever the carcass is," says Jesus, "there will the eagles be gathered together." And so many birds of prey building their nests at the street-corners; roosting in the high places of our city government; gorging themselves at our public treasury—point very ominously to the speedy corruption of our social and political life; unless a stop can be put to their ravages. What, then, is our defence, but to lay swift hold upon the children; and so make our Sunday Schools the arsenals and training grounds for that army which will have to fight the battles of the next generation. Every boy and girl we can educate in the principles of total abstinence, and personal integrity is a picket-guard thrown out against the incoming of the enemy. But not that only. Every child we can get converted and trained into a true Christian manhood, will be fitted to be a soldier of the cross in the great conflict that is to come. I do not speak in parables, but according to literal fact. The Duke of Wellington, in his old age, paid a visit to the school at Eton, where he had been educated as a lad. Addressing the youth of that famous school, and looking at the bench where he had sat when a child, he said, "Boys the battle of Waterloo was won here." He doubtless spoke the truth, since the child is father of the man, and the school-house the drill hall for our social and civil battles. But our Waterloo is coming. Let us have our army of little ones under training.—By the Editor of the Watchword.

Modern Babylon.

A traveller who has recently visited the site of ancient Babylon, and the town of Hillah adjacent, gives the following description in the pages of the Israelite.—"By the rivers of Babylon there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.' These words of the 137th Psalm are still confirmed to this day. Within a couple of hours' walk from Hillah, on the right bank of the Euphrates and close to the road that leads to Syria, there is a long-stretched wood of water-willows which being close to the river, are green and flourishing. These are some of the willows beneath which the Levites sat of yore, weeping bitterly, as they thought of Zion and its past grandeur and magnificence. The traveller coming from the North descries for the first time Hillah, the sad ruin of the celebrated Babylon, the mistress of the world, the city within which dwelt Nebuchadnezzar, the first destroyer of our political existence which centered in Jerusalem and its holy temple. Hillah lies within the midst of the heaps of ruins that once were Babylon. How the sight of it makes one think of the words of Isaiah: 'And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.' The once million-peopled city has become a Turkish country town, with no more than 20,000 inhabitants, of whom about 2,000 are Jews. These inhabit a separate portion of the town, consisting of several streets, and, according to a local tradition, identical with the part of Babylon that was assigned to their fathers when they were brought as prisoners of war and forced to settle there by King Nebuchadnezzar. However, the district assigned by that king to the captive Jews must have been very extensive, for there is reason to believe that it stretched as far as the Magdil Babel, or Babylonial tower, which the Arabs call Birs Nimrod, Nimrod's Castle. It is also to be assured that the village of Tehiffik, which lies at five or six hours' walk from this place, formed a suburb of the city of Babylon. In that village, Ezekiel's grave is still to be seen, and from this may be inferred that the tradition must be true, according to which Ezekiel died at Babylon. One of the synagogues also is called 'the house of prayer of Ezekiel the Prophet,' for tradition will have it that he worshiped in that building. Even at this day a stone is shown in that synagogue, on which Ezekiel is stated to have stood when blessing the people. No doubt the place has been renovated and built over a good many times in the course of centuries, but there can be no doubt about its being the very building that was erected by the exiles of Babylon. Hillah is on a small scale what Bagdad is on a larger, 'a city and mother in Israel;' throughout Mesopotamia, its Rabbis are celebrated as being among the most learned and are consulted in all doubtful cases. Among the Jews of Hillah, the recollection of Jerusalem is as vivid as ever. On the ninth day of the month of Ab, the anniversary of the fall of Jerusalem, the Lamentations of Jeremiah are chanted with greater fervor than they are by the Jews in any other part of the world; and the 137th Psalm is so much the national anthem of the Jews of Modern Babylon, that it is sung on every occasion, even at weddings, and special stress is laid on the 5th verse: 'If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.' The language spoken by the Jews of Hillah is Arabic, but some of them converse also in the Neotorian or Old Chaldean language, in which the Syrian Christians, called Nestorians, perform their worship, and in which the symbolical books of these are written. Some of the Kurds of Mesopotamia speak the same tongue, and have a special written alphabet, called Estrangela, which is derived from the one of the ancient Chaldeas. The rite in use in the synagogues is Sephardic, while the sermons are delivered in Arabic. The Jews of Hillah, however, do not dress in Arabic, but in Turkish garb; everybody, regardless of sex, wears the fez."

---

The one aim of Russia, according to a French traveller in the East, is not so much to obtain Constantinople, but his highest object of ambition is to become the Pope of Jerusalem. In support of this view attention is called to the fact that the germ of the war in 1854 was the quarrel over the Holy Places in Palestine, the conflict being only a continuation of the old struggle between East and West, which the Crusades still left unsettled. "Every step," says the French traveller, "towards Constantinople is a step toward Jerusalem. It is of great significance that Alexander III. confides much more upon the power of religious enthusiasm than either of his predecessors did. He wishes to procure a more official and ostentatious consecration of his religious authority, and to have his position emphasized as the supreme protector of the Eastern Churches and the Orthodox Faith, and so rally all the Greek-Oriental Churches and peoples around the person and office of the Czar as the Constantine of the modern world. This bold project has been long in preparation, and is never lost sight of. Numbers of settlements of Eastern monks have been founded, and Russia finds the money for the purchase of the land. Two of the Vienna papers adopt the view of the French traveller, and one of them adds, "the Czar would hold a coronation on the site of the Holy Sepulchre to be the highest possible consecration of his authority."

BROADHEAD, WIS.

Dear Restitution:

I closed my last when I reached Brother Berry's in Tama Co., Iowa, June 14th. Visited with the brethren at their homes during the week and preached twice on Sunday. Had a splendid time. We here had a very good rain that made many hearts rejoice. The long drouth that had prevailed seemed to make many feel as though they had been forsaken by kind Providence, but when the refreshing showers came they felt as though the good Lord had remembered them, and it caused them to rejoice and trust in him. One thing I was sorry to find and that was that only one of all the brethren there take THE RESTITUTION. We tried to stir them to duty and to support the paper. We concluded arrangements to hold a grove meeting there some time the last of August or first of September.

After a stay of seven days we took our leave of them. One thing more we wish to mention, that is the death of Mother Bowen who fell asleep in Jesus since I last visited them. She received the truth during the time I preached there when I lived in Iowa, and I baptised her into the all-saving name of the Anointed One, since which time she has lived a consistent Christian life. She sleeps in Jesus, waiting to be raised in the likeness of her blessed Lord who shall change her vile body and fashion it like unto his glorious body.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep.

I took my leave of them to visit the brethren at Marysville, Benton Co. Brother Morideth not being able to meet me at the cars sent his brother-in-law to meet me who conveyed me to Brother Morideth's. I found him quite unwell with something like dropsy. He and his wife are both sound in the faith, but their age and Brother M.'s affliction renders it almost impossible for them to attend meeting or to do much for the cause, yet they have it at heart.

Next I visited Brother and Sister Titus. Their situation is such that they are not able to get to meeting or do much, neither of them being very well and living alone, their family all having married and gone. They, seemed to be steadfast in the faith.

Next I visited the village of Marysville. To my great surprise I found those in the village without interest. Was not able to get up a meeting here at all, so we left for Bros. Remington and Long's, a distance of some four or five miles. Found them all right and anxious for meeting. We had meeting over Sunday at the Pleasant Prairie school house; the interest was good. Here we had the pleasure of visiting the Hillard boys, the four sons of Sister Calla Hillard, of Pleasant Valley, Jo Davis Co., Ill. Here we had a sociable time. We visited all four of those boys at their homes and became acquainted to some extent with their very genial companions.

On Monday morning I was brought by Smith, the oldest son, to Marysville, where I got conveyance to the B. R. station at Center Point with one of Mr. Burrell's teams, at which place I took the train for home, arriving at seven o'clock, June 28th, after an absence of almost five weeks. Taking all things together we had a most enjoyable trip, a good time and good meetings. And now let me express my thanks and gratitude to the brethren for their liberality in aiding me on my journey. Found everything at home all right. T. S. WHITESIT.

Dear Restitution:

After the preaching service today by Brother W. A. Prosser, Grace and Raphael Skeels, children of Brother Wm. Skeels, were buried by baptism in the likeness of their Savior's death, that, as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glorifying of the Father, even so they also should walk in newness of life. May they always look to their Heavenly Father, whose servants they now are, for his help to run with patience the race set before them through this sinful world, and, at their Savior's coming be rewarded with the crown of life. There were nineteen believers present to partake of the emblems of our coming King's death, five of our company not being with us. At an afternoon meeting we formed an organization that will be known as the "Church of God" of Scholls Ferry, Ore. Bros. E. E. Brooks and Wm. Skeels were elected elders.

By a vote of the church the secretary of the meeting was instructed to write through THE RESTITUTION to others of like faith in the Northwest, inviting them to correspond with him relative to the advisability of meeting in a conference at this place in the early fall. We know of quite a number of scattered ones of our faith in Washington Territory and Oregon, and no doubt there are others of whom we have not heard. Even if our first conference be small, it will be a beginning, and if all that can will unite and help there is no doubt but that our Father in heaven will own and bless our efforts to extend the glad tidings of his kingdom. Let us by our works show that we do love him with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our strength, and with all our mind.

We want to hear from everyone in the Northwest who is at all interested in this matter, and want their opinion either for or against the proposed conference. I would suggest that the replies to this call be as complete as possible, especially giving information about those of the brotherhood who may not chance to see this call, and all other information that will make this attempt to obey and fulfil our part of the Savior's commission a success. Address as below. Yours in the faith, W. W. JAQUITH,

Dear Restitution:

Inclosed please find Post Office Order for eighty cents, for which please send me two of the Unspeakable Gift, thirty cents each, and twenty cents for Bible Pearls. I want them to give them to the Sabbath School as rewards for pieces committed to memory. I have been trying for a long while to get the members of the M. E. Church to read THE RESTITUTION, but it proves to be a failure. I am going to try giving books and tracts, to see if I can reach them in that way. They have a membership of about four hundred. But they are like the brethren say of them at Salem. I have been trying to convince them that man is not immortal until the resurrection, and also that death is only sleeping until the resurrection morn. The first Sabbath in May, the new minister at this place takes for his text a part of the 35th verse of the 15th chapter of Corinthians. But some will say how are the dead raised? In his introductory remarks, a great many people, both old and young, had asked what becomes of the soul at death, he said emphatically I answer that the soul either goes to heaven or hell at death. I write this to show you what kind of preaching we have here.

I will give another, an elegant preacher belonging to the Christian brotherhood, came here on last Sabbath to preach his quarterly sermon, he said he had been requested to preach on the immortality of the soul of man. He took up his text in Ecclesiastes, after citing a few verses in the Old Testament to prove the immortality of the soul he went into science and reason, philosophy, and art, and sciences, mineralogy, the great Atlantic Cable, and gravitation by Newton, he wanted to prove that man was not capable of making these improvements in a mortal state. He finally closed his sermon. John's view of the celestial city, with the shining throng of the redeemed that had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, he proved by his reasoning that the soul of the Christian went to glory at death. I write this to show you what kind of preaching we have here. I want if possible to distribute books and tracts amongst them believing it will have its desired effect. You say in a previous issue of THE RESTITUTION, you want to evangelize your state, wanting to do it by distributing tracts. If you have any tracts you can spare for gratuitous distribution, please send them here as they are as much needed here as anywhere in the world. If you have any small reward books for children, please send me a sample with prices I think I am now in a position to make some changes. I am appointed as Superintendent of our Sabbath School, there has not been any Sabbath School at this place for a long time, the different denominations all wanted a school after their own creed, therefore they could not agree. I organized on the first Sabbath in May a Nonsectarian Sabbath School, we commenced with 40 scholars and teachers, today have 65 scholars besides officers. If you publish any Lesson Leaves, please send me a copy with prices. I will close fearing I am trespassing on your valuable time. Yours in hope.

H. E. BEAUMONT.

[We recommend to Bro. Beaumont the Bible Lessons now running in THE RESTITUTION.]

"So Precious."

A beautiful answer was once given by a little girl in one of the London Homes for Destitute. The question was asked, why Jesus was called an "unspeakable gift." There was silence for awhile, and then with trembling voice this dear child said, "Because he is so precious that no one can tell all his preciousness."

BUZZELL.—At Osseo, Trempealeau Co., Wis., July 8th, 1887, Brother Curtis Buzzell, aged 36 years.

Brother Buzzell was converted the winter of 1870 under the labors of Eldors W. B. Putnam and G. W. Turner and was baptized the following spring. He was a consistent follower of Christ during the seventeen years of his Christian experience, and in all those subsequent years was a firm believer in the coming of Christ to raise the dead and reign with his people on the redeemed earth. Curtis was a son of Elder William M. and Mary Buzzell, who survive their son. They with his sorrowing wife and two sisters are comforted by the gospel hope of soon meeting each other in the kingdom of God. He leaves two children, a daughter aged ten and a son aged four years. ELDER RUFUS SNOW.

Take Your Choice.

On Wednesday, July 20th, the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railway will run a special excursion train to Warsaw, Eagle Lake and Lake Side Park, at very low rates for the round trip.

The distinguished Revivalist, Rev. Sam Jones, will preach one of his famous sermons at Lake Side Park on on the day of the excursion.

There resorts afford various facilities for spending a pleasant day. For time of trains and rates of fare, see small bills.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Paddegall, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

"THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME."

I am thinking tonight of a better home,
A home awaiting so far away.
A glimmer of the dawning light I see.
The coming of a brighter day,
When all who love and serve Him here,
Will find a surcease heavenly rest,
Fair Eden aglow with blooming bowers.
The royal home of all the blest.

Oh the rapturous thought of the many joys
That we may find awaiting there,
Will bear the peace of a mighty love,
And help the struggle light to bear.
Thorns will abound in the rose's bed,
Thus with the sin upon us here,
We pray for strength to triumph win,
That we the glory there may share.

Oh a hope in the real—for the time to flourish,
May our light so shining be,
That we who await the Christian's home,
May cherish ever to will lingly,
A better thought for all weary-hard ones.
The pilgrim of mercy bids them come;
Oh why not listen to the Saviour call,
And ever say, "Thy will be done."

The dear ones that have gone before
Will all awake to hear his voice,
The visions of the heavenly home
Will make the waiting ones rejoice.
The home over there—the beautiful home.
The city that cometh from above.
Will enlighten earth through every clime,
"T is the Savior's home, a home of love.

"AWAKE! AWAKE."

"Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion! put on thy beautiful garments O Jerusalem, the holy city: for hence forth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise sit down O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord, ye have sold your selves for nought, and ye shall be redeemed without money." Isa. lii.

This is the invocation of Zion's Redeemer in view of what he had determined to do for her. She had acted foolishly. She sold herself for nought and he assured her that she shall be redeemed without mercy. She was now wearing the garments of her master to whom she sold herself, but he invites her to awake from the stupor of her folly and put on the strength or the garments of strength instead of those of a degraded captive. She was still the holy city in his estimation although degraded by her folly. She was still able to cast off her captivity and rise to the state of royalty which he conferred upon her. The garments of his royal priesthood were still in readiness to be put on even by a miserable prostrate captive. She however is asleep and unconscious of the favor which the gracious Redeemer had devised for her deliverance. He therefore comes to rouse her into consciousness of her folly, and to a sense of the good things he had provided for her. She had sold herself for nought to the unclean, and put on his filthy rags. She was no more worthy to be called his daughter. But he did not act so towards her for he provided for her garments of strength, and beauty, and had determined that no more henceforth would she be a miserable foolish captive. But she must first awake. Sleep is a state of rest after labor. She had labored as a degraded captive, and had fallen asleep from exhaustion. She is without strength, or is unconscious of having it.

The strength she had was small. She put it off when she turned away from her creator, for he was her strength. But he was still by her although cast off. He had not cast her off. He brought near to her his righteousness. It was not far off. She was wearied, and heavy laden, and worn out. She had come to feel the way of transgressors is hard. She sank into sleep saying, there is no hope for me in God, I have loved strangers and after them I will go. Her Lord however knows better, and therefore he invokes her to awake out of her stupor to put on her strength. His invocation is a mockery if she be incapable of awaking and of putting on the strength. Jerusalem also is invoked to put on her beautiful garments. This shows that these garments were not in use although she was the holy city. She was naked and repulsive to the eyes. She is not simply capable of putting on more strength; but also of being more beautiful. Her Lord who made her, knows her capacity for strength and beauty, better than herself. He knows also her capacity for the enjoyment she is losing by her refusal to use the strength and beauty he has given to her. The first result to her after she awakes, and shakes herself clear of the dust, loosens herself from the bands of her neck, and puts on her beautiful garments is the consciousness that she is strong, and beautiful, and her power to inspire all who would seek to come into her with the same consciousness, so that the uncircumcised, and the unclean, shall no more seek to enter into her. Her own strength, and the beauty of her garments are the cleansing and repelling powers to guard her from the approach of the unclean.

It is manifest therefore that all these separate actions which she is invited to do, must be done by herself when she hears her Lord's call to do so. She has therefore the power to awake when called, to put on her strength whatever that strength may be. Jerusalem has beautiful garments ready to put on when called to do so and she can put these on. She can shake herself from the dust, she can arise and then sit down. She can loose herself from the bands of her neck. All these separate things she can do as easily as she sold herself to do every act which brought her down to her present state of lying in the dust. No one else can awake instead of her, she personally must awake, or remain forever asleep. No one else can put on her strength instead of her, she must put it in her own self, and on herself. Jerusalem must also put on her beautiful garments. No one can do that for her, nor instead of her. She must put on herself, her own garments and wear them. She must arise and shake herself from the dust. No one else is invited to do it for her, nor instead of her, she alone can do it. She alone is able to loose herself from the bands of her neck, and must do it or remain in bondage.

While therefore it is true that the daughter of Zion and that Jerusalem can do all these things for themselves, and must do them or perish, it is also true that they cannot call upon themselves to awake, nor to do any of the actions which their Lord has invited them to do. Neither are they called upon to do any of the things which he has affirmed he will do for them. The line between them and their Lord clearly defines what he will do for them. This part he will attend to whether they will believe he will or not, as he will prove faithful to himself as the apostle says, "If we believe not yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself." This position to has been chosen of his own free favor. "Ye, says he, have sold yourselves for nought, and ye shall be redeemed without money." As there are two parties to the sale so there are two in every case of the Redemption. They sold themselves to the service of their own lusts, and nothing stood between them and the wages which is death. If there had been no lust or device there could not have been subjection to it. Again, if there had been no decree on the part of the Spirit to redeem them from the lust of the flesh and bring them into obedience to himself, he never would have uttered the words, "Ye shall be redeemed without money." The sale of themselves was their own act, so is like manner the purchase of them back to himself was his act altogether independent of their choice. They having sold themselves to disobedience, they were bound to receive the wages and he having bound himself to redeem them he was bound by his own word to perform the redeeming act, namely to give up the price as freely to the will of men. The giving up of the price completes the transaction. Henceforth these forwhom the price is given are the purchased property of the buyer. The witnesses to the fact that the price has been paid over or given by the redeemer of purchaser are witnesses to a complete transaction. Eye witnesses have simply to declare what they have seen with their eyes. They bear witness to the act of other persons, not their own. The witnesses to the death of a just man by the hands of an unjust man, upon a charge that was not true are the witnesses that a righteous man suffered death in obedience to the will of God. The rejection of the testimony of these simply places the rejector of one who does not accept their testimony, and as a matter of course where he cannot get any benefit from the things they declare they saw with their eyes, but the rejector says they did not. Zion and Jerusalem have until this day rejected the testimony of Jehovah their God, and the witnesses he chose to send to them, and hence although he has laid the foundation for their redemption, they have despised and rejected the evidences of what he has done. Hence they are still lying in filth and nakedness, for despising the reason which he has given, and the rejection of his chosen witnesses, sealed their testimony with their blood. The Lord Jesus was the sealed ransom of Jehovah. This he proved by many deeds which could not be denied by those who despised. His chosen witnesses also performed through his name many deeds of healing which were beyond the power of their persecutors to deny. They refused to arise and shine although the light came to them. Let us of the Gentiles beware lest we also fall after the same manner of unbelief, and lose the results of Jehovah's act of favor towards us. For Jesus gave his life a ransom for us as well as for them.

W. ELLIS.

Asleep in Jesus.

Samuel J. Anderson one of the oldest settlers of Miama Co., Ind., fell asleep in Jesus, at his residence in Washington Township, seven miles south of Peru, Sunday morning, June 26, 1887, of typhoid fever, after an illness of four weeks, at the age of 64 years, 4 months and 28 days. He came to Miami County fifty years ago and had ever since been one of its best citizens. He was an honest man and by an upright life gained a foremost place in the esteem and respect of his friends and acquaintances.

He was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, January 29, 1824, and was married to Celia F. Roberts, Dec. 22, 1853. He joined the Christian or Campbellite church at an early day, in which he lived a consistent member. About twenty-five years ago when Brother Jacob Sheller and Brother J. F. Wagoner preached in his neighborhood, he began to see more light, and after a careful study he was baptized into the Christ of the Bible and united himself with the Church of God, on Eel River, in which he was a faithful member until death.

While I was back in Indiana I paid him a visit and staid three nights with him. He was sick then but was reconciled to his fate. We all expected his death at most any time, and after I got home to Kansas I received a letter from Sister Anderson. I will give you a portion in her own language:

"I will tell you the sad news of our loss. For four weeks he lay but did not suffer so very much. That is one thing I feel thankful to our Heavenly Father for, he was so patient, never worried about anything, spoke as if he was doubtful about his getting well, felt as if he was getting weaker all the time, but seemed perfectly resigned to his fate. Of one thing I assure you, he was strong in the faith of the soon-coming King. Ever since we laid away our dear son, he seemed to have no particular desire to remain here, until since we had the care of those little orphans. He sometimes spoke as if he would like to see them raised. He said at one time, it was hard to leave his babies. He thought of them every day. Oh, the loss we so deeply feel. He was so much needed at this time. I do not know how often we had the pleasure to go to conference; Emma's sickness prevented twice, and you know what prevented this year. We wanted you to preach the funeral sermon. Cunningham went over to the station to send a telegram to you, but as you said in your letter you would be in the southern part of the State, said you was too far away and could not reach here in time. We do ask you to remember us in your prayers that we may be able to bear our sorrows. We had one doctor from Logansport eight times besides two doctors here. But the Lord's will be done. I want you to write an obituary for THE RESTITUTION, as he was a life-long subscriber to the paper."

Now dear sister and dear children, you have followed your husband and father to the cold and silent grave, laid him into his quiet and silent house (Job xvii. 13, 14) to rest till Jesus comes to wake him up at the last trumpet. 1 Cor. xv. 50 to end of chapter. Dear sister, you have had sorrow upon sorrow. First your dear son had to go, and then your son-in-law, poor Emma's husband, had to be killed by a cowardly wretch. David Condo was the son-in-law of Brother Samuel. I would not wonder very much if that did not have something to do with the death of your dear husband. Those are the poor orphan children left in the care of Brother and Sister Anderson and Emma, the widow of D. Condo.

Brother Anderson left a wife and two daughters to mourn the loss of their husband and father. But they need not mourn as those that have no hope, 1 Thess. iv. 13 to end.

Now dear children get into the faith of the gospel that your father and mother have been walking in, and your father died in, eternal life through Christ, not through Adam the first. And we must seek for it, Rom. ii. 6, 7, 8, and put it on at the sounding of the last trump. 1 Cor. xv. on to end of chapter. Brother Anderson leaves a host of friends, and six brothers, if I am not mistaken. All sympathize and mourn with Sister and the children.

Now dear brethren one more of our number is gone; by him let us take warning that we too must go, and perhaps our turn will come next. Let us try to so live that whether we shall be awake or asleep that we may meet with our dear brother who was laid away by the fey hand of death, and also with our blessed Jesus who was once dead but now alive and holds the keys of death and hell. Rev. iii. 18, 19. I have been acquainted with Brother and Sister Anderson; they were always kind to all. Their house was ever open to Jesus and his friends; and while the neighbors miss him none will miss him as does Sister Anderson and the dear children. We will close by singing

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.

At last asleep in Jesus, soon to rise,
When the last trumpet shall rend the skies,
Then burst the fetters of the tomb,
To wake in full immortal bloom.

"O death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord. Yours in hope of the soon coming of our Savior who is the resurrection and life.

JOHN FOORE.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

THE EASTERN QUESTION

In its various phases,—Assyrian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of the book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 640 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $3.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $5.00.

DR. SMITH'S BIBLE DICTIONARY.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 768 pages, price $1.50.

THE COMING AGE,

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

"THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."—No. 13.

THE KINGDOM AND THE PARABLES.

The last paper of this series, (No. 12) was devoted to the Parable of the Mustard Seed producing a great tree. We come now to consider the next parable in Matt. xiii. namely, that of the Leaven and the Meal—"The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." I contended that the mustard seed growing to a great tree signified simply "growth from small to great—quantity irrespective of quality," mentioning that "the idea of deterioration in quality" had been imported into it, and that mainly from the parable of the Leaven and Meal; and confining the application of both to the present dispensation. As this idea has been mainly derived from this parable of the Leaven it becomes necessary to examine the argument upon which it is rested somewhat carefully, so as to enable the reader to judge on which side the truth is to be found.

Let it be kept in mind as before mentioned that the five parables following that of the Tares and Wheat, are left without explanation, and that we are thus left at liberty "to guess as best we may from the fitness of things, as derived from the plainer teachings of Scripture, what that explanation is and especially as to whether there is anything in any of these parables to warrant the idea that the kingdom is the church."

I need scarcely do more than mention that the current view of this parable is that the effect of leaven in fermenting, and raising dough described in the parable, is intended to signify the influence of the church—that is the kingdom of Heaven—upon the world at large in the present dispensation, in converting it to God and so producing that millennial blessedness predicted in the Scriptures. I presume that enough has been advanced to show the untenableness of this side. In principle it stands on the same footing with that already referred to, only substituting amelioration for deterioration, and this from the view that each party happens to take of the character of the "leaven." I hope to show that while there is a measure of truth underlying both views, most, however, as regards the ameliorative view, they both fail to harmonize with plain Scripture teaching on the subject.

Judging naturally, from what we know of the process of making leavened bread, there seems to be no good reason to suppose that strictly speaking there is involved anything beyond an influence which may be described as penetrative, diffusive alterative and irrespective of anything either good or evil in the character of the result. We might even go a step farther and affirm that from what we know of bread in general that there is nothing physiologically evil but rather the contrary in the quality of bread that is made from leaven. Anything employed in producing leavening or fermentation, is said to be dissipated in the process of baking or firing to which the dough is subjected before it becomes bread.

But it is now time to look at the arguments employed to maintain the view of deterioration referred to. Mr. Newton, formerly quoted, says on this parable—"As regards the parable of the woman spreading leaven, we cannot suppose that there is inconsistency in the manner in which Scripture employs its emblems. In every other place throughout the Bible, leaven, whenever mentioned, is always used to indicate corruption. It would be strange therefore if, in this passage it should represent the diffusive power of good." Mr. T. Smith whose "Lecture on Prophecy" have been already quoted, says "Leaven, everywhere else in the Scriptures, mean something evil. We read of 'the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy,' of 'the leaven of malice and wickedness' of 'the old leaven' which must be 'purged out'.... In twenty places we have mention of leaven and it always denotes evil. In the sacrifices of old it always was typical of evil. Therefore the paschal bread—pure type of Christ the holy bread of God—might not be leavened."

This doubtless looks very strong. But it is more in appearance than in reality; for it lacks what it claims, namely, a basis of fact. It is simply not true that "in the sacrifices of old it (leaven) always was typical of evil," as affirmed by Mr. T. Smith. I shall now note some other points in his statements.

1. He gives no evidence that any prohibition against leaven in connection with Jewish sacrifices, or in its use as an ingredient in food, was given because it was in itself evil.

2. Although the reason of its prohibition is plainly and frequently given, he does not once mention that reason.

3. While several instances of its use to illustrate the influence of evil occur in the New Testament, there is no evidence that such use exclusively belongs to it.

Let us now inquire as to the facts of the case concerning leaven as found in the law of Moses.

The Israelites were in the habit of always preparing their bread by means of leaven, both in Egypt and in their own land. The evidence of this is found in two facts.

First; they were driven out of Egypt in haste, and each family on the eve of their departure had to prepare a lamb by roasting (to save time) and had for the same reason, to use unleavened bread. (See the directions for this in Ex. xii. 8, 9), the manner of eating thus followed, "And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the Lord's Passover," (verse 11). When they left it is stated that "the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders.... and they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual," (verses 34 and 39). That is, their "preparation" of "victual" had been prevented by their not having sufficient time to leaven their dough. This habit of time was caused by Pharaoh having at length yielded to the severity of the tenth plague—namely, the destruction of the firstborn, and, as had been foretold, he thrust them out. The following extract will show this clearly:—"It came to pass, that at midnight the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on the throne unto the firstborn of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the firstborn of cattle. And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt; for there was not a house where there was not one dead. And he called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel; and go, serve the Lord, as ye have said. Also take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and begone; and bless me also. And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, We be all dead men. And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading-troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders. And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses"

This is offered as conclusive evidence of the constant usage of the people up to the time of leaving Egypt, namely, to eat leavened bread.

Second—after leaving Egypt, the only interference with this usage that we read of was during seven days at the yearly observance of the feast of the Passover; during which they were forbidden to make use of leaven, in any form, or even to have any remains of it in their houses or domestic utensils. With this exception the Israelites were at perfect liberty to use, as an ordinary article of food, the kind of bread they had been accustomed to in Egypt. We find no prohibition against the ordinary use of leavened bread except the above exceptional instance.

We come now to examine more closely the allegation that "in every other place throughout the Bible, leaven, whenever mentioned, is always used to indicate corruption;" and again, that "in the sacrifices of old it always was typical of evil." Keeping in mind what I have already advanced regarding the former statement, I would now specially cite the Scripture testimony not only permitting, but commanding the offering of "leavened bread" in the Divine service. In Leviticus xxiii., it is intimated (verse 2) "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Then follow directions as to (1). The Passover; (2) the feast of First Fruits or Harvest (Pentecost) and (3) the Feast of Tabernacles or Ingathering. At these feasts all the male Israelites had to attend once a year. Regarding the first, as has already been stated, no leaven was to be used, and it was even termed "the feast of unleavened bread." Regarding the third, no mention is made of bread or cakes of any kind. But regarding the second it is positively and clearly enjoined that "leavened bread" shall be offered, and that as a "sweet savor" and to the "holy Lord." As the matter is of some importance I quote the portion relating to this feast:—"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest: and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it. And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf an he lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt offering unto the Lord. And the meat offering thereof shall be two-tenth deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet savor: and the drink offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the selfsame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete: Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two-tenths deals; they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the firstfruits unto the Lord. And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt offering unto the Lord, with their meat offering, and their drink offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savor unto the Lord. Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace offerings. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest. And ye shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you; ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations." (Lev. xxiii. 9-21).

It might be mentioned here that Dr. Jennings (in Jewish Antiquities) states that "the reason of the injunction to eat the paschal lamb with unleavened bread was partly to remind them of the hardships they had sustained in Egypt, unleavened bread being more heavy and less palatable than leavened bread; and it is therefore called the 'bread of affliction' (Deut. xvi. 3); and partly to commemorate the speed of their deliverance or departure from thence, which was such that they had not sufficient time to leaven their bread." And he afterwards quotes the Rabbies as saying that "the loaves offered at Pentecost (with leaven) were in behalf of the bread which they were ordinarily to eat."

From what has been advanced it is submitted that there is no evidence to show that leavened bread is either unwholesome as an article of ordinary food, or entirely excluded from the offerings under the Mosaic law. On the contrary it was in constant use by the people of Israel both in Egypt and in their own land, with the the single exception of seven days in each year, at the feast of the Passover. And the offering of it was expressly enjoined once a year at the feast of firstfruits. The most probable reason why leaven came to be generally associated with evil is the sacred character with which unleavened bread was invested, in virtue of its having been associated with the greatest festival of the nation, by which the most important event in their history was celebrated, and especially in view of the strict manner in which for seven days in the year every vestige of leaven was purged from their dwellings. But it is clear that this exceptional prohibition of leaven affords no reasonable ground for the theory which is sought to be reared on it.

Having noted these points I would now direct attention to some positive reasons why, in the parable in question, the action of leaven is used to represent the diffusive influence of good, rather than of evil.

First. Because it is used by our Lord himself here to represent the influence of "the kingdom of heaven." Until it be conclusively shown that the kingdom of heaven "signifies the church there is little use in trying to show that leaven is an evil thing. It is at once admitted that the corruption of the professing church was foretold by the Apostles; and if our Lord had given a parable comparing the professing church to the action of leaven in meal, we need to be at no loss to adopt the reasoning of our friend. Such however, not being the case, we must decline to place any reliance in such a mode of reasoning.

Second. Because the kingdom of heaven when it shall be "set up" by our Lord at his Second Appearing shall amply fulfil the diffusive and ameliorative properties of the leaven in the meal, in its influence on the world at large. The "righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit" which form the grand features of the kingdom of God; shall permeate the entire population of the earth; for no one who receives the Scriptures as the word of God can doubt the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples shall be fully answered—"Thy Kingdom Come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

The relation of Israel, Zion and Jerusalem to the other nations is here set forth as that of a medium of a blessing. It is the house (or temple) of the God of Jacob which becomes the centre of law, instruction and worship, to all peoples. It is thus that "Salvation is of the Jews" in a national as well as in an individual sense. From restored and regenerated Israel there radiates a diffusive and ameliorative influence, which, like the leaven in the meal, transforming the whole mass into a batch of wholesome dough, brings about the blessedness of the nations, promised to "the father of the faithful."

GOD IN SUMMER.

The pious mind recognises God in all the forms and appearances of nature, in the regions above, and on the earth beneath. All the variety of existence is the work of his hand,—a revelation of his wonderful being in its complexity of attributes. The heavens declare his glory and so does this earth in its products and seasons and changes. The Psalmist says of him, "Thou hast made summer," and is it not pitiful to think that any intelligent child of his should be so insensate as to behold the delightful period through which we are now travelling without ascending in adoring reflection to the Creator who surrounds us with such countless charms and indications of his wonder-working power. Of course, when he makes summer, and other seasons, there is no immediate interposition on his part for the production of the grand result. The movement of the globe on its axis, and in its relation to the orb which is our fountain of light and warmth, accomplishes the design, bringing to our land in the passing months, as for the first time, a flood of sunshine and a welcome diffusion of heat. These in their turn evolve, by help of genial showers, the wealth of green leaves, and the gem-like blossoms on plants and shrubs and trees, till a paradise bursts into view for our refreshment and joy. What we see now has already presented itself along thousands of years; and under all, and guiding all, adorning all by the noiseless action of undeviating laws, lies, as the stay and strength of the whole panorama, the invisible forces—the Divine, eternal essence, which is the life of all life, and the resistless factor in every transformation.

As we look upon one of the famous pictures that enchant the world, we are moved to exclaim, what a genius he had who wrought out this exuberance of beauty, this assemblage of great and expressive figures! We never dream that the wonders on the canvas formed themselves by chance. We assume at once that a gifted mind drew the lines and laid on the colors which impress us with unwearied admiration. And so it well may be with us as we look abroad on a summer scene, and inhale its sweetness, and count up its promised blessings advancing towards maturity in the sunshine of glorious days. God is here! How astonishing is his skill, and what pleasure he provides for his human offspring, in the sky above with its cloudy isles and mountains, and in the fields and forest stretching far and wide beneath the canopy they form! And yet, according to many in this age of intellectual pride and audacious unbelief, "God remains the Great Unknown, pavilioned in impenetrable darkness, withdrawn in eternal silence." "Unknown!" with all this excess of beauty and goodness; in "darkness!" when myriads of suns blaze on us by his fiat; in "silence!" when the rich emblems of his infinite mind are uttering, though it may be without a ripple of sound, the sublimity of his Name and the vastness of his love for man. True, no audible voice may reach mortal sense; but surely it cannot be forgotten that in many ways, by looks and movements and deeds, man is revealed to man without one syllable passing from lip to ear. It is thus with the Lord of the universe, he abides in silence, but the tokens of his presence are innumerable, and to the serious and docile they need no interpreter. By all who are content with signs, forth-shadowings, refulgent symbols, what the ancient singer delivered is found to be substantially true, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge."

It will be remembered that after the Deluge, recorded in Genesis, God made this gracious promise, fittingly to be remembered at this time: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest ...and summer and winter shall... not cease." And has not the good Lord kept his pledge? It is more than 4,000 years since the promise was delivered, and as we write, and as the reader's eye scans these lines, his faithfulness is once more being demonstrated in our common view. Summer becomes in this way a revealer of God. After thousands of such fulfilments, may we not confide in his faithfulness without a suspicion and without a fear? Yes, he is the ever-true and the ever-kind. Men may forget him, but he continues his watchfulness over them; men may deny his existence, but in numberless ways he endeavors to win the homage of their intellect and heart; men may withhold confidence from him, but he brings on another seedtime and another "summer," and in a tender appeal beseeches them to consider if He is not a Father in whom they may centre all their trust, and all their love, and all their devotion.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 27, 1887. NO. 28.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months thereafter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." And as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous; and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as preparatory steps to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The testimony of the apostle John is very full and strong. Again a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even till now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." 1 John ii. 8. "Beloved let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." John xl. 8, 9, 11. "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil. Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." John iii. 10, 11. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." John iv. 20, 21. "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." 1 John iv. 17. "And now little children abide in him, that when he shall appear we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John ii. 28. "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love." "This is my commandment that ye love one another as I have loved you." John xv. 10. If we desire to abide in the love of Christ we must obey this new law of love.

This law, so clearly and fully revealed by Jesus and his apostles, makes it our solemn duty to do all we can to promote Christian fellowship and love and to remove all hindrances that prevent obedience to the law of fellowship and love commanded. Union, among those who are earnestly looking for the glorious second appearing, for the salvation of all the dead and living saints and the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, is immensely important not only to convince the world that God sent Jesus the first time, but that he will send him the second time to accomplish the great redemption that he purchased with his own blood when he died on the cross. For this union Jesus prayed. Union is essential to brotherly love. Its opposite, division, is condemned by Christ and the apostles and directly calculated to destroy brotherly love and promote brotherly hate, and John says, "he that hateth his brother is a murderer."

In union there is strength. In division there is weakness. All can see the great advantages to the world and the church of obedience to the law of love and the fellowship of the saints. The churches that are modeled and not in order as the apostolic churches were, are independent bodies and should not be governed by general assemblies and conferences, they should break down the walls that divide them and be one in proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom and stand united on the broad platform of the prophets and apostles and Christ the chief corner stone, casting out the many man-made creeds, and take instead "the sword of the spirit" which is the word of God as their only sure weapon and guide. We should follow no teacher or leader but Christ, not even an apostle or patriarch if they should divide us into conflicting parties. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains and have not love, I am nothing." 1 Cor. xiii. 1.

So far as national conferences are concerned, or general assemblies, they have furnished an opportunity for a few ambitious men to exert a controlling influence over the churches below them and "lord it over God's heritage." Mr. Finney said some years ago, that every time the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church met there was a "jubilee in hell" on account of their quarrels over "new and old school" doctrines. Human nature remains about the same. We find no trace of great national organizations in the New Testament; it was left for the apostasy and the "man of sin" to create them after the purity of the primitive church had departed. Paul declares, "ye have come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the New Jerusalem and to an innumerable company of angels. To the general assembly and church of the first born which are written in heaven and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits (spiritual bodies) of the just men made perfect." I desire to belong to that "general assembly." We have come much nearer to it than they. E. HOYT.

THE lull in the strife among the nations regarding the great questions of the day, is most probably only the awful calm before the earthquake. The pent-up forces are by no means dissipated. The clouds are gathering and thickening for the final tempest. Watch and pray.

THE WEAPONS OF WAR.

Prophecy indicates that this age will close up amid scenes of most destructive war. It speaks of the hosts innumerable, and of the "weapons of war" with which the millions will be armed. In these days of preparation for those dreadful scenes, foretold by the ancient seers, the energies of the world are taxed and strained to muster, arm and equip the mighty men of war for the final conflict. O what harvests of death will be reaped on the sanguinary fields of that "war of the great day of God Almighty." We clip the following from one of the latest papers:

FRANCE'S WONDERFUL NEW RIFLE.

The Lebel rifle, the new arm with which the French infantry will be supplied before next spring, is, according to all accounts, a wonder, and several models of the gun which have been received here have excited great interest. The new rifle is known by the name of its inventor, Lebel, and is smaller and lighter than the rifles now in use; the French soldiers call it "the little gun." The most authentic descriptions given of the gun agree in attributing to it a carrying power beyond that of any rifle heretofore in use. The models received in New York are not known to be accurate copies of the Lebel gun, and experiments with them are impossible, owing to the fact that the powder used is a secret compound of which the French Government has the monopoly.

According to all accounts the Lebel gun will carry its bullet more than a mile and a half, and with a more certain aim than has been possible with ordinary rifles. The bore of the gun is very small, and the ball, which is of steel and sharply pointed at one end, is said to revolve at a speed of a thousand revolutions a second. In tests made by the French Government this bullet has penetrated a brick wall eight inches thick at a distance of 500 yards; it will go through any kind of armor which can be worn by soldiers, and at a distance of more than a mile will pass through a man as easily as at ten paces. The gun has no recoil under fire, and the powder gives out no smoke whatever. It has been said that the powder used must be a form of smokeless hunting powder already in the market; but this is denied by the inventor, who says that he uses an entirely new compound. The Lebel gun is, of course, a repeater, and the cartridges are so small that each soldier carries 220 rounds of ammunition, as against 116 rounds, formerly considered the maximum.

The French Government is now making at the rate of 500 a day at Saint Etienne, and is preparing to turn out double that number. Four factories, those at Chatellerault, Tulle and Saint-Etienne, will soon be at work upon them.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Union with the Son the Source of Spiritual Life.

"He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." 1 John v. 12.

What is life? What is the nature of life? This is a question which the wisest philosopher cannot answer. Scientists have long studied the subject, and made experiments upon it, but it baffles all their skill. It is something outside, something beyond, something above all their investigations. "Science," says one, "can tell us what it is not; it cannot tell us what it is. Science cannot grasp life, cannot understand what it is, cannot define it." There is a mystery about it which is not revealed, and this thing, therefore, cannot be expounded. Neither vegetable life nor animal life can be explained, that is, fully explained. They are both, in a great measure, mysterious in their nature and in their development. A seed is sown in the earth, it takes root, in a while we see the stem, or stalk, then the branches, then the buds, then the blossoms, then the fruit. There is life there, but who can explain it? A child is born: first comes the development of the animal nature, then the development of the intellectual nature; and how slow is the development. There too is life,—life in a higher form and of a nobler sort; but who can explain it? But there is a kind of life higher still. Christ offers to raise us to a higher plane than that of mere animal life; he offers to raise us to a life higher than intellectual life; he offers to raise us to a life which is spiritual and divine.

This life is the result of union with the Christ. "He that hath the Son hath the life." And this union relates not simply to the soul, or mind, but to the Spirit. The soul, or mind, may be alive when the spirit is dead, or dormant. In other words, there may be intellectual life where there is no spiritual life; but there cannot be spiritual life without a measure of intellectual life. It is a man's conscience, a man's heart, a man's affections that have to do with spiritual life. It is the spirit of man that is most like the nature of God, for "God is a Spirit;" and when the spirit is quickened by union with the Christ, or by the dwelling of Christ's Spirit with man's spirit, there is spiritual life. The believer has within him an unseen life,—the life of God. The Holy Ghost moves and rules within him. The light of heaven burns and shines in his soul. He is, in a sense, divinely inspired.

This new or regenerate life is the life which God originally designed man to live. Having been dead in sin, he is now as one alive from the dead. He has experienced a spiritual resurrection, and is brought into a new condition of things. He partakes of the Divine life, shares the Divine nature, and is taken into fellowship with Deity.

Spiritual life, if nourished and maintained, leads to eternal life, and is, indeed, the foretaste, the earnest, the promise, the pledge of eternal life. And it seems to be eternal life that the apostle in this place is speaking of; for the verse preceding the text reads thus: "And the witness is this, that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." Then follows the text, "He that hath the Son hath the life." The verse following the text also confirms this view: "These things have I written unto you, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, even unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God." It will be observed that the phrases used here are in the present tense, while eternal life, in the strict sense of the word, is yet future. But the Bible sometimes speaks of future things, on account of their certainty, having been promised by God, in language really applicable only to the present time. It does so in these passages. Eternal life to the believer is only a present gift in promise and foretaste. In Luke xviii. 30, Christ speaks of everlasting life as a gift to be bestowed in the world to come, or age to come. And the apostle, in Rom. ii. 7–10, teaches that it will be bestowed in the day of the Lord.

But though eternal life is the life mentioned in the text,—which however is only a present possession in promise, anticipation, and title,—we shall treat of spiritual life, which is a present possession in the absolute sense of the term, and which, if nourished and preserved, will lead to life eternal.

Addressing the Colossian believers, the apostle Paul says, "For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Col. iii. 3. That is, the life of self-ishness has been slain, and the true life, the divine life, has taken its place. And this new, spiritual life is secure in Christ. Christ is its source, and he will feed it, and protect it, and keep it.

Speaking of "Christian life being life in Christ," Maclaren says, "We surely do not reach the whole depth of such words when we regard them as a mere metaphor, or take them to imply nothing more than yielding our will and understanding to our Teacher. It is something much deeper than that. The indwelling is reciprocal, and its very nature, as well as its blessed results, implies the true divinity of that Lord who can enter human souls in all ages by a path that no finite creature can traverse.... and hide them in the depths of his own heart in an intimacy of which our closest friendships here are but pale shadows. They tell us that no two atoms ever touch; some film of air is ever between them. And after all sweetness of closest society there is a gap between the most loving souls. But we can be joined to Christ in real perfect union.... He is in us as the source of our being; we are in him as filled with his fulness. He is in us as all-communicative; we are in him all-receptive.... He is in us as the sap in the veins of the tree; we are in him as the branches."

In endeavoring to explain this union, H. W. Parkinson uses the following illustration,—an illustration very simple and yet very beautiful. After observing that "some parts of the New Testament speak of Christ being in us, and others of our being in Christ," and that "there is no contradiction in such diverse words," he says, "The flower is in the light and the light is in the flower, because they are the joint heirs of the common glory of the skies; so may we be in such intimate union with the Lord as to be joint-heirs with him." This joint-heirship is secured to every one who is in union with the Son.

SILAS HEIN.

The Adoption.

As some are inclined to ignore the plain, positive teaching of the Scriptures on this point and substituting opinions of their own, claiming that we are adopted at baptism, I thought perhaps a few Bible facts in relation to adoption might possibly be of use. In the first place the Bible nowhere says we are adopted at baptism, neither does it intimate any such thing. Shall we build a theory without a foundation and thereby contradict Paul in Rom. viii. 23, where he says, "even we ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body." It takes but little strain of the intellect to comprehend this. Shall we set aside the teaching of Paul here and take that of uninspired men? If this rule is adopted nothing that is contained between the lids of the Bible could be relied upon as positive. It is true the Diaglott says, "waiting for sonship," which amounts to the same thing, for we are not natural sons, and if we ever get to be real sons it has got to be by adoption, by being taken out of the Adamic nature and transferred to the divine nature, as Paul intimates in the foregoing quotation. I see no necessity for setting this Scripture aside and substituting the opinions of uninspired men in its place.

Again, Eph. i. 5, Paul says, "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself according to the good pleasure of his will." Here again adoption lies in the future. God does not adopt children and then lose a portion by the way while forming characters. But they are begotten by the word to a faith in the gospel baptism for the remission of sins. This confirms their faith then, if they walk in newness of life, and form a character worthy of adoption, they will be taken out of the Adamic nature and transferred to the divine at the time appointed of the Father. We are children here only by faith; see Gal. iii. 26; sons in prospect, as God often speaks of things that are not as though they were.

Again in Gal. iv. 4, 5, Paul says, "But when the fulness of the times was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." Here again it lies in the future; no discord.

Once more, Rom. viii., "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption (or sonship, Diag.) whereby we cry, Abba, Father," "for if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you." That is, make alive, transfer to the divine nature, the adoption of sons. There is nothing in the Scriptures of truth that in the least contradicts Paul in the plain and positive statements on this subject.

THE CRISIS; THE CONSECRATION.

One fact is obvious to us all who read God's Word with even ordinary care, viz.: "All these things must soon be dissolved;" Jesus soon will come. The world would soon destroy itself, if this increasing ratio of self-ruin is continued as at present. All visible forces—moral, social, religious, political and prophetical, conspire to say man's controversy with God is speedily to culminate in harmony with the divine prediction. The nations are to yield their temporary, usurped possession of this world, in the mental throes of the battle-day of God Almighty, and our immortal King of kings will take his rightful throne and reign forever.

But what have we to do at such a crisis? What does God's Word declare is the duty of the Bride of Christ at such a momentous period? We are to proclaim the solemn message in tears and in love, clothed with his grace and panoplied with his power. Yes, this we should surely do; but these qualifications of spirit and grace are just as essential to the proclamation, as the words which we employ to express the idea; as necessary to condemn the world, as Noah's works were to condemn the world that then was. The character we form through grace and love, at this time, is as essential to the message, to meet divine approval and condemn the world, as is hearty, sincere obedience to mere lip service, or the spirit to the empty letter.

"Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness? In all holy conduct and Godlikeness, is the idea. Indeed, this is potential, apostolical, and present truth—a supper question. What for supper?" "Meat in due season, of course." But what is it? Seeing this present state is about to be dissolved, what holy, godly men ought we to be in preparation of soul to be ready.

The great national conflict and Jesus' coming to close out the scene, is impending today. What shall we eat to strengthen us to meet it? Will mere verbiage do? Shall we cry the words over as a city crier vends his goods till all ears are accustomed to the sound, and we ourselves sense not the words we breathe? Not in that spirit, brethren, can we do our work to the approbation of heaven; but in all holy conduct and Godlikeness, in view of impending judgment. Here is true, Bible holiness taught—God's judgment people—and who is so blind as not to see that this admonition does not mean simply an ordinary passive holiness due at all times and places, simple profession of conversion or justification. No. Is it not a special plea for a special purpose: clean hands, pure hearts, holy lives, because of a most remarkable change, or crisis, demanding such preparation?

You know it is just this dear brethren; and love demands we regard the call. Peter is inspired here to paint this scene; and further on he says, after portraying the fiery ordeal of nature. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless." Here we are again in this same connection, requested, to be "diligent" (consecrated) for a reason: that ye may be found of him in peace." "What is required to insure peace, then, Lord? "Without spot and blemish," is the rule for this day.

Wherefore, in view of looking for these things, consecrate yourselves to God, and his abundant grace is just as able to cleanse away all spots, save from all sin, as to heal your hurt slightly. Purity, holiness, blamelessness, etc., are the same thought for our consecration and God's sanctification of ourselves to God. Paul, with Peter, James, John, Jude, the Prophets, and "that Prophet," Jesus, all give one voice. This culmination of all the probationary dispensations, this harvest, this maturity of redemption in its final triumph, its closing stroke, will find what the Gospel has premeditated from the first—purity, holiness, power, with that glorious Church Christ presents to himself spotless, blameless, robed in pure, white, ready, indeed, through grace, all ready at his coming. They are saved here before he comes, and saved, too, by the Gospel standard:—grace the agent, holiness the test, Jesus Christ the Judge. —L. E. Pendleton, in Herald of Life.

TWO CHRISTIAN RABBIS.

RABBI RABINOWITZ.

Rev. Dr. Saphir has forwarded to us another letter from Rabbi Rabinowitz, dated Kishineff, May 17, in which he says: The Lord's cause is daily increasing. Every Saturday many very earnest and very respectable Jews come to our place of worship to listen to the Gospel of Christ. Who would have predicted the time when Russian Jews would push each other for the sake of obtaining New Testaments from the hands of one of their own brethren who is preaching the gospel publicly? Who would have thought that night after night Jews would steal into a house in order to listen to the gospel of the Lord Jesus, with a view of obtaining through it life eternal? But "With God all things are possible."

During the Passover season one Jew sent ten roubles to be distributed among the poor of the congregation of the "children of the New Covenant," with the following remark: "Formerly, even when I earned thousands, I was unable to give any charity out of it; but since I received the New Testament from Mr. Rabinowitz, although I earn only hundreds, I can do it very easily, and it is with my whole heart that I give ten roubles for the sake of the Lord Jesus, who taught us to do good to all men. I trust that in the future he will enable me to assist my believing brethren according to my heart's desire." As far as I am aware, adds Mr. Rabinowitz, this is the first time that a Talmudical Jew has rendered assistance to his brethren who are believers in the Lord Christ.

Mr. Rabinowitz is very anxious that a new place of worship should be built as soon as possible. The present one (for which he pays £50 a year) is too small to hold the large number of those who come to listen to the gospel and to join the community. He is greatly in need also of Judeo-Polish and Russian New Testaments.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN'S WORK.

Rev. C. A. Schonberger, missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the gospel among the Jews, recently went to visit Rabbi Lichtenstein at Tapio-Szele. The visit at first appeared rather untimely, for the Rabbi's son, a young medical doctor, was on the brink of death; but this dark cloud of affliction only served the more clearly to show that the Rabbi is indeed taught by the Spirit of Christ.

In conversation, Rabbi Lichtenstein said that his aim in writing the pamphlets, thousands of which Mr. Schonberger has himself distributed among Jews, was to make the name of Jesus known and loved among them, and to impress them with his gospel as the Divine source of regeneration for Israel, as well as for the Gentiles. He spoke also of the trials he had to pass through because of his stand for the truth, telling how on one occasion he was visited by three Rabbis, who left nothing undone to make him recant, and how many of them, seeing their efforts were futile, asked privately for a New Testament, that he might see for himself what it was that could convince this old Rabbi of the truth of Christianity and make him so boldly confess Christ as the Messiah and Savior.

Mr. Schonberger was permitted to see the dying man, who said it had been his cherished hope to become the stay of his parents, especially after the publication of the pamphlets which so roused Jewish hatred against his father. He described how he himself, when practising at Pesth, was greatly troubled about these at first, and said it was not till he received his father's answer to a letter on the subject that his doubts were dispelled, and he was fully convinced that his father followed, not men, but a higher power, in raising his voice for Christ. Then Mr. Schonberger spoke to the dying young man of the love of the Savior, and his power to save, and left him greatly comforted. Two days after he died.

Mr. Schonberger, previous to his present appointment, had worked at Prague, where his labor was greatly blessed. Last year seventy-four Jews were admitted by baptism into the Christian Church in Vienna, and twelve of these were the direct fruit of the labors of Messrs. Schonberger and Weiss, his co-worker. The firstfruit of Mr. Schonberger's labors in connection with the British Society was Mr. Venetianer, one of the honored pastors in Trieste, and for eloquence a very prince of preachers, who reviewed the Rabbi Lichtenstein's pamphlet, 'My Testimony.'—Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

The Next Eclipse.

The total eclipse of the sun on August 18 will be remarkable on account of the length of the land line traversed by the shadow of the moon. In fact it will be many years before another eclipse will occur the path of which will be so continuously upon the land and so little upon the ocean. The shadow of the moon will strike the earth first at Berlin, early in the morning. It will pass eastwardly from this point and, traversing the entire width of Russia and Siberia, will reach the Sea of Japan a little south of Vladivostock. Trending southeastwardly the shadow track will pass across Hindo, the main island of Japan, in a line running from Niigata, upon the western coast, to Mito. The observers upon the streets of Tokio will be favored with a sight of the eclipse a little south of the line of totality. The giant shadow will rise and disappear from the surface of the earth at a point of nearly 1,000 miles east of Japan in the Pacific Ocean.

The total phase of the eclipse is not as long as astronomers would wish. The longest total eclipse which has been observed during the present century occupied a period of nearly six minutes. This was in India, some twenty years ago. The total phase of the present eclipse will last about four minutes at Lake Baikal, the most favorable point, with the sun at maximum altitude; while at most of the observing stations at either end of the line the length of the total phase will occupy from three and a quarter to three and a half minutes.

The Papacy in Prophecy.

Papists are expressly foretold in Scripture, and described by their chief doctrines:—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith,....forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats" (1 Tim. iv. 1–3).

Here is an interesting prophecy, plainly set down in your Bible. It distinctly foretells that in the latter times, "some" (not all) would depart from the faith; and it describes these false teachers by two prominent signs or marks. Notice them well. Don't forget them!—(1) Forbidding to marry; (2) Commanding to abstain from meats.

These are the two marks, and they happen to be "Chief Commandments" of the Romish Church. Their Catechism says, "Which are the Chief Commandments of the Church?" and it answers. "Not to marry at the forbidden times," and "To abstain from flesh-meat on all Fridays."

Here is a startling agreement. How do you account for it? Observe: not only are both the precepts exactly matched (almost word for word, too, with the prophecy), but also, they are "chief" or principal commandments in the Church of Rome. Is this merely an accidental hit on the part of the prophecy, or was it intended? Proceed to another point. Branded in their breasts. The Roman Breviary, translated into English by our present Marquis of Bute, says, on p. 1233: Saint Jerome Francis branded on her chest with a hot iron; "not to marry." Why, here is a third mark of the apostasy: Branded in their breast, or conscience with a hot iron. You can read in verse 2: "Having their consciences seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry."

How literally this is fulfilled. It is carried out (so to speak) to the very letter. Ah! but you may say, "The breast does not answer to conscience." Indeed! then how comes it that a person is told to make a clean breast of it, when they urge him to unburden his conscience? Well, you may object, that is merely an accidental coincidence. Most astonishing things these "accidents," to be sure! You are aware, however, perhaps, that all nuns, friars, bishops, priests and deacons in the Church of Rome are strictly forbidden to marry. Their Council of Trent gives it straight and unflinchingly, "If any shall say that such may marry, let him be accursed." And again it declares, "that the clergy may not marry, and that marriage to them is pollution." (Sess. xxiv.) Now, it is a striking fact (yet only another "accident," of course) that the prophecy has, immediately previous to it, a beautiful discourse on the marriage of the clergy. You can read it in chap. 3: "A bishop should be the husband of one wife. Let deacons be the husbands of one wife," etc., etc. Observe: it says, "Let them"—that is, don't hinder them, don't forbid them. Then it follows up this discourse on the wife-ing of bishops by the prophecy, that "Some would come, forbidding to marry." Yes, they shall depart from the faith in latter times. How beautifully the prophet foretold this practice of latter times which the Spirit of God said would creep in! Now the Roman Breviary admits that this is the approved discipline of the Romish Church. It says (p. 1134), "The Archbishop of Magdeburg was a strong upholder of the discipline of the Church, especially contending against the marriage of the clergy." Observe! the identical thing that the prophecy expressly foretold. — Protestant Times (London.)

Delitzsch's Hebrew translation of the New Testament continues to be a wonderful missionary agency. It has now found its way to the Jews of Siberia, and has seemingly entered there also on its mission conquering and to conquer, as it has done in the eastern provinces of European Russia, where no less than 30,000 copies of the work have been scattered among the Jewish people. The Jews of Siberia are reading the translation with avidity, and a movement has been inaugurated among them that much resembles that in Kischneff, in Bessarabia. These Jews are but little acquainted with the Talmud, and are for this reason, thought to be more open to gospel influences. The Testaments are sold and are distributed from the city of Tomsk.

Walking with God.

"And Enoch walked with God three hundred years."—Gen. v. 22.

I have always had a taste for lingering in graveyards and spelling out the inscriptions on gravestones and monuments. And when I have met one that ascribed the highest virtues to him whose memory it penetrates, I have said, If I only knew all this is true. But perhaps the character was the very reverse of that here given.

But I have selected an inscription to one who lived far back in the twilight of the world's history, brief, comprehensive, most honorable, and we know it is true. It was written by an unerring pen. And it contains almost all we know of the subject of it. He walked with God. But that little is enough. The most labored and extended inscription could add nothing to it. Oh, blessed, thrice blessed, the man over whose grave could be written, with truth, the words, He walked with God. It matters not whether he was rich or poor, his home a hovel or a palace, whether he was a ruler or a humble subject in a great kingdom,—enough that he walked with God. But what is it to walk with God? One feature out of many of this companionship I would develop.

It implies a consciousness, an habitual consciousness, of God's presence. Walking with a friend, you feel his presence. But can one be always thinking of God? Amidst the busy and absorbing cares of life, can God always be in his thoughts? Perhaps not. Certainly not. Well, can I be conscious of the presence of one of whom I am not thinking? If not, there must be long seasons every day in which I am not conscious of God's presence. But is it certain I cannot carry the consciousness of God's presence into busiest cares of the day, and down deep in my heart beneath its intensest thought, feel that presence? I believe this is possible.

I have seen a little child occupied with his toys in one corner of a large sitting-room while the mother is busy with her needle in a distant part of the same room. The child is not thinking of his mother. He is absorbed in his play. But the child, though he neither sees nor thinks of the mother, feels her presence. How do I know?

Let the mother, noiselessly and unperceived by the child, pass out of the room. And when the child, turning from his toys, looks for her and does not see her, his tears and sobs will soon reveal that he had all the while felt her presence. He did not think of her, he did not see her, but he felt she was there.

So it seems to me may the child of God, however busy and absorbed, carry all along the journey of life the feeling of the Father's presence. And when this becomes habitual, he does indeed walk with God. There is such a life, and many a saint since Enoch has lived it. Is it not, must it not be, a blessed life? Walking with God here, and then, when the earthly walk ceases, going to be forever with him!—Wm. Lawson, D. D.

Rev. John Wilkinson, sometimes called "the Jew's man" because of his interest in the welfare of Israel, regards London as the finest mission station in the world, inasmuch as Jews are constantly passing through it to all parts. With the help of a gift of £3,000 he has been enabled to purchase 100,000 New Testaments, in Hebrew, which are being distributed by missionaries in Europe and the north of Africa. Over 3,000 of these Testaments were recently sent to as many Jewish Rabbis on the Continent; and with the examples of Rabinowitz and Lichtenstein, both aroused and converted by the reading of the New Testament, it requires no extraordinary faith to pray for a pentecostal blessing, in the awakening of many sons of Abraham through this work.

Outward duties may be done to God when there is inward prevailing love to self, to sin, and to the world. It is not so much the matter as the manner of your duties that argues your freedom from captivity; not what you do, as for what end you do them, that doth distinguish the devil's captives from the Lord's freemen. Know, therefore, though you should hear ten thousand sermons, and make as many prayers, yet, without an inward real change by converting grace upon your hearts, they avail nothing. Except you love God above all, you may not be released from captivity for the present nor saved hereafter.—Thomas Hopkins.

REWARD.

No work of life for God is lost;
The seed may be on stones tossed,
But sometime, on a farther shore,
What it hath borne is ours once more.

The rain revives the fainting flower,
So words of truth have mystic power,
And earnest words of ours may bear
Some fruit beyond of answered prayer.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus; in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. Thomas.—No. 19.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

I have now considered nearly all the arguments and reasons Josephites have given, most of them in their own words, for rejecting the supernatural begettal of Jesus, and for thinking that he was the son of Joseph, with the exception of one, which I will now notice. It is this. They say that the record of the begettal and birth of Jesus, as given by Matthew and Luke is spurious. Therefore they actually reject the first two chapters of both; and some of them reject much more, even the entire four gospels—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and the Acts of the Apostles!!! And still others of them even more than that!!! They think by so doing, they destroy all the evidence against their theory that Jesus was the begotten son of Joseph. But I fancy the reader will see ere this, that the entire Scriptures are clearly and directly against that theory; and therefore, in order to get rid of the evidence against it, they will find it necessary to abandon the whole Bible. They first commenced by rejecting only the first two chapters of Matthew, as in the following words of their own. "We do not find a single intimation of the miraculous conception of Jesus Christ, neither in the Old or New Testaments, with the exception of the account given in the first two chapters of Matthew, which is a direct contradiction to all the rest of the Bible!!!" But they do not stop here. They have later found it necessary, in order to make out that Jesus was begotten by Joseph, to condemn and cut off the first two chapters of Luke also. But they will now see it necessary to chop out John i. 13, which says, when correctly rendered, as I have shown, in speaking of Jesus, "who was begotten not of blood, nor of the will of a man, but of God." Not only so, but in order to sustain that delusion, they will find it necessary to repudiate almost the entire Bible. In fact, astonishing as it may and will appear to many, they are getting along very rapidly in that direction already. Hear the words of a Josephite, in "Zion's Day Star" of Jan. '84.

"In fact we were never so thoroughly convinced as now, that the Four Gospels of the New Testament have comparatively no inspiration about them! Very many of the New Testament teachings do not correspond with those of the Old, but do, on the other hand flatly contradict them! Peter draws a clean-cut line between Jesus as the man and his after exalted state as Lord and Christ. Note this well, for it is a death blow to the Miraculous Conception theory!" "We question the inspiration of the Four Gospels, and we challenge those who teach such a theory to harmonize it with Daniel's prophesy!" "To claim that Peter, James and John were inspired, is simply child's talk!" "Let us look well to what we pin our faith; or upon what we build an argument; and especially when using statements found in either of the four Gospels or Acts of the Apostles!" "You ask, then, what is our opinion of him? (Jesus). We answer, it is that he was a man," etc.

Such is Josephite language. Such is what they have come to already. At first they rejected only the first two chapters of Matthew, then the first two chapters of Luke. But when they find by the last Revised Version, that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are confirmed and given entire as correct, they still persist in rejecting them, and in their infatuation they go on still further, repudiating and rejecting (some of them at least) the greater part of the New Testament. Now, to all such, to all who are thus infatuated and presumptuous, I am done. I regard them in the same light, as belonging to the same category with all other infidels and sceptics; such as Julian the apostate, Pliny, Celsus, Hume, Gibbon, Paine, Voltaire, of the past; and such as Bradlaugh, Ingersoll and others of our own day. It is useless and futile to try to convince such persons as to the truth of Scriptural questions. It is worse than folly for those who thus reject the Scriptures, to profess to be greatly interested in the glorious things there taught; or to profess to believe in Christ, and to be the children of God, having faith in God and his Word. I would as soon talk Bible, and quote Scripture to any of those infidels above named. All such infatuated, and presumptuous persons are equally incapable of seeing and understanding the truth; except some items or features in harmony with their contracted and unreasonable ideas. What! quote Scripture to those who reject whole chapters and whole books, because they contain some little things not in accord with their opinions and notions; or little things irreconcilable according to their finite minds without careful patient study and thought; little things permitted by God for a wise purpose; little things which are of too little consequence to invalidate or materially interfere with the truth? No. "From such turn away." 2 Tim. iii. 5. And yet, they themselves, some of them, seem to feel as sure that they believe the Scriptures, as were the Jews, who at the same time crucified the Savior! They do not discern the fact that those chapters which they reject, are corroborated, and the genuineness of their record proved, by the entire Bible.

The Josephites find that there are Unitarians, infidels and skeptics—writers who hold and try to make it appear that those chapters are not genuine: and whose writings they quote. Such as the philosopher Origen, of the second century, a follower of the doctrines of Plato, and of whom Martin Luther said, "Origen is to be avoided;" and Tyndale, who first translated the Bible into English, said, "Origen and the doctors of his time, drew all the Scripture into allegory, insomuch as that twenty doctors expounded one text twenty different ways, and say the literal profiteth not." Dr. Clarke also says of Origen's interpretations of Scripture, "the most futile, absurd, and dangerous that can possibly be conceived:" and of which Mosheim also says, "All sorts of errors which a wild and irregular imagination could bring forth." D. T. Taylor also says, "finally Origen and his followers prepared the way of Mystery Babylon."

Josephites also quote from Jerome, born in Dalmatia A. D. 330, of whom we are informed by Mosheim, that he "was a bitter anti-millenarian, and decidedly a Monk and a Roman Catholic, and tinctured like the other fathers of the fourth century, with corrupt principles of monstrous errors, namely: 'It is an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when the interests of the church [Catholic] may be promoted." etc. The London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, says of Jerome, "in whose works the seeds of most every Popish error may be found."

Such is the character of those corrupt "Fathers," from whose writings they quote to disprove the genuineness of God's record by Matthew and Luke. But even some of these, like Origen, do in other places of their writings, evidently admit its truthfulness. Josephites do not find anything against the record in the writings of the earlier and better of the "Fathers;" such as Barnabas, Clement, Polycarp, Papias, and Ignatius who speaks of Jesus as "of the race of David, of the Virgin Mary." And again he says, "Christ was conceived in the womb of Mary, of the seed of David, by the Holy Spirit." Then again, Justin Martyr speaks of the virginity of Mary, and of the miraculous conception of Christ by the Holy Spirit, contrasting the record by Matthew and Luke, with the licentious amours of the heathen deities as given by their poets. In fact, so far as the evidence of "the fathers" goes, as to the truthfulness of the record, and as to its being contained in Matthew and and Luke in their time; it is beyond dispute. Besides this, we have the evidence of the Sibs. Of these, not less than 300 have been discovered in various countries. Every one of these contains the first two chapters of Matthew's gospel, with the exception of the Hebrew gospel used by the Ebionites and Nazarenes, and Marcion's Evangellium. Be it known, that because these chapters are not found in the one MS., used by the Ebionites, although found in all others extant, is the chief reason for their rejection by the Josephites, and some of the Unitarians. Says an able Biblical expositor of England, "their only ground of objection lies in the fact that the chapters in question were wanting in the copies used by the Nazarenes and Ebionites; and also in the Evangellium used by Marcion." Does not such a position, such a reason, look not only flimsy but actually silly? Let us see. Who are these Ebionites? The first writer who mentions them is Irenaeus, who speaks of them as a sect of the second century, who not only separated from the general body of Christians, but who opposed the doctrine preached by the apostles, and rejected, not only these chapters, but the greater part of the books of the New Testament, rejecting all the epistles of Paul. Says Epiphanius, "In that gospel which they (the Ebionites) have called the gospel according to Matthew, which is not entire and perfect, but corrupted and curtailed,... they changed the true account into a falsehood.....They have taken away the genealogy of Matthew." In the Religious Encyclopedia by "Rev's. B. B. Edwards and J. Newton Brown; we have extracts from Watson, Henderson, Buck, and Williams; to the effect that the names Ebionites and Nazarenes were applied to a certain kind of people which subsequently divided into two parties, one of which were called "the true Ebionites," and the other parties "denied both the divinity of our Lord, and his miraculous conception,....and held in execration the doctrines of the apostle Paul!" Now then, who was this Marcion? We are informed by Dr. Burton, Head, and Buck, that he "flourished between the years A. D. 130 and 160, and was one of the most distinguished and influential heretics of the second century.....He denied the resurrection of the body. And it is said he rejected the whole of the Old Testament. He rejected also, not only these chapters, but the two epistles of Timothy, that to Titus, and the Hebrews, and the Apocalypse." Thus it is easy to be seen why the important record of the begettal, conception and birth of God's own Son, was omitted by them from their New Testaments; when we find that they rejected Paul's epistles, and other Scriptures. The first two chapters of Matthew and Luke did not coincide with their notions and therefore they struck them out, just as they did the other Scriptures, and as some are doing nowadays.

Dear Restitution:

June 16th I bid adieu to my home and Mrs. L. and took the Chariots of Nahum at 8 p. m., for North Windham, Conn., a distance of 481 miles, where I had been invited. Not making connection at Palmer, Mass., and Willimantic, Conn., I did not reach my destination until the 17th, at 7 p. m. But I found my good Brother Chamberlin in readiness to escort me to his pilgrim home, where I met with a warm reception. This was comforting to one of my age. The next day being the Sabbath, which embraces the evening and morning, we spent joyfully in conversing upon advanced truths. Gave a discourse on baptism and the memorial supper. Immersed a daughter of Brother and Sister Chamberlin's into the all-saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ate the memorial supper. It was a day not to be forgotten while memory lasts. I have had the honor of immersing Brother and Sister C. and three of their daughters. Their views of doctrine and practice are in harmony with the writer's.

On Sunday I gave two discourses in the free chapel to a good audience, some coming seven miles. Forty-five years have rolled away since I preached my first sermon in this place. Subject in morning, "The disciples legacy." Text in afternoon, Isa. xxxi. 1.

On the 20th I took my leave of this dear family at 8 a. m. for Abington, arriving at 7 a. m., where I stopped until the next morning with Capt. Chase and family. This family were members of the Baptist Society and Sunday School in Hampton, and were my warm friends and supporters during my years of ministerial labor with that society, and have always been my true and abiding friends. The Capt. is 89 year old and is in possession of a sound mind and enjoying good health. Said he, "Your book, 'The kingdom of God and life only in Christ,' I have read a number of times; it is a masterly production."

My next call or visit was at Putnam; but upon my arrival I was informed that Judge Lyon, a cousin of mine, was dead, and the funeral was to be at 1 p. m. This was sad news to me. We had always been on the most friendly terms, though in past years we had often met in public debate before large audiences, he being my opponent. The large audience in attendance at the funeral was evidence that he was highly respected by the community. By request of relatives I followed the M. E. preacher in a speech predicated upon 1 Cor. xv. 26. The Baptist minister prayed.

On the 22nd, I visited a number of cousins and friends in Woodstock, and the place of my former residence, also the graveyard where my first wife was buried. Had her grave and those of her mother, grandmother and aunt neatly and tastefully fitted up and seeded down. Then taking my leave perhaps for the last time, started for Putnam. Called on Brother McDonald, editor of the Patriot, where I enjoyed a pleasant conversation for an hour. Then I took the chariots for West Dudley, Mass., where I stopped two nights with my sons. Her husband then took me to Southbridge, where I spent four days in visiting my brothers and old schoolmates; also the old homestead.

On Sunday I gave two discourses predicated upon the following Scriptures: Matt. vi. 9, 10; Rom. xv. 8, in a beautiful grove which had been fitted up for the occasion, to large audiences, especially in the afternoon, made up of all classes, who sat upon the rough seats and in their carriages for an hour and a quarter, as though spellbound. And when I was through many of them came to the platform and gave me a warm shake of the hand, some saying they were richly paid for coming and wished to hear me again. Others said it was a wonderful sermon; others, the greatest they ever heard. There is no place where I have so great freedom in preaching as I do in the town where I was raised. A lad of twelve years asked his mother, "How is it that Eld. Lyon can quote history and Bible, giving book, chapter and verse without stopping to think?" Never has there been a time in my judgment when there could be more accomplished by competent, faithful, fearless and uncompromising men in preaching the gospel, the plan of human redemption, than at the present time. I often wish I had my eyesight and former energy and strength.

On the 30th I bid my relatives farewell, the homestead where I was born, the neighborhood where I received the first principles of my education, where I started to serve the Lord, and where I commenced to hold meeting more than fifty years ago. A sad parting! But the sadness was drowned in the knowledge that I was on my way home, having taken the stage at quarter before eight, a. m. Reached Syracuse, N. Y., at 7:15, a distance of about 280 miles, 16 of it by stage. Here I found rest with my good Brother and Sister Finn for a couple of nights, and on July 1st, at 3:30 p. m. I took the Chariots of Nahum for the city of Auburn, where I spent the Sabbath and Sunday with pleasure to myself and to all whom I met or addressed. And on the morning of the fourth I took my leave of Mrs. L.'s relatives and started for my own much loved home. Stopped in Rochester about three hours and reached home about 6 p. m., where all was in readiness for my comfort. R. V. Lyon.

How to Do It.

The fields are all white,
And the reapers are few;
We children are willing,
But what can we do
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

Our hands are so small,
And our workers so weak,
We can not teach others;
How then shall we seek
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

We'll work by our prayers,
By the pennies we bring,
By small self-denials—
The least little thing
May work for our Lord in his harvest?

Until, by and by,
As the years pass at length,
We, too, may be reapers,
And go forth in strength
To work for our Lord in his harvest.

Leisure Hours.

A boy was told to open and shut the gates to let the teams out of an iron mine. He sat on a log all day by the side of a gate. Sometimes an hour would pass before the teams came, and this he employed so well that there was scarcely any fact in history that escaped his attention. He began with a very little book on English history that he found on the road. Having learned that thoroughly, he borrowed of a minister "Goldsmith's History of Greece." This good man became greatly interested in him, and lent him books, and was often seen sitting by him on the log conversing with him about the people of ancient times. Boys it will pay to use your leisure hours well.

Keep the Life Pure.

An Arabian princess was once presented by her teacher with an ivory casket, exquisitely wrought, with the instruction not to open it until a year had rolled around. Many were the speculations as to what it contained, and the time impatiently waited for when the jeweled key should disclose the mysterious contents. It came at last, and the maiden went away alone and with trembling hasts unlocked the treasure; and lo! reposing on delicate satin lining, lay nothing but a shroud of rust: the form of something beautiful could be discerned, but the beauty had gone forever. Tearful disappointment, she did not at first see a slip of parchment containing these words: "Dear girl: May you learn from this a lesson for your life. This trinket, when fashioned, had upon it a single spot of rust; by neglect it has become the useless thing you now behold, only a blot on its surroundings. So a little stain on our character will, by inattention and neglect, mar a bright and useful life, and in time will leave only the dark record of what might have been. If you now place within a jewel of gold, and after many years seek the result, you will find it still as sparkling as ever. So with yourself; treasure up only the pure, the good, and you will ever be an ornament to society and a source of true pleasure to yourself and your friends."

Dear Children:

Two school mates were taking a pleasure walk before breakfast which was the custom in England. The dewy freshness of the morning stimulated thought to forth ideas. As the girls journeyed along something caught Mary's attention, which made her tarry a moment. Stop, Jane, she cried, do not hurry so fast. I have found a stone which positively claims my interest, if polished it would be beautiful. O come along said Jane, I am not going to bother my brains over a stone, I never did, and I don't think I ever will. But Jane, memory will not gather again the circumstances of this bright morning if we do not impress it with some lesson of instruction. Yes, that is true, but what lesson can we gather from that pebble? An inanimate thing. Much indeed Jane, for it whispers its own language in reason's listening ear. We know Jane, nothing in the universe possessing form is older than a stone. Antiquity's hushed voice has sweetly echoed its creation, and perhaps the rushing stream of a century may have been passed over this smooth surface, for only water will wear it away. Probably before its tiny particles were united into form, it was little grains of sand, carried by tempest and water very many miles. Indeed Mary your remarks has brought to mind what Grandma said to father the other day. He had promised her a pair of spectacles, and she insisted that none would suit her but pebbles. Is it possible that Grandma's sight can be renewed, by the little pebble from the brook? True it is Jane, for the pebble when reduced to the finest powder if combined with other stones will produce glass, lens, rock-crystal, even when it becomes dust, so that a breeze could waft it away, it affords sight to the aged, and few articles are more valuable than glass. Why Mary, you have given the stones quite a history. Yes Jane, it has been useful in many ways. One smooth pebble from the brook fashioned to a sling in the hand of a shepherd boy, destroyed a mighty warrior, who was a giant. And Israel's first school book written by the finger of God was on stone. And fearing Israel may forget to instruct their dear children, Jehovah commanded them to gather quite a number of whole stones, and on each write the law of the Lord very plainly, and with them build an altar, so that the little ones could constantly have it before them. Truly Mary this pleasant walk, and interesting chat will not soon be forgotten by me, To tell you the truth Mary, I have never studied anything long enough to make it profitable to me. In my home there seems to be no leisure moments for reflection, all is hurry and drive. Tell me Mary, what has produced this studious mind in you? I am pleased to inform Jane, for I love the one who has expanded my young mind, and gave force to reason. It was my mother, who gathers sweet instruction from the most simple thing, she never tires in asking me questions, which seem to absorb my whole attention doing it in the most attractive manner. One morning while eating an egg, she said, Do you know my daughter you have been feeding on that which constitutes flesh, bones, and feathers? I looked amazed at her, for I had not considered that beside the hard shell was the substance which formed a little chicken, requiring only heat which engenders life to perfect it. She also gave me a sweet idea, saying the egg unfolded to her mind three degrees, or stages of circumstances. The first was hard, requiring pressure to break through. When done, this brought to view something pure and spotless holding within its embrace an inner little golden globe of its own.

Mary, you have created quite a desire in me to investigate. Shall we renew our walk tomorrow? It will be a pleasure for me to do so Jane. If nothing unforeseen occurs, I will be ready.

Your affectionate Teacher,
E. Coffman.

RENEW TODAY.

To the Scattered Ones in Indiana.

Having been chosen by the committee appointed at the June Conference as Evangelist to visit churches not belonging to the Indiana State Conference, and other places where we have no organization, I take this means of finding out your whereabouts. To such I will say, if you will address me at once, giving location, etc., I will try and visit you before the annual conference which will convene in September. To isolated brethren, where the Abrahamic faith is not preached, I will say, If you can arrange a place to hold a series of meetings, and believe that good may be accomplished, address me at once, and arrangements will be made to be with you as long as the interest may demand. Truly, "the harvest is great but the laborers are few." "Let us labor therefore that we may enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God." Address,

L. E. Conner,
Miami Co. Macy, Ind.

Craft.—In Topeka, Kansas, July 8rd, 1887, of cancer, Sarah J., wife of Wm. Craft, aged 83 years.

Sister Craft was a devoted Christian, faithful until death. She became an Adventist in 1844 under the preaching of Wm. Miller. She died in the blessed hope of having part in the first resurrection. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them. Funeral services by the writer. Eld. P. J. Snyders.

National Conference.

The committee appointed at the recent conference at Antioch to correspond with State Conferences in the matter of a proposed National Conference composed of delegates from each State, recommend and request that our conferences everywhere at their next meeting consider the question of a National Conference, and upon approval at once appoint delegates thereto; they also invite correspondence relative to the proposed National Conference, which will receive attention if addressed to the chairman of the committee at Plymouth, Ind.

A. P. Harsh,
Chairman.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary in ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jay" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jay6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

God.

How wondrous is our God, how manifold
His mighty works, with cunning hand
He paints the varied robe of nature o'er
With beauteous skill, oft, many hued.
The eye is soothed, the senses charmed,
When viewing earth's salt emerald green
Or heaven's tender blue fleeced with white clouds,
Like foaming billows in an azure sea,
Or thickly set with heaven's glittering lamps—
Countless they hang in the dark depths of space
Upheld by the strong arm of him who placed
Them in their course. How true the hand that guides
These many worlds through heaven's broad expanse,
And keeps with watchful care each whirling sphere
Within its orbit bound. The gray of earth
That at its bidding sped for countless years
Upon her trackless course; nor weary yet she wings
Her ceaseless flight around the orb of day.
Day follows day, and night, dark winged,
Gives place to rosy morn. The years speed by,
The summers come and go, and yet the sun
Doth shine as brightly now as when of old
It lit the splendors of the temple walls of Israel's mighty King,
Or warmed the tender buds and bowers that fed the flocks
Of ancient Abraham. The golden moon
Doth shed her rays as mellowly now as then
And that mysterious rugged cloak on which one of
The humble manger where our Savior lay
A tender babe—the wondrous gift of God
To fallen man. How many men have trod
The dusty earth; each played his part,
Spent his short life, and then, the tolling bell,
The funeral knell tells of another gone
To his long home. The earth's mounds on, nor stops
For life or death, for weal or woe: but God
Doth count each tear that falls, and knows
The number of the hosts who, in the silent past
Have come and gone upon the earth, and of those Who live and breathe to-day. Oh, mighty God
How wondrous are thy works! Thy ways
Past finding out. All nature doth proclaim
Thy wisdom; from the dew drop that gleams
A liquid diamond in a lily's breast,
To the deep-sounding ocean, rolling on
From pole to pole in majesty sublime.
Its billow echoes tell of him who said,
"Thus far shalt thou go, and here
Shall thy proud waves be stayed." No eye
Have God's, hath seen the treasures rare,
Hid 'neath the rolling deep. Rare gems
Gleam from the hollow caverns; all access
From mortals man. And fiery hosts
Sport 'neath the dancing waves and safely dwell
In peace within their briny home, for fear
The raging storms that lash the crested waves
To awful fury. When the wind's wild,
Rites, like huge mountains reaching heavenward,
And the vast sea a seething cauldron boils,
Then ocean's tenants find a safe retreat,
Far, far beneath the angry billows, tempest-tossed,
And sporting in the hollow caverns, 'mid the grove
Of branching coral, and where lustrous gems
Lie all unsought. Where none save the Omnipotent
Hath marked the wonders of the pathless deep.
Oh wondrous God! infinite, great, beyond the reach
Of mortals to conceive thy wondrous power.
The heaven of heavens cannot contain thee, yet
Thou deignest to dwell within the hearts of those Who love and worship thee. Oh, what is man
That thou art mindful of him! The son of man
That thou dost visit him? May the creatures of thy hand
Thy holy name adore, and render thee
The praise and honor due thy awful majesty.
The love and true obedience of loyal hearts
That bow in sweet submission to thy holy will,
Knowing 'mid love's sorrows, toils and tears
That thou, our God, art true and faithful still.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

ON THE SEVENTH DAY.

I notice there are good and conscientious people who keep the seventh day, and I think towardly and say openly, let them do it if they choose. Let them have their preference and privilege. Why should I oppose or disturb their choice? It is a land of liberty, and I instinctively abhor controversy. But I can nevertheless modestly dissent from the claim of imperative obligation to observe the seventh day myself. And I can give reasons, ample and satisfactory, for my choice and my action. I have sometimes thought I would briefly summarize them, somewhat after this manner.

1. The law of the ten commandments, (and including the Sabbath,) was never given to any nation but the Jews. How then is it binding on the Gentiles. This is a notable consideration, so far as I can see, fatal to any claim of the obligatory nature of the Jewish Sabbath.

2. The same law, i. e., the decalogue, was a vital part of the entire Jewish system and inseparable from it. When therefore any part was revoked and abolished, every other part was decadent with it. The ceremonial and the statutory law were repealed together, or rather expired by limitation, as parts of an essential whole. It is impossible to indicate when, where and how there was a distinction in the parts by which one was reserved from the destiny common to both or to all. The ceremonial law was fulfilled by its completion in Christ, and the completion of that law was the consumation of it. The statutory was two-fold, in the decalogue of ten brief edicts, mostly negative, and in sundry minor and special requisitions, the two being quite mutually related. Now when one part of the system failed or fell, all fell, and I think this is simply incontrovertible.

3. There is no caution, admonition or injunction in the New Testament relative to the perpetuity of the Sabbath. Our Lord never gives a single relative to it, and on the other hand, how imperative and careful was the order to obedience in the Old Testament! No apostle gives a word of caution relative to Sabbath keeping. Why this marked silence? Certainly if either Jew or Gentile had any inherent or imposed duty of obedience to the decalogue Sabbath, it would have been distinctly stated. Who was more zealous and careful than Paul to teach and warn and exhort his brethren? Every kind of virtue, every Christian grace, every moral duty was faithfully inculcated. Touching questions of Sabbath-keeping, the apostle was either silent or he dreaded their intrusion. I might say right here, that he was exceedingly earnest in protesting against a legal life and a legal mind, as a peril to gospel growth and strength. He calls the law holy, just and good. So it was. It was perfect in its sphere. It was adapted to its place. It accomplished its object. But it had its limitation. Heaven and earth could not pass away until it was fulfilled. It was fulfilled in Messiah, the antitype and end of the law.

4. The law could not save the covenanters. It had no power of life. It was a summary and series of prohibition. It did not immediately lead up to anything, or contain in itself anything that had power to renew, enlarge or redeem. Contrast the nine total of duties growing out of it, with those embraced in the gospel. The gospel teaches meekness, humility, patience, gentleness, faith, hope, love, temperance, and a world of duties and virtues. It magnifies and associates excellencies that are inherent and varied and mutually related.

5. Contrasted with the Sinaitic code, is the law of the Spirit of life. This is something new, vital, enduring and inherently great. It is truly divine. It involves characters and touches the heart. It is the law of liberty. It is a law inseparable and eternal. It is in the very nature and system of things, and has life-giving power. It has Christ for its pillar of majesty.

6. The relative weakness and strength, inferiority and glory, fleetingness and permanence of the two systems are expressly set forth in the second epistle to the Corinthians. What could be more express and conclusive? On the one side are tables of stone, a covenant of the letter, a covenant that killeth, the ministration of death, the ministration of condemnation, an ordinance with no glory (relatively), and which passeth away. On the other side, are tables of the heart, a covenant of the Spirit, a covenant of life-giving, a ministration of the Spirit, a ministration with glory, a ministration of righteousness, a covenant that remaineth, and a glory that surpasseth. On the one side was the old covenant, with its veil, its blindness, the hardening of the mind. On the other is the Spirit of the Lord, a vanishing of the veil, reflection of the divine glory, liberty and transformation. If the contrast is not plain and the conclusion is not clear, I need hardly add any words of mine.

7. If the ten commandments are in force, if they are of present and binding obligation, as a legal statement, as an unrepealed system, then they are so in their entirety, including their penalties. Can a law as such be valid and operative with its penalties ignored and annulled? The penalty of transgression of the Horeb law was death, death by swift and imperative necessity. Is the penalty of Sabbath-breaking in force? If not, how or why was it repealed? Is the law binding with its penalty revoked? Is the law operative with its penalty unenforced? A law, national, state, or municipal, the penalty of whose infraction is not looked after or enforced, is a dead letter. A law void in penalty, is void in fact, or at least, if this is not so, what are we to think? The government, the civil and hierarchical authority, that was to guard the Mosaic law and punish its infractions, is nowhere visible, it has vanished and perished from among men. Government, law, penalty, are all gone.

8. But some will anxiously and honestly insist that the decalogue is inseparable, that its specifications and provisions are in the nature of things enduring. This is worthy of careful consideration. It is true that all morality is intrinsic and eternal. In other words, the morality involved in, and enjoined by the arrangement and constitution of things, endures while that constitution endures. Obedience to parents is always right, while the family order remains. So is adultery a great offence also against family order and the order of society. But when an entirely different condition of things obtains, when parentage ceases, and sexual relations are unknown, certain laws of the decalogue necessarily lapse. The Sinaitic law, therefore, as a system is necessarily temporary, unless human nature and relations are to permanently or eternally continue. But whatever is absolutely endless in its nature and obligation can know no repeal. What I wish to notice in this. The decalogue was an offshoot from the eternal law of right for a specific end and adaptation. It was a bough from the tree, bending over the Jewish nation, a stream from the fountain, running to their land and time. But in process of time, its purpose was accomplished and it failed and passed away.

Now there remains the eternal law of right, the law of universal obligation and that is, love to God and his intelligent moral creatures. To that law we come absolutely in the gospel, and no other. That law includes and enjoins every purely moral duty. The law of faith in Jesus Christ opens the way to the whole precious and blessed category of duties and virtues. The virtues of Christian life and character spring from our recognized relation to God. They are virtues of the mind and life. They have their life and root in the heart. The Jew might obey the ten commandments as a matter of strict necessity, rather from compulsion than choice, and out of expediency more than preference. Though we call to mind the law of love from which the decalogue sprung, nevertheless the latter was, not in itself, vital with the passion of love to God in the breast of its keeper, nor vital with the power to inspire affection either to God or man. And obedience without love, is obedience without life or glory. It would be highly useful to create unity of the nation, and to private and public prosperity, but yet would have a painful and perpetual imperfection, as compared with the law of the Spirit. In the gospel we leave the law of Sinai entirely and totally, and come to the head and front and fount of knowledge in the law of the Spirit of life. Christ illustrates love. He, in himself, and his life and teachings, is a library of all law in rectitude and liberty. All duties find their root and illustration in him. Sinai with all its brightness and heat is poor and weak in comparison. I have nothing to do with Sinai. I cannot put my neck and limbs into leash of legalism. If I am carried back to a former age, I am disabled and useless and dead. If I go to Horeb, I die. I am rather called to liberty, and to life in the immaculate Lord and Master. He is the Sun of glory. Why should I corrupt his life and majesty by a return to the bogarrly elements of an old dead dispensation? Is he not equal to every need of man? Is he not life and light and truth? Did he not call the world to himself by every possible claim of sufficiency, and power, and motive in invocation? Must the splendor of his brightness be heightened by the glow-worm lustre of the decalogue? If we come to him, may we not, can we not, and shall we not learn of him? Have we not the assurance of all treasures of understanding in him? He did not come to destroy the law, but to fulfil it, and when it was fulfilled, it was absolute by accomplishment, as much as a prophecy by its fulfilment, is absolute. It is historic as a record, but not future as an expectation.

In regard to the question of a weekly rest, there can be no mistake. Its need is obvious and is proved by experience. The fact or truth is illustrated by the statute given to the Hebrews, and it is undoubtedly desirable to have one day in the week for quiet meditation, for religious refreshment, and even social converse and Christian worship. But, as I understand it, there is no explicit "thus saith the Lord," for this sacred setting apart of time. An instinct of propriety will, however, invariably suggest the remembrance of a day of rest, with a thought of sacred privilege associated with it. Indeed, the ground of privilege is that which is chiefly to be considered. But there are no New Testament prescriptions of observance. The whole matter is left open in the Providence and wisdom of God to the course of events. Did the Romish church ordain a change of days from the seventh to the first? I am not at all concerned with it, one way or another, for though any power or authority on earth has prescribed a new day, or ordained one day above another, I am not thereby bound by it. Neither Judaism nor Romanism has jurisdiction or authority over the world, and especially over the freedom of the conscience of the enlightened Christian responsible to Christ alone. Some power may physically compel an outward strictness, but there would be no glory in it, because the spirit of obedience was wanting.

It is true, one may be happy and content in taking for a day of praise and congratulation, the illustrious day of our Lord's resurrection. There is a glory and blessing in that day, that can never be wearied out or bedimmed. It is a day of days. It is a day of fame, of honor, of victory. It is a day of precious endearment and grateful remembrance. No need of any law of verbal rehearsal, or letter-writing in stone, to make it honorable and renowned, or to vivify its recognition. Gratitude ever magnifies it. It stands peerless. It is the opening day of a new era. Then the demon death was given a hint of a catastrophe that should wreck and end his dominion, for into the pit which he had dug for millions, he should surely fall himself.

There is no warrant for saying that the first day is substituted for the seventh, by any enactment human or divine. But there is a sweetness in hallowing such a day as that of our Lord's resurrection, and is it incredible that it should in a future age become the Sabbath of the Jews? Deeply grieved at their former blindness, and intensely grateful for their gracious illumination, may they not seek to make memorable the great day of their beloved Messiah's emergence from death?

Much stress is laid on some portion of the sermon on the Mount, and the perpetuity of the law is inferred from its coevality with heaven and earth But heaven and earth often represent ecclesiastical and civil authority. And even if such is not the meaning here, the law was "accomplished" (R. V.) not only by the perfect obedience of our Lord to all its demands on it, but by the perfect consummation of all its typical mystery in his incarnation and sacrifice. It was perfectly accomplished in him, and then the Jewish heaven and earth passed away. We are cited to the peril and penalty of "breaking one of these least commandments." Were they the ten? The obedience was enjoined to them till the kingdom of heaven should come, in pentecostal time, and there was a minor sense in which it might come then.

But what commandments were meant? Of those enumerated the keeping of the Sabbath was not one. Murder, adultery and profanity were enumerated, or if you please, swearing for corroboration. But there is not the least allusion to the seventh day. For hate, impurity, and all or any profane invocation, Jesus teaches kindness, marital fidelity, and simplicity in affirmation, teaches forbearance, and pity even towards wrong-doers; teaches privacy in prayer, piety without ostentation, confidence in God, singleness of mind, which is most favorable to illumination and strength, and various duties and virtues, to which a few citations from the law are introductory. Indeed, the sermon on the mount may be viewed as transitional, and as suggestive of the entire transitional character of the time, when doctrines and ideas of the Mosaic law, should merge and lose their splendor in the greater light of the gospel. Literalism should make room for love, and a routine obedience of statutory enactments be changed to a voluntary choice and obedience of truth, and Christ who is truth incarnate.

I have thus given only in brief some of the reasons why I think the seventh day is not obligatory. If some prefer to observe, I am quite willing they should. I will not have any controversy with them. And if I am censured for holding and teaching as I do, I will not return reproof for reproof. It may seem a remarkable use of Revelation to derive from it and apply a remarkable and peculiar penalty, such as one sense derived and applied, to the detriment of those who in some degree observe the first day of the week, but there I leave it. C. COLEBROOK.

P. S. I have left much unsaid in the above, and I have left some points less elaborated than I could wish, but in a single article, and at a single setting, I could not avoid the lack of completeness, of course.

[Please elaborate the other points more fully.—ED. REs.]

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. Weitzel.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting to the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are inquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprise, the miracles of modern invention, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and similar tokens, point unmistakably to it as we now live in the near approaching closing period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the Coming Age, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the data of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, in shaping the course of events and forming its history. It unshadows to us the supreme hand in moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Omnipotent Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in cloth, Price $2.00. Send to this office for this work.

"THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."—No. 14.

THE KINGDOM AND THE PARABLES.

The next two parables in the series in Matt. xiii., namely, the "Treasure hid in a field" and the "Pearl of Great Price," are generally allowed to be one in design, but, like those that precede them, are understood to have no reference to the kingdom of God as a future institution. The terms in which they are given are as follows: —

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls: Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.

Regarding the latter, Mr. Newton (already quoted) views Christ as the merchant seeking pearls, and the church the pearl sought for. He says "No one who valued or understood the gospel of grace could interpret the parables of 'The Treasure,' or of 'The Pearl,' of believers, for what is there that they purchase? Christ, however, purchased the church, and in purchasing it, purchased a pearl, for like a pearl it will one day be." This is very strongly put by the writer in the Rainbow—"Is the kingdom of heaven anywhere symbolized by a poor sinner coming to Christ as a wealthy merchant to make the purchase of pardon, heirship, and eternal life, when the fact is that all such are bankrupt with not a penny in their pocket? No. To be brief the field is the world, the 'pearl' and 'hid treasure' is the church, 'Ye are bought with a price!' The merchantman is Christ; he had something wherewith to make the purchase, 'sold all that he had' the glory with the Father before the world was,' 'became poor for the sake' of the purchase, both field and treasure. Man was not all he bargained for; he bought his birthplace, his habitation; the soil was moistened with his tears, and crimsoned with the blood of God's only Son! It is now the 'purchased possession,' redeemed by price, and shortly to be redeemed by power," etc.

Another view is expressed by Mr. Godson in a quotation already given, "The Savior next shows the sacrifices some will make to enjoy the inestimable blessings of the gospel, in the parables of the 'hid treasure,' and of the 'man seeking goodly pearls.'

This view of Mr. Godson seems to me to meet most fully the requirements of the case as represented in these two parables, notwithstanding the argument of the bankrupt sinner's inability to "purchase pardon, heirship, or eternal life." It is quite true that Christ purchased the church with his own blood, and much of what I have quoted on this point on the poverty of the sinner is undoubted truth.

But these two parables are quite capable of another explanation. Although salvation in all its aspects is a free gift, we must not forget that there is in regard to obtaining possession of it, such a thing represented in the Scriptures as "buying without money and without price." However paradoxical it may seem to "buy without a price," it is nevertheless so placed before us by the sacred writers. We are to "buy from the Lord gold that we may be rich," and even "white raiment that we may be clothed." Though not only poor but weak and helpless, we are to strive (or agonize) to enter in at the strait gate;" we are to seek after knowledge as silver, and search for her as for hid treasures."

Here we might pause to ask—How is a poor feeble sinner to do all this, if he is not to be considered as, in some sense, compared to a wealthy merchant? We might answer by asking another. How were the widow's two mites considered to be more than the rich offerings of the wealthy? Was it not because those mites were all her living? The poor is reckoned wealthy if he submits his mind and will to the Lord. As the Apostle James testifies—"Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and Heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him." (chap. ii. 5). There is also such a thing as being "rich in good works."

This testimony of the Apostle James brings the question involved in these two parables before us in its true aspect. "Heirs of the kingdom promised," and yet the poor of this world rich in faith. In the parables it must not be forgotten that it is "the kingdom of heaven" which is likened to "the pearl of great price," and to "treasure hid in a field." This "kingdom of heaven" which I hold to be the "promised kingdom," and not the church, is the inheritance of the saints, is one of "the inestimable blessings of the gospel," referred to by Mr. Godson; and I submit that the truth taught in these two parables is the inestimable worth of the kingdom of heaven and the necessity of obtaining it any sacrifice, however great, "seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

I think it will be evident from what has been advanced that there is a sense in which sinners and especially forgiven sinners, are rich, and in a position to "buy the truth," and to make sacrifices in order to obtain that "kingdom that cannot be moved;" and also that these two parables were designed to teach the transcendent value of that Kingdom as well as the difficulty there is in the way of many who may, through ignorance, prejudice, self-will, sensual gratification, cares of the world, and many other obstacles, fail to reach the prize.

The closing parable of the chapter is given in the following terms:—

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

So far as I can see at present this parable seems to be much akin to that of the Tares and the Wheat; namely, representing the existence for a time of good and bad in the kingdom of God, and the separation of the same at the end of the world or age. It has been pointed out that there shall be an epoch of judgment at the close of the thousand years, and as it is the kingdom of heaven that is likened in the parable as in those preceding, that epoch seems to be the most fitting counterpart to the end of the world in the parable.

On the whole subject of these parables in Matt. xiii., which we have passed in review in these papers, it must be evident from what has been advanced that the field is not to be left altogether to those who contend that the church is the kingdom. In short the fact is nothing in any of these parables which can be held as demonstrating that "the kingdom of heaven" is either the church or anything pertaining to the present dispensation.

The practical conclusion, therefore, is that the subject of the preaching of our Lord and his Apostles, styled "The Gospel of the Kingdom of God," is not to be explained away by any fanciful interpretation of the parables of our Lord. On the contrary those parables afford corroborative proof that that gospel of the kingdom was glad tidings concerning that kingdom promised to him as the Messiah of Jehovah, at once the Son of David and the Son of God.

One grand truth taught is that this kingdom though it shall be small in its beginning, shall ultimately extend over the whole earth, and, as the prophet expresses it, "under the whole heaven," assimulating all peoples to its heavenly characteristics of "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." To "those who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality," only to be found in that kingdom it will prove indeed an invaluable treasure a "pearl of great price." To secure its possession the Christian disciple must be prepared to take up the language of the Apostle and say—"What things were gain to me those I counted loss for (The) Christ. Yea, doubtless and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ," etc. He must also, at whatever sacrifice deny ungodliness and worldly lusts and live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present age; looking for that blessed hope, the appearing of the glory of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." Like Moses who "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward." The exceeding great and precious promises are concerning that kingdom, and the faith that takes hold of them is "precious faith;" and unto all them that believe he (the Anointed) for that kingdom, is precious. Let us therefore who profess this faith seek to "hold it fast that no man take our crown." J. CAMERON.

Union with the Son the Source of Spiritual Life.—No. 2.

"He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." 1 John v. 12.

Remarking on the difference between the regenerate and the unregenerate man, Dr. Daniel Steele says, "The difference is not external, but internal. The one feels the heart throb of a new life; the other lies pulseless in the sepulchre of spiritual death. The one is God-centered, gravitating upward, drawn by the magnetism of love; the other is self-centered, moving downward with the accelerating velocity of depravity. The one throbs through all the mystery of his being with the pulses of a divine life; the other is insensible to those spiritual truths which thrill the former with rapture unutterable. Though both obey the decalogue and minister their charities to the needy, the one acts with a single eye to the glory of God; the other is actuated by a highly refined selfishness. The obedience of the one is freedom; of the other, servility."

But this spirit-life, this life in the Son of God, is a thing that cannot be described—cannot, at least, be fully described. To the unregenerate man, it cannot be described in any proper sense of the word because he cannot understand it. The law relating to this divine gift forbids it. It can only be understood by those who receive the gift. It is a personal matter; it is something which each one must experience for himself, know for himself, feel for himself, and enjoy for himself. A man comes into the world alone at his birth, and he goes out of the world alone at his death; these are experiences which none can pass through for him, or share with him; they cannot be borne or endured by a substitute. So the heavenly life, the effect of being united to Christ, is an experience which must be obtained, which must be commenced and continued alone by each believer. It is a matter for each individual; for me personally; for you, personally.

Some unregenerate persons, because they cannot have this spiritual life explained to their unenlightened minds, and their unquickened spirits, reject the doctrine altogether. But the fact that some are blind, and do not see the beauties of nature and art, is no proof that there are no beautiful things around them. The fact that some are deaf, and hear no sweet sounds, is no proof that there is no charm in music, no melody in a choir of well-trained voices. So the fact that some are dead in trespasses and sins, and therefore, neither perceive the beauty nor feel the power and peace and joy of religion, is no proof that these things do not exist. We who have been quickened to a new life know that they are a blessed reality. Hallelujah! It were in vain for the unbeliever to attempt to reason us out of this experience.

Now to have this life, to have the Spirit of Christ within us, to have his renewing and comforting influences pervading our souls, to have his will ruling our will till ours is lost in his, to have his desires and purposes giving purity and strength and godly aim to ours, to be one with him and live in his love and under his smile, is the grandest idea, the most blessed privilege made known in the Christian Scriptures. For in this new state, as we have shown, we have a hope of endless life, and that hope is well grounded, because we have both God's promise of it and the earnest of it already in possession. Christ's life is imparted to us in regeneration, which is the germ of life eternal. Hence Christ is the great centre of the believing soul.

Again; faith in the Son of God is the only means by which this spiritual life may be obtained. We are aware that this is a point not mentioned in our text, but there are many other texts which mention faith as a condition of life, or salvation; and this point is so important in the discussion of the subject, that its importance will justify a few words upon it, and our treatment of it would be incomplete without it. "For by grace have ye been saved through faith." Ephes. ii. 8. "That we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." Gal. iii. 14. "That Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith." Ephes. iii. 17. "For ye are all sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 26. All the passages which promise eternal life, on the condition of faith, are appropriate here, because spiritual life is included in eternal life, and is the beginning of it. Take several. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him may have eternal life." "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life." "For this is the will of my Father, that every one that beholdeth the Son, and believeth on him, should have eternal life: and I will raise him up at the last day."—John iii. 14, 15, 36; vi. 40. As the instrument or means of life,—spiritual life now resulting in everlasting life,—faith is the only revealed one. In this faith there is included not only the assent of the mind to the truth, but conviction of sin, repentance of sin, and renunciation of sin, for where sin is indulged, saving faith cannot be exercised. This life-giving faith is the heart's believing, trusting, resting in Jesus. Hence what is called wrestling, or agonizing, or struggling is over, and the soul calmly, sweetly, reposes in Jesus, leans on Jesus, surrenders all to Jesus. A good man once prayed, "Lord, teach the church that there is no struggle in faith." Believing is ceasing to struggle. As long as the struggle continues, there is unbelief. Unbelief is the cause of the struggle. Faith is yielding, resigning, submitting, giving up all to Christ. It is acquiescing fully in his word, and in his will, and in his atoning work. The question was once put to a child, "What is faith?" when he replied, "Doing God's will, and asking no questions." There is perhaps more implied in this answer than the child intended. Asking questions, or reasoning about the promises, hinders believing. Let us not inquire, how can these things be? or, Will God give us so great a blessing? If he has promised to do so, let us lay aside all questionings, and have an unhesitating faith. There is a sense, we know, in which faith is the gift of God, for he gives us the power to believe; but our believing is our use of that gift, and the act of believing, therefore, is our own act.

Having once become united to Christ, and thus received his life giving Spirit, let us take care that we never sever the union between us and him by unbelief. A branch severed from the trunk of a tree dies; and a believer severed from Christ loses his spiritual life. The connecting link is faith. If that is broken, a separation takes place. The union can only be maintained, the life can only be preserved, by faith. "But Christ liveth in me," says Paul; "and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself up for me." Gal. ii. 20. The greatest care then is necessary never to lose our faith, nor even to weaken it. Now the commission of sin, let it be remembered, paralyses faith; and the doing of things of which we doubt the lawfulness, weakens faith. Hence every temptation to sin, or to the least departure from the divine will, must be resisted.

But nothing seems more difficult than to get Christians to walk by faith, or to trust in God, when their feelings are depressed. If their feelings are low, their faith is weak. They measure their piety by their feelings. They take pleasure in their work for Jesus according to their feelings. They decide in respect to their preparation for death, their readiness to meet Jesus, and their fitness for the kingdom, by the state of their feelings. But in this they err, for all this has to be decided by the attitude of our will, and our faith in Christ. If our will is fully surrendered to God, and our faith is centered in the Lamb of God for purity of heart, all is right whether we have ecstatic emotion or not. No word is more sure than Jehovah's word; no rock is more firm and solid than his promises: do not fear then to rest upon then, and trust in God in all circumstances.

SILAS HENN.

"The Star of Bethlehem."

This star as first noticed in Numbers 24, is associated with "the sceptre that shall rise out of Israel" to smite and devour the adversaries of all good. For "out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion." This "star" (announced by Balaam; B. C. 1452 years) appeared to "the wise men of the East" 1887 years ago, who came to Jerusalem to pay the Messiah their homage, and form a link in the chain of evidence that God would bless the world through this promised Messiah. Matt. ii. 2.

It seems noted by the apostle Peter as "the day star that shall arise." 2 Peter i. 19; and the bright and morning star. Rev. ii. 28; xxii. 16, at the close of Revelation. Thus it is interwoven with divine promise from Moses to the Messiah's birth, and thence on into the closing chapter of apostolic teaching.

"The wise men" doubtless made use of it for instruction to their generation and placed it on record for those other wise men who might profit thereby through the gospel age. Hence, having become historic, and embodying a primal truth of the original promise of a Savior, Gen. iii. 15, it has become a part of the very alphabet of science, the world's wisdom, and the foundation of faith in salvation by our Lord Jesus, the Christ, at his second coming to sway his "sceptre of mercy, overcoming evil with good."

The point of interest to us lies in this class of facts; "the wise men" got it, recorded it, and made it the basis of the interest now taken in it by astronomers and the honored scientists who may be to believers as the breakwater to the land it protects from the ocean waves.

Prof. Grimer, of Harvard University, Mass., Ed. Dunkin, T. R. S., etc., of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, England, and other honored names are mentioned that should hush down sceptics in! God's world, his servants and all are the objects of his care, in their order.

But there is special interest investigating this "star" now as it comes out through Professor John M. Klein of the Hartford, Observatory, Ky., who has reported it already visible in the constellation Cassiopeia.

Then with a little play of fancy and with ancient history, it is applied by the Prophetic News, London, to Victoria, "Empress of India; the omen of joy, the jubilee star."

No one need interpret it or attempt to express its full significance. It did herald the Messiah's birth! It did reveal to those "wise men" what the angel announced to the virgin Mary, with further promise, and what the angel anthem embraced, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men!" Therefore by the law of the association of ideas, and concurring with all other manifold evidence, it may make its own impression by the mind that moves it. Faith cries now as through the beloved disciple, "come Lord Jesus, come quickly! Amen." Lovingly in hope,

J. B. COOK.

Upon the Terms Elder and Bishop.

These are apostolic terms and in every attempt to return to apostolic faith and practice, they must come up for acceptance or for rejection. That they have been abused by unfaithful men in the past and present history of those who claim to abide by the revelation of God is true. The man, however who refuses the use of what is good because his neighbor has made a bad use of it, acts foolishly. An elder is one who is far advanced in years and in experience, apart from any appointment to any special duty in the church or state, while a bishop in addition to being advanced in years, has been appointed to oversee in the church or state. The distinction between the two terms is therefore formed by the act of appointment. Every bishop is by age an elder, but no elder is a bishop except by appointment. For any one to be simply advanced in years is not sufficient in itself to constitute him an elder. He must in addition to age have the specified qualifications given by Paul to Timothy and Titus. The qualifications are not the appointment. Neither can the appointment of any church confer upon any man any qualification whatever. If an appointment had been made by the Holy Spirit that would mean the possession of the qualifications. But there is no evidence whatever that would entitle us to believe that the Holy Spirit at any time conferred upon any one the qualifications. They are things acquired by all who earnestly desire to have them by a careful obedience of the instructions of the Holy Spirit. But they are not themselves the gifts of the Spirit. This fact cannot be too carefully noted that the line of separation is invariably drawn between what he confers by gift and what is attained by the efforts of the elder.

The line we believe is this, that what ever man is not able to do for himself God will do for him. No one can be foolish enough to contend that blamelessness; having only one wife, to be vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach, not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre: but patient, not a brawler, not covetous. One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity. Not a novice. One who has a good report of those that are without, I say no one can imagine that any one of these is a gift of the Holy Spirit. They are the fruits of the Spirit dwelling in one who is begotten of the Spirit and are such virtues as grow naturally in every one who desires them. Timothy could not confer them by any means in his power. Neither could Titus; yet if they conferred the office of a bishop upon any one who did not have them, they acted contrary to the apostolic instructions.

The appointment of men to oversee the flock of God is one thing and the possession of the divinely specified qualifications is another. The one or many who make the appointment of overseers may be Timothy, Titus, or the church of any locality, and if they do so according to the instructions of the Holy Spirit as given by Paul to Timothy, then the appointment is as really of the Spirit as if he had done it personally, upon the principle that whatever is done according to his will by any of his servants is done by himself.

A church therefore claiming to be a church of God without elders has no claim to be an organized church, as no church that we read of was in such a state. A church with only one elder or bishop is not one according to the Scriptures. A church with any number of elders or bishops who have not the divinely given qualifications is not one according to the mind of God, and cannot accomplish the purpose for which he called them out.

In Paul's instructions to Timothy there is no mention of who will make the appointment of the bishops. He left Titus in Crete that he should set in order the things that were wanting and ordains elders in every church. Thus it is clear Titus could do and we judge that in doing so he would consult the churches in the different places as to who among them had the different qualifications named by Paul. But again it is also evident that in taking the judgment of any company called out to inherit God's kingdom that the judgment of the experienced among them would be of more value than of the young so that in practice it would come naturally that the elders in years would of themselves decide who of themselves were in possession of the qualifications named. One newly converted to the faith or one who had little knowledge of the elders among them would necessarily be diffident in giving an opinion. Although there was therefore the utmost freedom for these young persons to do so, their own conscious youth and ignorance would induce them to silence or to modesty in giving their opinions. Thus the best judgment of the whole body would be reached and the result approved of by God because the spirit of his instruction was obeyed.

It is plain therefore that the whole body of the believers in any place decides who of their number possess the qualifications for being overseers or bishops. I have not referred to the election of one bishop or elder, as in every case of appointment referred to the terms are plural and not singular. For any man therefore to call himself the elder of a church or a group of churches is to assume a title wholly foreign to the letter and spirit of both Old and New Testament usage. The one man elder, or the one man bishop, or overseer of the church of God is wrong in principle and must be wrong and hurtful in practice.

Dear Restitution:

Mr. Talmage, in his discourse on "hunting for immortal souls," as reported in the N. Y. Witness, June 29th, speaks of the "bodies and souls of immortal men." He says, "If you go out to hunt for immortal souls, not only bring them down under the arrow of the gospel, but bring them into the church of God," etc. Now we would like to have this great sensational preacher turn mighty hunter before the Lord and hunt for one passage in all the Bible that speaks of any "immortal soul" or "immortal men." That declares that man is mortal and corruptible. See Job, and Paul's letter to the Romans, first chapter, that "God only hath immortality," and that Christ is King Immortal. The Bible teaches mortal men "to seek for immortality by patient continuance in well-doing," and gives us the cheering promise that those who do thus seek shall put on immortality at the resurrection of the just. We need an army of hunters who will proclaim the true gospel of immortality and eternal life as brought to light by Christ and the apostles. E. HOYT.

A remarkable meteorite fell in Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn, on July 17. A violent thunder-storm broke over the city soon after noon on that day, with high winds. As some persons stood on the corner of Fulton and Troy avenues, watching the vivid flashes of lightning, they observed an object about the size of a man's head descending apparently from the sky. It came swiftly, and struck the earth with terrific force. It was broken into fragments by the concussion, and there was a rush to secure pieces of it, which have been preserved as curiosities. The substance is of a vivid green color, and porous. When first secured it was soft and plastic, taking the impress of the fingers. After remaining over a day it became brittle and friable. It resembles precisely in appearance the green deposit left on a battery. At first it was thought that the lightning had struck a copper wire or roof, had melted portions of it, and, oxidising it, had carried it to a great distance. Analysis, however, showed its meteoric origin, as it gave with the reagents and the blowpipe unmistakable evidence of the presence of cobalt and nickel, which twin metals are always found in meteorites. There were no traces of copper and faint indications of iron. From the quantity of the material it is thought that the ball when intact must have weighed twenty pounds. Portions have been sent to the Smithsonian Institution. Happily the meteorite did not strike anyone, or it would certainly have caused death. The descent of so formidible a missile reminds us of the boundless resources which God holds in his hand for the execution of the judgments in the last days. Rev. xvi. 21.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months the same rate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION stands for the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

DIVIDED SUFFERINGS.

"For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him but also to suffer for his sake." Phil. i. 29. "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." Col. i. 24.

Unquestionably the idea of divided sufferings must have been familiar to the Apostle Paul from the instructions he received from Gamaliel. In an article in the Hebraica for July, entitled, "Old Testament Passages Messianically Applied by the Great Synagogue," by B. Pick, Ph. D., we have grounds for this conclusion. By way of illustration we quote: "But he was wounded for our transgression, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Isa. liii. 5. Rav Huna, in the name of Acha, said, The chastisements (or afflictions) were divided into three parts—one to David and the fathers, and one to the rebellious generations, and one to King Messiah."

For himself David says, "I am afflicted very much; quicken me, O Lord, according unto thy word." Psa. cxix. 107. Speaking of rebellious Israel it is said, "In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them." Isa. lxiii. 9. In divided sufferings between the divine head and the members of the redeemed body, it is encouraging to remember that "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." If we patiently share his sufferings we shall be sharers in his glory when he is revealed in all the glory of his Father. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone,
Leads to the land where sorrows are unknown;
No traveller ever yet that road trod
That finds not thorns and briers in the road."

THE CONTINUING SOUL.

In the July number of Hebraica is a somewhat lengthy notice of a New Hebrew Dictionary. This dictionary, by S. J. Finn, purports to be, when finished, a complete thesaurus of the entire Hebrew language. The writer of the notice in Hebraica is Rabbi B. Felsenthal, Ph. D., of Chicago. A complete dictionary of the Hebrew language must contain many words not used in the Scriptures of the Old Testament. Our attention is directed in the notice to quite a number of these terms. To one of these words we wish particularly to direct the attention of our readers. It is well known that there is no term in the earliest Hebrew tongue equivalent to the Greek athanatos, athanasia, or to the Latin immortalis, or to the English immortal as derived from the Latin. The discussions of the later ages have made it necessary to invent some term for the Neo-Hebraic expressive of this word. We find then that the connected words "immortality of the soul" is expressed in modern Hebrew, "the continuance of the soul," הַשְׁאָרַת הַנֶּפֶשׁ. The Hebrew radix, שָׁאַר, meaning to remain, be left, to continue, and its derivations occur a great many times in the Hebrew of the Old Testament, but in no single instance is any form of the word ever connected with the Hebrew נֶפֶשׁ, soul, or life, as this word is often rendered. It is not, however, to discuss any doctrines that we call attention to this subject, but rather to show that there is a vitality in the Hebrew language, as there is a vitality in the scattered nation. The expressive roots of the grand old tongue are capable of growth and expansion sufficient to meet all the requirements of the vast literature of the times. If theologically an error, still the expression, immortal soul, is an established phrase, and the idea is certainly well represented in its Hebrew form by the combination, continuing soul. Immortality, or the continuance-of-the soul, is conditional, and dependent upon the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. Hebrew philology probably better content itself with using the inspired language, עוֹלָם, life everlasting, Dan. xii., 2, when teaching theology.

Selections.

THE FINAL RESIDENCE OF THE REDEEMED.

The final residence of the redeemed: where is it? Is it on high? Up yonder? Above the sky? Or some remote orb? So we are often told. But we are no wiser; for, after all, no locality is designated.

The final residence of the redeemed is this earth. That is the doctrine of the Bible everywhere. Not this earth, as it now is, polluted by sin and banned by the cursed, but this earth as it shall be after the devil and his angels, sin and death and the grave, have been cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, and when it is restituted to purity, emerged from the plastic wing of the Spirit brooding over chaos,—sparkling with brighter jewelry than the pristine dewy brilliants of holiness, bridal-robed in the smiles of him who redeemed it with his blood, and vocal with his praise, never to be disturbed by the sin of man; then this earth will be the fit and final home of the redeemed.

This is distinctly taught in God's covenant with Abraham, when he says: "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting (eternal) possession; and I will be their God." This land Abraham and his seed have not yet got; but, to secure the fulfilment of this covenant, God has sworn that he will bring them up out of their graves that they may possess it. From this covenant with Abraham, and which was renewed with Isaac and Jacob and their seed after them, it is manifest that this earth is to be their everlasting residence. Could God have declared it in stronger terms? If they are to inhabit the earth forever, after they are raised from the dead, or come up out of their graves, if then it is to be given to them for an everlasting possession, it is evident this earth must be the place of their everlasting residence. So says Ezekiel, xliii. 3, 25, "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children (perpetual generations) forever (to eternity), and my servant David (or the beloved, that is, Christ) shall be their Prince forever (or eternally)." If language could teach eternal residence anywhere, this teaches the eternal residence of the resurrected children of Abraham in Canaan upon this earth; for it is most positively declared by Jehovah, that they and their children's children, through unceasing generations, shall dwell therein forever. But all the saved are to be with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom: consequently, this earth will be the kingdom and the final residence of the saints.

The same doctrine is clearly taught by Dan. vii. 27, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." The kingdom under the whole heaven must mean this earth, for we know of no other kingdom under the heaven, and the Bible speaks of none, and this kingdom is to be given to the saints. It is peculiarly worthy of notice that this kingdom is not on high, nor above the heavens, nor away up yonder, as the kingdom of the saints is frequently said to be, but under the heavens. Here the common teaching of men and that of the Spirit of God are in direct conflict. Men say the final residence of the redeemed is on high, above the heavens, somewhere (but they know not where) in the unexplored regions of space; but Daniel, by the Spirit, positively teaches it is under the heavens; that is, the kingdom which the God of heaven shall set up upon this earth, and which shall never be destroyed, but which shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms upon earth, and which shall stand forever or to eternity. The same doctrine is taught by John in Rev. xi. 15, "The kingdoms of this world—earth—are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ: and he shall reign for ever and ever." It is a common saying, and often used to conceal our ignorance, "Where Christ is, there will be heaven." We admit the truth; it is herein taught that the kingdoms, not of a world on high, or above the sky, but of this world, earth, are to become the kingdom of Christ, and that here he is to reign for ever and ever, or to eternity and eternity. If, then, Christ is to be on this earth forever, when renewed, and his dwelling-place is to be the dwelling-place of the redeemed, then beyond all controversy this earth is to be the final dwelling-place of his saints.

This doctrine is everywhere taught in the Prophets, the Psalms, the Gospels, the Epistles, and Revelation of John: but we shall not attempt at present to present it as exhibited in these. Enough has been said to convince every unprejudiced student of the Bible, that this earth, restituted at the time of the restitution of all things, will be the final home and everlasting dwelling-place of the redeemed.

Instead, then, of looking for a home beyond the skies, to which we are to be taken by Christ after the judgment, of which the Bible says not a word (for it never says that Christ will leave this earth after he comes to judgment), let us be looking for the renewal of this earth, which shall be accomplished at the times of the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, and for which prophets and apostles, according to the promise of God, with one hope and faith, looked: for this will be our glorious dwelling-place forever. Then his tabernacle will be with us, and our communion with him will be more intimate than that of Adam and Eve with him in Paradise before the fall. Here, on this earth, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, with his glorious Bride,—the redeemed children of men,—will dwell for ever and ever.—Prophetic Times.

The Jews in Palestine.

Encouraging reports are sent home by Mr. D. C. Joseph, who is now in the Holy Land. He writes: "Although it is only a little more than a fortnight since the Lord brought me to the Holy Land, I have seen sufficient to enable me to fill a volume. It causes the heart to leap with joy to see the readiness of the Jews to listen to the preaching of the gospel. The bitter aversion against Christ has almost disappeared, and the open doors for the servant of God are an encouragement to expect greater things yet to come. Although it is not quite a year since I first visited Jerusalem, the great change which we found is something surprising. Property is rising in price, for about a mile and a half on the Jaffa road very fine buildings are erected, and the city spreads itself as far as the Damascus gate near 'Galgato.'

"Although there is now a great restriction in the emigration of the Jews, nevertheless the more the Turkish Government forbids the entrance of the Jews to Palestine, the more they flock to it. Alas! as it was with the children of Israel in the time of Moses, so it is now. The poor Jew is oppressed and persecuted by the people of the land. But the pain is even greater when converted Jews are slighted by the Christians. There is an anti-Semitic spirit, not only against the unconverted Jew, but also against the converted Israelite. We ask prayer that that feeling may be uprooted from the hearts of men.

"The distress is great among the unbelieving Jews, but we are more concerned about the converted Jews who are starving in the city. There is very little provision made for the convert. We earnestly desire to be able to at least give them a night's lodging and a morsel of bread.

Samaria Now and in Prophecy.

Rev. G. T. Sweeny, writing to the Christian-Evangelist under date of April 22, 1887, respecting a place that was for a long time the capital of the ten tribes of Israel, says:—"The modern name of Samaria is Sebastiyeh, which is a corruption of Sebaste, which name was applied to it by Herod. It is situated upon the hill of Samaria, and is nothing but a group of dirty houses. The fences are all made of cactus plants, which grow to great size and are very effective as fences. As at Shiloh, so at Samaria, the utter desolation of this once proud city brings to mind the prophecy of God against it; 'Samaria shall become desolate, for she hath rebelled against her God.' 'I will make Samaria as a heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard, and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and will discover the foundations thereof.'... The street of columns running around the hillside presented to us the greatest attraction, and as Mr. Thompson has given us a fine description, I will take the liberty to quote: 'The remains of the ancient city consist mainly of colonnades, which certainly date back to the time of the Herods, and perhaps many of the columns are much older. The Grand Colonnade runs along the south side of the hill down a broad terrace, which descends rapidly towards the present village. The number of columns, whole or broken, along this line is nearly one hundred, and many others lie scattered about on lower terraces. They are of various sizes and quite irregularly arranged, but when perfect it must have been a splendid colonnade. The entire hill is covered with rubbish, indicating the existence and repeated destruction of a large city."

TEMPERANCE.

THE DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

The woman that, in her youth and modesty and purity and beauty, put her maiden hand into his before the altar of God, and swore away to him her young heart and her young love; the woman who had the trust in him to take him for ever and for aye; the woman who, if you will, had the confiding folly to bind up with him all the dreams that ever she had of happiness, or peace, or joy in this world; the woman that said to him, "Next to God, and after God, I will let thee into my heart, and love thee and thee alone;" this is the woman, and her children and his children, upon whom the drunkard brings to bear the most terrible of all calamities—poverty, blighted beauty, premature old age, misery, heart-breaking, sleepless eyes, broken hearts, ragged, wretched poverty of the direst form, the woman whom he swore to love, and to honor, and to cherish, and to render her the homage of his true and manly affection! O my friends, every other sin that a man may commit may bring against him the cry of some soul scandalized, but the drunkard's soul must hear the accusing voice of the passionate cry of misery wrung from the broken heart, and the curse laid at the foot of the altar, where that young heart was given away.

WHO ARE THE SUFFERERS?

The most tragic pages of human history will not be written until the agonies inflicted by the saloons upon the mothers, wives, sisters and children of drunkards have been portrayed. That can be never fully done. The sufferings of these victims of a fiendish traffic are too horrible to be fully described. The drink shop curses rests with crushing force upon women. The horrors to which the drink shop exposes them are worse than those of slavery. The suffering of the wives and daughters of drinking men are more acute and dreadful than any others experienced in this world. The drink shop turns men into wild beasts, and then lets them loose upon their families. A living man chained to a putrescent corpse is not more terribly situated than the wives of drunkards. Unable to escape the close relationships of wifehood, they are constantly exposed to brutalities so revolting and heart-rending that their very existence is a prolonged tragedy. Children born with an inherited appetite for drink, of refined, pure mothers, tell a story of the beastliness of drunken fathers and of marital misery that we shudder to think of and dare not describe. Hell itself cannot be worse than the lives of such wives with such husbands. Vivisection has aroused a great deal of indignation; but what is the torture of a few animals in the name of science in comparison with the vivisection of the hearts of wives and mothers which goes on daily under the operation of the drink shop.

The Unsealed Book.

John had about completed the volume. What shall he do with it? Fold it up and lay it away for future ages? Nay; seal it not (Rev. xxii. 10). Place it immediately in the hands of the church. Let her read and understand. She is entering into the events depicted so vividly in white and red and black. This will be her chart on the tempestuous seas; a light that will ever flash upon the distant haven. The Revelation is a readable book. No human mind can understand it all; yet any mind can understand it well. The greatest may not translate the symbols, but the least can feed on the pastures. The strongest may not go deep enough to bring up the pearls, but the weakest can sip the cream. The most scholarly may not agree upon the seals, the trumpets, and the vials; but all must be assured of the final victory awaiting the church, and the crown of life for the faithful.—J. O. M'Peters.

In Prov. xxii. 6 we read: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." No Scripture is more often quoted than this. As the verse reads in our English Bible, it declares that the child will follow the path of duty if we bring him up therein. But the Hebrew conveys a very different idea. It says: "Train up a child according to his way, etc." It is a proverb of educational economy, not of the religious life. The vast majority of the proverbs are economic and not religious. This one enjoins upon parents to note what the special bent or taste of the child is, and to use that in determining its education.—Howard Crosby.

Youth's Column.

What is Home?

Home is not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with artless the heart hath builded.
Home! Go watch the faithful dove
Sail beneath the heavens above us;
Home is where there's one we love:
Home is where there's one to love us.

Home's not merely roof and room,
It needs something to endear it;
Home is where the heart can bloom,
Where there's some kind heart to cheer it;
What is home with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet, and only sweet,
Where there's one we love to meet us!

A Merited Rebuke.

One evening during the "rush hour" on the Brooklyn bridge a young woman, neat and tastefully dressed, succeeded by some strange oversight of the man in securing a seat in one of the cars. As the train passed the clock on an adjoining building she glanced at it, and then took out a handsome gold watch, evidently with the intention of comparing the two time pieces. Two young men who were standing in front of her observed the action, and one of them observed to the other in a sneering tone:

"I say, Fred, we must throw away our old silver watches and buy ourselves gold ones."

The young woman looked up with the quiet comment:

"Young man, evidently you had a poor bringing up, or else you have forgotten your early training."

The youth's face turned scarlet, much to the amusement and delight of the surrounding passengers, who had overheard these remarks. If ever a person looked as if he would like the floor to open and let him through it was this would be smart young man.—New York Tribune.

True Politeness.

A kind heart is the first essential of true politeness. The other day we saw a poor woman, her arms laden with bundles, trying to open the lid of a street letter-box. Dozens of people jostled by her without offering to help, but presently a finely-dressed young lady came along, who, with her daintily gloved hand, lifted the lid, then smiled and passed on, as if she were in the habit of being thoughtful for others. The same spirit characterized the following act, told in the Christian Advocate.

An aged truckman bent under the weight of a big roll of carpet. His hale-hook fell from his hand and bounded into the gutter out of reach. Twenty idle clerks and salesmen saw the old man's predicament, and smiled at his look of bewilderment. No one ventured to help him.

A fashionable dressed young woman came along, took in the situation at a glance, and without looking to the right or left, stepped into the gutter, picked up the hook in her dainty, gloved fingers, and handed it to the man with a pleasant smile.

The idlers looked at each other, and at the fair young woman. The old truckman, in a violent effort to express his thanks, lost his hat. It rolled into the gutter where the hook had been.

This was almost too much for any woman, young or past, but this New York girl was equal to the occasion.

Into the gutter she tripped again and got the hat. When she handed it to the truckman, a happy smile was seen to play about her lips. "God bless ye, miss," the old man said, as the fair maiden turned her back on the idlers, and went on her way.

Fine Manners.

No one who has any appreciation of grace and beauty in nature or in art can fail to recognize the charm of fine manners in an individual. We rejoice in them as we do in a lovely sunset view, or a beautiful piece of deep enough to bring up the pearls, but the weakest can sip the cream. The most scholarly may not agree upon the seals, the trumpets, and the vials; but all must be assured of the final victory awaiting the church, and the crown of life for the faithful.—J. O. M'Peters.

In Prov. xxii. 6 we read: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." No Scripture is more often quoted than this. As the verse reads in our English Bible, it declares that the child will follow the path of duty if we bring him up therein. But the Hebrew conveys a very different idea. It says: "Train up a child according to his way, etc." It is a proverb of educational economy, not of the religious life. The vast majority of the proverbs are economic and not religious. This one enjoins upon parents to note what the special bent or taste of the child is, and to use that in determining its education.—Howard Crosby.

a counterfeit of the true mental or moral condition of a man. When adopted as a veil to hide what is there, however ingenious the artifice, the beauty and grace of truly fine manners cannot be reached. There will always be an indescribable something to dim their lustre and cast suspicion on their verity. The bland courtesy which covers up dislike or indifference cannot command absolute trust; the gracious condescension which is often adopted to hide a mild contempt generally betrays it in the end. The finest manners are those which express, frankly and unconsciously, the actual presence of fine qualities in their most delicate shades. All mere imitations of them, where they do not exist—all artificial airs and graces for the sake of appearances are mere mannerisms, which soon become apparent and disclose what they are intended to hide. If fine manners require the expression of the good, they equally demand the repression of the evil.

Anger, heat, exaggeration, violence, ill-nature, selfishness, are all foes to good manners. Self-control and self-respect will diminish them by forbidding them to vent themselves. Kept in subjection, they will subside; allowed free expression, they will become intolerable. The presence of good manners is nowhere more needed or more effective than in the household, and perhaps nowhere more rare. Wherever familiarity exists there is a tendency to lose the check upon selfish conduct which the presence of strangers involuntarily produces. Many persons who are kind and courteous in company are rude and careless with those whom they love best. Emerson says, "Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices," and certainly nothing can more thoroughly secure the harmony and peace of the family circle than the habit of making small sacrifices one for another. Children thus learn good manners in the best and most natural way, and habits thus acquired will never leave them. Courtesy and kindliness will never lose their power or their charm, and while all spurious imitations of them are to be despised, their real presence should be honored and cherished by all.—The Voice.

BIBLE LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.

Lesson 4.

Lesson Chapter, Eph. i.

"THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM."

Gospel is a Saxon word meaning God's spell, or the word of God, embracing the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus the anointed, Acts viii. 12 (Diaglott translation), and the joyful news that salvation and an inheritance in that kingdom may be obtained through faith and obedience. The word occurs seventy-six times, and it is translated to proclaim good news, fifty-six times.

We get from the same root the word, evangelist, a gospeler, or gospeliser. Acts xxi. 8; Eph. iv. 11; 2 Tim. iv. 5.

The gospel was preached to Abraham by an angel. Gen. xxii. 15–18; Gal. iii. 8. The Old Testament prophecies speak of Christ's coming and kingdom.

The New Testament opens with the fulfilment of these prophecies. The wise men enquire, who is he that is born King of the Jews. Matt. ii. 2. John the Baptist says, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand."

We find Jesus preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Mark i. 14. This was his subject all through his ministry. He instructed his disciples to preach the gospel of the kingdom. This theme in all its phases was ever upon their lips. They never were without a subject, like some modern preachers who wonder all week what they will preach about, and the people wonder all the next week what they did preach about.

Let us see what this gospel of the kingdom means. A kingdom implies 1. A king; 2. Territory; 3. Subjects; 4. Joint-rulers with Christ.

1. Christ shall reign as King. Zech. ix. 9; Psa. xxii. 27, 28; Rev. xi. 15.

2. It shall be established under the whole heaven. Dan. vii. 27; Ivii. 13, 14; Psalm. lxxii. 8.

3. The subjects of the kingdom shall be the nations. Psa. ii. 8–12. See again Psalm xxii. 27, 28; notice that the world, is the place or territory of the kingdom, that the ends of the world are to turn to the Lord; the Lord to be governor and all nations to worship or pay homage to him. Also notice Rev. ii. 26, that the overcomers are to have power over the nations and in Psalm lxxii. 11, 17, that all kings and nations are to serve Christ, all nations to call him blessed.

4. The joint-rulers of the kingdom shall be the saints. Rom. viii. 17; Dan. vii. 18; Luke xii. 32; Rev. v. 9–11; Rev. ii. 26; Rev. iii. 21.

Some take the position that the kingdom is already set up, but we do not see the things taking place that the prophets foretold when Christ should reign. Isa. xl. 4–10; Isa. xv. 8, 9; Isa. lxv. 18–21.

The hope of Christ's return to set up his kingdom, was what cheered the disciples and early Christians. It should be our hope, as we find no other hope in the Bible. Read the promises of the kingdom. Matt. xxv. 34; Luke xii. 32; xix. 12, 13; xxii. 29, 30; James ii. 5; Peter i. 3, 4, 5, 11.

The Coming One.

While sentence was still sounding in the ears of the guilty pair, behold! the promise of himself is given! "Hear, O heavens! and give ear, O earth!—for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," the wounded seed of the poor sinful woman is to rise victorious, and bruise the serpent's head. "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Yes, glory to God! that bright and Morning Star, that shone out six thousand years ago, shedding its hopeful rays over this sin-stricken earth, has come on descending like a bright comet, more and more clear as it approaches the earth. So we distinctly trace—"the seed of the woman;" then, farther on—"the seed of Abraham;" and, farther still—"the seed of David;" and, still more near—"the virgin's seed,"—until heaven opens, and the Son of man is proclaimed the beloved Son of God.—Wm. C. Baynes.

Indiana State Fair.

We are reminded at this early day of this approaching annual event, commencing September 19th, by the bright and cheerful posters to be seen everywhere, and a call at the business office plainly demonstrates that the Fair season will soon be upon us. The number of applications for exhibition space, sales of privileges, and the amount of mail matter gives every encouragement for success, and something more. Improvements are being made, more special exhibition buildings erected, a new roof on the main exhibition hall and the grounds enlarged.

The Indiana State Fair is now recognized as the centre of the great breeding grounds of improved stock. Herds of improved cattle were shown at the last Fair from nine different States. Eighteen States and the Canadas were represented, and the show of live stock and machinery never excelled on the continent.

An exhibitor making an application for space recently, remarked: "We have got to make an exhibition to keep up with the times or be considered as dead. The people come to see the improvements; the progressive men of the community attend the State Fair, in fact, can not afford to stay away, and the State Fair is doing more good for the industrial community than any other influence."

"The Unpeasable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

YEARNING FOR THE END.

Breathe soft and low, O whispering wind,
Above the tangled grasses deep,
Where those who loved me long ago
Forgot the world and went to sleep.
No towering shaft or sculptured urn,
Or mausoleum's empty pride,
Tells, to the curious passer-by,
Their virtues, or the time they died.

I count the old, familiar names,
O'ergrown with moss and lichen gray,
Where tangled briars and creeping vines
Across the crumbled tablets stray.
The summer's sky is softly blue;
The birds still sing the sweet old strain;
But something from the summer-time
Is gone, that will not come again.

So many voices have been hushed,
So many songs have ceased for aye,
So many hands I used to touch
Are folded over hearts of clay!
The busy world recedes from me;
I shake to hear its praise or blame:
The mossy marbles echo back
No hollow sound of empty fame.

I only know, that calm and still
They sleep, beyond life's woe and weal;
Beyond the fleet of sailing clouds,
Beyond the shadow of the vale.
I only feel, that, tired and worn,
I hail upon the highway bare.
And gaze with yearning eyes, beyond,
On fields that shine supremely fair.

THE GROWTH UP JERUSALEM.

About one mile west of Jerusalem, the country is higher than Jerusalem itself; and formerly, when the traveller had reached this point, he could see the walls, domes, and minarets of the city resting against the Mount of Olives, which formed a kind of background in the east. Many of the old pictures of Jerusalem give this view, which is now incorrect, because, during the past ten or twenty years, this section has been covered with houses, which prevent the city from being seen. Formerly, as one drew near to the city, he would, for several hundred yards, pass along under the walls; but now, modern shops, stores, and houses, have been built between the road and the walls, and the sight of these is neither imposing nor impressive to a newcomer. Above these buildings, the top of the wall appears, which the traveller will notice, if his attention happens to be called to it.

These remarks apply to the section just outside the Jaffa Gate, through which most of the travel and traffic enters Jerusalem. Many travellers arrive in the night; many, in the early morning, after an all-night's ride; or in the evening, after an all-day's ride,—a tedious journey, whenever made,—when they are so nearly exhausted that they think of little else than a place to rest. Probably not one traveller in five hundred has, under these circumstances, any such "profound emotions" as are sometimes purported to have been felt on approaching the Holy City.

Jerusalem has four gates: the Jaffa Gate, on the west; the Damascus Gate, on the north; St. Stephen's Gate on the east; and Zion's Gate, on the south. We do not count the Dung Gate, at the foot of the Tyropean valley, since it is not used for either travel or traffic, and it is with difficulty that a person on horseback can pass through it. These gates have other names: the Jaffa Gate, for instance, is known to the natives as the Gate of Hebron; while the Damascus Gate has two other names,—the Gate of the Column, and the Gate of Victory. The last name is in use among the Moslems. Every new Pasha, and every high Turkish official, who comes to Jerusalem, enters the city for the first time by this gate.

Formerly, this gate was closed at night; but, for the last ten or more years, they have not been thus closed, and access to the city has been free at any time. All the gates have guards, custom house officers, etc.; for the peasants are carefully examined for smuggled goods, and every loaded animal that enters the city must pay a certain tax.

These one hundred and fifty or two hundred buildings that have been erected in this quarter, are scattered over a considerable territory, and give the appearance of a new Jerusalem outside of the old one. People say, "what a wonderful growth;" "Jerusalem is being rebuilt;" "Prophecy is being fulfilled." There is growth, certainly, but I ought to explain what kind of growth it is.

In Boston, for instance, new buildings, improved streets, embellished public and private grounds, indicate the wealth of the city itself. Money has been accumulated in legitimate business, which is expended in these different ways. But in Jerusalem there is no business. No money is made. This apparent growth is not the result of any accumulated wealth, either in the city or in the country. If among these new buildings we should count up the hospitals, asylums, schools, churches, mission premises, houses owned by convents, and consular residences, the number would embrace most of the larger ones. This "growth," therefore, is due largely to money that has been sent to Jerusalem for religious and charitable purposes. This I do not call legitimate growth. Still, I see, in some letters from Palestine, fabulous, exaggerated, and misleading accounts of "the growth of modern Jerusalem."

Jerusalem has no wealth. Fifty or one hundred years ago, it could boast of some wealthy families. Their property has, however, been scattered and reduced, until their descendants of the present generation are either poor, or possessed of barely means enough to support them. The city is poor, the people are impoverished, and half of the inhabitants scarcely know from day to day where they are going to get their daily bread.

But, poor as people and city are, rents are exorbitantly high. Since the houses are built of stone, there is no danger of loss by fire. Hence families having a little money on which they are dependent for support, will build a house with it, because the investment is the very best one they can make. There is no risk, and the high rents insure a good rate of interest.

Only a very well-to-do family can occupy an entire house. In hundreds of cases, a family numbering four to eight persons will occupy but a single room. In a house of six or eight rooms, there will be as many families. They all cook and wash in a large open court, to which each family has access. This fact will give an idea of how crowded some of the houses are. The people are obliged to live in this way, because they have not money enough to hire more room.

It is very expensive building houses in Jerusalem. The first step is to dig a cistern. This costs so much, that the owner will build only a small cistern, when he should build one five times the size. All the families in the house use the water from this cistern. During the rainy season, there is sufficient water; but by May, or the first of June at the latest, the cistern is dry. No rain falls until November or December; consequently, these people must buy water for four or five months. Water is brought in skins, holding on an average three pails full each; and for a skin of water one must pay from five to ten cents. For poor people, this is a very great hardship; consequently, the least possible amount of water is used, and it hardly need be said that indescribable filth abounds.

Supposing some other equally safe means of investing money should be afforded, the building of houses would be checked at once. During the past two or three years, it has in a measure been checked by the government. Permits have to be obtained of the government for the erection of new houses, and even for any repairs, however slight, on an old house. Permits to build new houses are obtained at present—and this has been true for three years past—with very great difficulty, and none whatever can be obtained for any building, edifice, or structure of any kind, that has any connection with a school or church.

One would think, that, if one owned a piece of land, he might be allowed to build on it. The Turkish government does not think so. Moslems can build, and they obtain permits therefore without difficulty; but Christians, and especially foreigners, can not. The government is jealous of foreigners and of foreign influence, and struggles hard against both.

Houses are invariably built of stone, and are much more expensive than one would suppose. Stones have to be quarried, transported on the backs of camels, cut into proper shape, and finally built into walls. If the house is two stories high, and the rooms are large, the walls have to be two and sometimes three feet thick, in order to support the great weight resting upon them. A vast amount of stone and mortar is consumed in making the arches that support the upper floor or the roof, and likewise in the roof itself. The amount of water used in preparing the mortar sometimes costs alone several hundred dollars, if the house is a large one. This water is all brought in skins, as I have described.

It is much less expensive building a house at Jaffa, than at Jerusalem, because along the coast there is a kind of sandstone, which can be cut with ease, and which, though very porous, and apparently fragile, combines with the mortar so as to form a solid mass. Hence, fewer stones are required, and the walls, as compared with those in the houses in Jerusalem, are surprisingly thin. This style of building would not answer in the mountains, where the hard limestone blocks do not absorb the mortar.

Many plans have been suggested for providing cheap houses, but without success. Corrugated iron has been tried in two or three instances, but in the summer the interior of such houses is like an oven. For a few years past, tiles have been imported from France for roofing purposes, and they have been employed in very many of the modern built houses. People object to them, because they do not keep out the heat sufficiently.

It is natural to suppose that the people of that country would have learned, after four thousand years, how to make themselves comfortable in hot weather; and experience has taught them that a stone roof one or two feet thick, resting on stone walls two or three feet thick, is the best protection against the heat of summer. Such houses seem cold in winter, and strangers often complain of dampness, when there is not a particle of dampness about them. They are simply cold; and, while the natives do not mind it, foreigners need a fire much of the time. On the other hand, in the long hot summer these thick stone walls are a great blessing.—Selah Merrill, D. D., L.L.D. in Morning Star.

What May Happen to the Holy Land About April 2, 1889.

The termination of the 2,300 years of Daniel, viii. 14, on the first day of Nisan (March 21, 1844) in its initial commencing fulfilment of the predicted "cleansing of the Sanctuary" of the Holy Land from the "desolating" persecution of the Mohammedan "abomination," was one of the clearest verifications of prophetic interpretations ever known, as we will proceed to explain. And the importance of it to us is that in this initial commencement fulfilment, the 2,300 are to be followed by the additional 45 years (the same as they are undoubtedly followed in their ultimate concluding fulfilment by Daniel's 45 years from the last day of the Passover Week in April, 1856, to the last Passover Week on April 11, 1901), then there will be a termination of these 45 years in such initial fulfilment on Tuesday, April 2, 1889, because that day being the first day of Nisan in 1889, will be exactly 45 years from the first day of Nisan in 1844, which happened in that year to be Thursday, March 21. In such case the event to be expected about April 2, 1889, may be some marked and signal step of progress in the increasing liberation and deliverance of the Holy Land from the Turkish-Mohammedan abomination of desolation; in connection with the mystic "drying up of the Euphrates" in the decay and breaking up of the Turkish-Mohommedan empire. The event may be the separation of the Holy Land, and perhaps also of Syria from Turkey, so as to become practically independent of it.

The reasons why the 2,300 years were understood in their initial commencing fulfilment to end on March 21, 1844, were stated by the Rev. R. Bickersteth as follows:

"The European Powers made the Sultan of Turkey in 1844, promise not to execute persons any longer for becoming converts to Christianity. The causes of this intervention were remarkable. In August, 1843, an Armenian youth who, after, under fear of epunishment, becoming a Turk, had returned to his Christian faith, was put to death. This called for the interposition of the British Government and its serious remonstrances, and produced in November 1843, some promises of terminating such affairs without capital punishment. In December, however, a young Greek, who had become a Mussulman, returned to his own creed as a Greek Christian, at Biligik, adjoining to Brussa, was executed. This taking place in the midst of the correspondence, called forth Lord Aberdeen's decisive letter of January 16. Thus we are indebted to the faithfulness of Greek and Armenian martyrs for this remarkable change.

Turkey even on the 14th of March, 1854, would have put off the European Powers with a statement that the law did not admit of any change, but such measures as were possible, should be taken. The Ambassadors of the European Powers refused to receive this.

At length, on the 21st of March, 1844, the question of religious execution was, as the British Ambassadors observed, "happily, and to all appearance, conclusively settled. The concession has been obtained with great difficulty, and even to the last moment it required the firmness of resolution, inspired by your Lordship's instructions to overcome the obstacles which were raised against us." He enclosed in this letter the following "Official declaration, of the Sublime Porte, relinquishing the practice of executions for apostacy: (Translation.)

"It is the special and constant intention of his highness the Sultan, that his cordial relations with the High Powers be preserved, and that a perfect reciprocal friendship be maintained and increased.

"The Sublime Porte engages to take measures to prevent henceforward the execution and putting to death of the Christian who is an apostate.

"March 21, 1844."

To this must be added the following "declaration of his Highness the Sultan to Sir Stratford Canning at his audience on the 22nd of March, 1844.

"Henceforward neither shall Christianity be insulted in my dominions, nor shall Christians be in anyway persecuted for their religion."

The date of the official declaration, March 21, is very remarkable as being in fact the first day of Nisan, the first sacred month of the Jews. And this is the more remarkable, as it is connected with the termination of the remarkable date of 2,300 years, which closed in 1843. The remarks on this date were printed by the Rev. E. Bickersteth in April, 1839, and published in his 'Guide to the Prophecies,' in August, 1839, as follows:

"It will be observed that Ezra is very specific in stating the dates. On the first day of the first month (Nisan in B. C. 457) began he to go up from Babylon (Ezra vii. 9). And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month (Nisan in B. C. 456). Ezra x. 17. The whole time of the return and restoration taking exactly a year.

"The prophecy of this period is in these words: (Dan. vii. 13, 14). 'How long shall be the vision of the daily sacrifice, and of the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days (or evening morning); then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.'

"Ezra's commission for the restoration of the sacrifice (Ezra vii. 15; viii. 35), was 457 years before Christ. The period of a year was occupied in this work and his return, that is to the first day of Nisan 456 B. C. (Ezra. vi. 9; x. 17). The restoration of sacrifice continued, with slight exceptions, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, since which Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles, to the period of March 21, 1844; this period according to the Jewish year, ending March 20, 1844, makes 2,300 years."

On the first Nisan, 1844, the power of the Mohammedans to persecute Christianity passed away, constituting a measurable cleansing of the sanctuary. This is the more remarkable also, as 1844 is the 1,260th year of the Hegira (the date fixed by the Mohammedan Antichrist as the rise of this branch of the apostacy), and so the closing year in Mohammedanism of that remarkable prophetical period 1,260 years. In a letter from Tangiers, in 1844, given in the public journals, speaking of the difficulties besetting the kingdom of Morocco, it is stated: "It seems that the Moors have always been exhorting each other to beware of 1,260 (that is of the Hegira), which, according to our reckoning, is the present year."

The Rev. E. Fysh, M. A., in his "Sure Word of Prophecy" (312 pages) published in 1839, also interpreted the same 391 years as a period of the rise of the Turkish Empire in 1062, the first year of Alp Arslan's reign to its zenith in 1453, and thence again of its gradual decline to 1844. He said: "The Turkish Empire was at its height in 1453, and another period of 391 years will end with its fall in 1844, although its final extermination will not take place until some years later." He also said "In 1898 the Jews will be established in their own land."

Alfred Addis, B. A., in his large volume on Prophecy in 1880, clearly showed that 2,300 years would end in 1843, which, as the Jewish ecclesiastical year, ended on March 20, 1844.—M. Baxter, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

JACOB'S WELL.

This is one of the spots in Palestine whereof all tradition concurs as to its identity. This makes it venerable. And now we are looking down into the well at which Joseph so often watered the flock of his father Jacob. The top has been partly arched over, covering a little space around what we would call the "curb" of the well. The dragoman gave me his strong arm, and let me over this upper and outer rim, and down a few feet to a point where I got a nearer view of the depth below. Explorers who have measured it have found it over a hundred feet deep, but a part of this has been filled up by the stones cast into it.

But how came Jacob to dig such a well? is a question often asked. He was close to the Vale of Shechem, which is full of streams. What need of boring a hundred feet through the solid rock to find what a mile or two distant was running away in exhaustless abundance? The answer is, that the inhabitants of the towns and the shepherds of the plains had little to do with each other, and even might be in open feud. In Christ's time, "the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans," and seventeen hundred years before, a progenitor of the Hebrew race may have been to them a stranger and an alien. The people of Shechem might be friendly today and enemies tomorrow; and though they might have water flowing through their city, they might at any moment shut it off from him. With all his flocks and herds, he could not be dependent on such an uncertain supply. And so he dug his well, "and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle." The woman of Samaria who came here to draw water, had probably been out on the plain tending the flocks, and at the sixth hour—noon—had no other spring to go to but Jacob's well.

But the chief interest of this spot is, that one greater than Jacob or Joseph has been here. On this very ground, sitting where we now sit, our Savior sat and talked with that woman of Samaria, revealing to her astonished eyes that in the worship of God the place matters little; that "neither in this mountain," looking up to Gerizim, which rose above him, "nor yet at Jerusalem," shall men "worship the Father;" for that "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth.—H. M. Field, D. D.

The Pool of Siloam.

A vial of water from this celebrated Pool stands before us. It was given us by the Rev. Leander Thompson, of No. Woburn, Mass., who was once a missionary in the Holy Land. The water is so clear that it looks as though a draught of it might be "cool" and refreshing in a hot day; yet the following description of the Pool, which Mr. Z. T. Sweeney sends to the Christian-Evangelist under date of April 11, 1887, does not make us long for a drink of it:—

"The Pool of Siloam lies across the Kidron from the village [of Siloam], and is therefore just outside the Jerusalem wall. It is still flowing and the villagers obtain their water supply from it. It is, however, in a ruinous state of decay. The dog-fennel and other weeds line its crumbling banks and all sorts of rubbish have fallen in it. I can never again sing 'with the spirit,' the sentiment that formerly fired my soul,

"By cool Siloam's shady rill,
How fair the lily grows!"

There is neither 'lily fair' nor 'dewy rose' anywhere to be seen; but notwithstanding its present repulsive appearance, I feel that it must have appeared very beautiful to the poor blind man to whom our Savior said: 'Go, wash in the Pool of Siloam (which is, by interpretation, Sent). He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.' To the south of the Pool stands an old mulberry tree, protected by an enclosure of stones. It is called 'Isaiah's Tree,' because this is supposed to be the spot where the prophet Isaiah was sawn asunder in the presence of King Manasseh."

Soap, as a civilizing agent, is having great success in the Holy Land, it is said. A large soap factory has been established on the site of the ancient Sachem, and the people are beginning to use it on their persons instead of trying to eat it as they did at first. Along with the introduction of soap other reforms are going on. Bethlehem has been rebuilt, and the streets are lighted with gas. Cesarea is having a building boom. Nazareth is becoming the headquarters of big olive oil speculators. Corner lots in Joppa are going up with a rush, and real estate in Mount Carmel is largely held by speculators for an advance. The ladies of Jerusalem take all the Persian fashion journals, and know all about the latest styles of hair dressing.—Boston Journal.

I have made a thousand dollars during the last three months," said a saloon keeper boastfully to a crowd of his fellow townsmen. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" "You have made wretched homes—women and children poor and sick and weary of life. You have made my two sons drunkards," continued the speaker with trembling earnestness. "You have made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. Oh, yes, you have made much—more than I can reckon up—but you'll get the full account some day."

Will you help us by getting one or two Trial Subscribers?

"FOLLOW ME."

"And Jesus, walking by the Sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him." Matt. iv. 18-20.

No one who believes in and loves Christ will question the fact that it is always the best thing we can do, to ascertain and carry out the mind and will of Christ as constantly as may be; in other words—"Follow me." This was spoken to the apostles, yet there is no question but what it as truly applies to all his disciples, in every age and every clime, to every one, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free; possessing ten talents or one, all who call Jesus Lord by the Holy Spirit, all who partake of his grace and share his blessing. In this matter I think the laity in the church are wont to excuse themselves quite too much. If we examine God's word carefully, shall not we discover that all are expected to labor in the vineyard—working for the Master—working directly too as much as possible and as far as circumstances will allow, to save men—bringing sheaves to Jesus?

Following Christ fully, constantly, lovingly; and then as an outgrowth of this we shall enjoy the blessing of his promise, become fishers of men—win souls to Jesus. This is the great evangelistic work of every child of God; of every one who calls on the Lord out of a pure heart. But let all know that as a pre-requisite, a matter all important, we must as the apostle says of his Corinthian brethren "first give their own selves to the Lord." 2 Cor. viii. 5. Having thus laid the foundation on and in Christ, all are to go forth proclaiming by word and deed, at all times, under all circumstances, and also in all ways to all men, the world wide message of the forerunner of our Lord, "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." John i. 29.

In carrying out the "high and holy calling" in manner most effectual, who shall prescribe the mode? Who shall set this matter before us in all its simplicity and godly sincerity" but Jesus and his apostles? As they did, so should we do (abating circumstances); they taught the people individually and collectively; in "Simon's house," "by the river side," at Samaria's well, on the mount, in the synagogues and in the temple. Just as persistent also was Philip in preaching the gospel to the eunuch; as was Peter on the day of Pentecost. The same unction of God too was necessary and realized as well on one occasion as on the other.

Neither was this law confined to the apostles, as we are informed in Acts xi. 19; "Now they that were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, Acts viii. 1, traveled as far as Phenice and Cyprus, and Antioch preaching the word," etc. Persecution drove them out. Perhaps faithfulness to God might cause some of us also to leave all for the Master and induce labor to save men, which to those all mixed up with worldly affairs would appear almost suicidal! In seeking to save men I fear we have been using means too indirect, indoctrinating them instead of appealing directly to their innate or inwrought (by the Spirit) perceptions of truth, and making this appeal from hearts melted down and overflowing with the love of God. Most men know more than they are free to practice, and it seems as foolish to encumber ourselves with such knowledge as for men to accumulate money to lay aside and rust in their coffers. This, as James tells us, (v. 1; 1-5) is the sin of the age. "Knowledge (theological as well as any other) puffeth up, but charity edifieth, and if any man thinketh that he knoweth anything ("esteemeth himself to be wise") he knoweth nothing yet, as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him." (1 Cor. viii. 2, 3).

The great want of the church is an indwelling, living Christ. This would make all Bible truth acceptable when presented in its proper order and place. To a soul overflowing with love for the Master and good will to all his children, no Bible subject will be treated in an unchristian manner. Remember this, brethren, and seek by love to draw men to people into the truth as it is in Jesus. Heat is genial. Cold is repellant. One who cannot be drawn, is not worth driving. Our harvest work is short, let us then concentrate our forces that our labor be not in vain in the Lord, and so we come at the sound of the "harvest home" bringing our sheaves with us.—A. Boynton, in Herald of Life.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and Kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth! This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 159 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

How to Read the Bible.

There are those who have read the Bible through, in course, from five times to twenty, who have never studied the Bible, and who have never gained an appreciable understanding of a single text in the Bible. A fuller sense of the special teachings of the Bible can be gained through the careful studying of one verse at a time in the Bible, than through the reading of an entire chapter of the Bible every day for ten consecutive years, without close attention to its particular meaning. But Bible reading in course, and Bible studying, text by text, can easily be combined. Let him who reads a chapter daily always stop, after he has read through his chapter, and pick out the verse, or one clause of a verse, which he deems most worthy of special attention at that time. Then let him study that verse as best he can; or, at all events, let him bear it in mind for meditation until he comes again to the Bible for his daily reading. By doing this, a man will be kept from that rote-reading, or that thoughtless reading, which leaves no impression of a single noteworthy passage in his Bible portion for the day.

To the Scattered Ones in Indiana.

Having been chosen by the committee appointed at the June Conference as Evangelist to visit churches not belonging to the Indiana State Conference, and other places where we have no organization, I take this means of finding out your whereabouts. To such I will say, if you will address me at once, giving location, etc., I will try and visit you before the annual conference which will convene in September. To isolated brethren, where the Abrahamic faith is not preached, I will say, If you can arrange a place to hold a series of meetings, and believe that good may be accomplished, address me at once, and arrangements will be made to be with you as long as the interest may demand. Truly, "the harvest is great but the laborers are few." "Let us labor therefore that we may enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God." Address,

L. E. CONNER,
Miami Co. Macy, Ind.

National Conference.

The committee appointed at the recent conference at Antioch to correspond with State Conferences in the matter of a proposed National Conference composed of delegates from each State, recommend and request that our conferences everywhere at their next meeting consider the question of a National Conference, and upon approval at once appoint delegates thereto; they also invite correspondence relative to the proposed National Conference, which will receive attention if addressed to the chairman of the committee at Plymouth, Ind.

A. P. HARSH,
Chairman.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "8" and reads "Jny8" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1888. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE NATURAL AND THE SPIRITUAL.

A little seed by the way-side thrown,
Where the sun's rays fall and the rain comes down;
A little bud through the soft earth driven,
A little stem that points up to heaven;
A few tender twigs where a bird may rest,
A tuft where a sparrow may build her nest;
A sapling growing up tall and wide,
A tree that the flocks and herds gather beside;
A shelter and shade on the arid plain,
And the hurricane sends at its boughs in vain.

A little truth, but expressed in sound,
An honest heart where it lodgement found,
A strange meditation begotten there,
An upward look, and a breathed prayer,
A dawning light, a refreshing dew,
And the cloke on the Spirit are pierced through;
And the soul looks up from its resting place
To bask in the beams of a Father's face;
And to grow and increase as a living tree,
Spreading its branches far and free.
And when by the heat or the storm dismayed,
Multitudes shelter beneath the shade.

Communications.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. THOMAS.—No. 20.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii.42.

It seems very probable that in the Ebionites, we have the origin of Unitarians and Unitarianism. But there are some eminent Unitarians, like Mr. Newman Cappe, of the last generation, who speak out honestly and independently. Mr. Cappe wrote as follows: "I find in the first two chapters of Luke's gospel in particular, no internal trace of forgery or fiction, but many of genuineness and truth. Here are no mistakes, here is nothing inconsistent with manners or with facts.....The narratives of Matthew and Luke agree perfectly together, and they reciprocally elucidate and support each other," etc.

Again, they say, that the oldest of all manuscripts now extant, and all of which, as aforesaid, contain these chapters, "dates only back to the middle of the fourth century;" and yet they know, or ought to know, that the Peshito, or old Syriac version, the oldest known, is understood to be nearly or quite coeval with the apostolic age, and contains these chapters. Alex. Roberts, D. D., member of the English New Testament Company for the R. V., says of this old Syriac version, that it "is truly an admirable translation." And in the Religious Encyclopædia, we have the following, "Perhaps the old Syriac version of the New Testament, called Peshito, furnishes the strongest proof of the canonical authority of all the books which are contained in it. This excellent version has a very high claim to antiquity, and in the opinion of some of the best Syriac scholars, who have profoundly examined this subject, was made before the close of the first century. The Syriac Christians have always insisted that this version was made by the apostle Thaddeus." Here we have evidence that the oldest and one of the best versions contains the disputed record; and for aught we know, or anything that can be shown to the contrary, by the Josephites or any one else, was the work of one of the apostles.

Then again, they tell us that these chapters are interpolations foisted in by the Roman Church, to sustain the immaculate conception doctrine; that is, that the virgin Mary was conceived without the stain of original sin. Foisted in, say they, in the early times of corruption of the truth. And yet they quote the argument of Jerome, who was a Roman Catholic of the fourth century, to prove that Jesus was the son of Joseph, and not supernaturally begotten. Hence this is evidence that the Catholics did not insert those chapters. Besides, that cannot be true because the idea of the immaculate conception was not introduced into the church of Rome until the twelfth century, causing a "vehement controversy." Besides again, if that had been the object, the interpolation (so-called) would certainly have been such as to afford evidence of that Romish dogma; whereas there is not a particle of support for the unscriptural assumption of immaculate conception, either in those chapters, nor in the entire Bible. Therefore it is folly to say that those chapters were inserted for that purpose. But the kind of epistles and works got up and sanctioned by the Catholics and other unbelievers, are against the truth, against the Spirit conception of Christ, such as the gospel and epistle of Barnabas (so called) of which, Origen of the second century, Jerome of the fourth century, and other Catholics, as well as the Mahometans, speak so highly, pretending that they were written by the apostle Barnabas, although admitting they were apocryphal or uncanonical. These works give a very different history of Christ and his origin from our Bible. We are informed they are "full of forced allegories and extravagant explications of Scripture, and stories concerning beasts, and such like conceits; and that the so-called gospel of Barnabas has been published in Arabic, and corresponds very well with those traditions which Mahomet followed in his Koran. It was probably a forgery of some nominal Christians." Such are the works sanctioned by Catholics, Mahometans and unbelievers of the pure word; not works that contain "the record that God gave of his Son; which, to refuse to believe, is to make God a liar." 1 John v. 10.

It certainly seems to me that those who doubt, reject and ridicule this greatest of all truths, the rock and foundation of the Church of God, Jesus Christ the Son of the living God, and therefore "God manifested in flesh," are well represented by the earliest rejectors of Christianity; such as the subtle infidel Porphyry, of the third century, Julian the apostate of the fourth century, and Celsus of the second century, except that now-a-days unbelievers have become so wise that at this late day, this distance from the apostles, they have discovered that not only the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke, but the Acts of the Apostles and other Scriptures are not genuine, but spurious interpolations; and yet they profess to be Christians! But those early infidels, as we are informed by Dr. Cummings and others, "never disputed that the gospels according to St. Matthew and Luke, and the epistles, etc., were actually written by the persons whose names they bear and at their professed date. Those men of acute minds, and who labored night and day to overturn the claims of the Bible, both admitted its genuineness, and quoted long passages as unquestioned portions of its contents, and as written by the men named as its writers. Thus these men who hated the gospel, and were anxious to overturn it, yet retained in their writings portions of that gospel, just as we now find them in the Bible, and never think of disputing their genuineness; demonstrating thereby that the Bible is unmutilated, and that we have it now, as it was in the first five centuries of the Christian era.

Celsus, above named, was a philosopher of the forepart of the second century, and of the Epicurean school, who composed a book against Christianity. It is invaluable on account of the admissions of the grand facts and doctrines of the gospel, as preached by the apostles, and contained in their writings, by an enemy, who lived so near, almost in, the apostolic age. We are informed that this book contained "nearly eighty quotations from the books of the New Testament. He everywhere ridicules the idea of our Lord's divinity, which proves not only that the Christians of that early age avowed their belief in the doctrine, but that Celsus himself, though an unbeliever, found it in the documents to which he refers, as the source of his acquaintance with the Christian system. He says in his book, against the doctrine of divinity, the God manifested in flesh by begettal of Holy Spirit Power, as follows: "You will have him to be God, who ended an infamous life with a miserable death. If he thought fit to undergo such things, and if, in obedience to the Father, he suffered death, it is apparent they could not be painful and grevious to him, he being a God, and consenting to them." This is positive proof that the Spirit-begettal of Jesus by the Power of God, which constituted him, Immanuel—God with us, according to the record, was at that early date held by the disciples of Jesus and contained in their Scriptures. It also shows us the character of those who oppose the doctrine — unbelievers like Celsus, Like Josephites, Celsus could not understand how Jesus could be God as to origin, mental organism, mind and character, and yet made of the flesh of David, in human nature, capable of suffering and death. We see therefore, that as infidels, Catholics, and all other unbelievers, opposed and ridiculed this wonderful and most important truth, it does not look likely that they introduced and inserted it into the Scriptures, making it such a prominent feature, by the interpolation of the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke. No, they would have been more likely to chop them out, like some of the Ebionites and the Josephites.

Then again, we are asked to explain and reconcile some statements in those chapters as to the reign of Herod and Cyrenius, and as to the wise men, and the magnitude of the star (?) that guided them, and as to Joseph and Mary fleeing into Egypt, etc., the most of which are easily understood and have been many times consistently explained to the satisfaction of such honest, intelligent minds like Mr. Newman Cappe, above named.

The Modern Papacy and Persecution.

It is curious to contrast the opposing views that two classes of men take of the Romish church at the present time. One thinks Rome, though grossly in error, a "branch of the Church of Christ," regards the priests as a self-sacrificing band of godly men, admits that papacy has been a terrible persecution in the past, but believes that as the spirit of the world has changed it has changed, and that it is now tolerant, gentle, lamblike, harmless. The other believes that Rome is constantly plotting St. Bartholomews, that every monastery is a kind of inquisition, that our country may look out for gunpowder plots and Guy Faulkes who will do their fiendish work at some unguarded moment. The truth evidently lies between these extreme views, and perhaps nearer the latter extreme than the first. The spirit of Rome has not changed, but the world has. Rome does not foster St. Bartholomews, burn at the stake nor break at the wheel now, but it is not so much because she has changed as because the world would not tolerate the bloody policy of the times of Bloody Mary, Alva, and Torquemada.

Let him that thinks otherwise consider the history of the Papacy in our times wherever it possessed the power to manifest its real spirit. In sections of our country or Great Britain where it is weak it is gentle as the cooing dove, for it is wise as a serpent, but where it is mighty it rules with a rod of iron. It is about seventeen years since the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, and his own personal dominion over the city of Rome and the States of the Church brought to an end. Does not all the world know that until the soldiers of Victor Emmanuel rushed over the papal bulwarks in 1870 not a single Protestant church could be found in the Eternal city? No Protestant preacher dared to preach the gospel for the peril of his life, and religious liberty was as much unknown as in the times of Hildebrand. The same state of things existed in all countries where the Papacy had an uncontrolled power. Until the revolution that sent the dissolute Isabella, the faithful daughter of the Pope whom he had decorated with the golden rose, out of Spain, the iron hand of persecution was laid as severely upon "heretics" as in the day of Philip II. So too in Mexico. Until the church party was overthrown by the triumph of Juarez the man who ventured to preach Protestantism invited prisons, persecution and death. The reader must bear in mind that these facts do not relate to the last century, but to our times and to a period within this generation.

The claim of the Pope has always been that he is king of kings and the rightful ruler of the nations of the earth. Wherever his right to interfere with the government has been acknowledged, even down to the year of our Lord 1887, there has existed intolerance. Most governments of the world have rejected this arrogant assumption in recent times and this accounts for the decrease of the persecution. There is one country, however, which is as faithful still to the Pope as England, France and Spain were in the Middle Ages, a country whose bishops, appointed and controlled by the Pope, control the State. Ecuador, in South America, is the one State of the world which, at this time, does not question the right of the Pope to be its paramount and absolute ruler. This is the one country, then, that shows what the modern spirit of the Papacy is where it has full power, and what its spirit would be in every country if it could secure undisputed control. It should be carefully studied by those who desire to know whether it has laid aside the intolerant spirit of former generations and become imbued with the gentler spirit of the age.

I quote some facts: "In Ecuador the Pope still names the president, the priests still make the laws, and as a natural result in that whole country there is not a railroad nor a telegraph, not a stage-coach, nor a highway upon which a carriage or a cart can be driven except the great roads built by the Incas before the Spanish invasion, which have never been kept in repair, and are now almost useless. There is a law in Ecuador prohibiting the importation of books, unless they shall first receive the sanction of the Church, and Jesuit priests act as inspectors at the Custom House, to prevent the dissemination of intelligence among the people."

"Quito, the capital, has 200,000 population, but there has been no growth, no progress for three hundred years. There is no knowledge here of what the outside world is doing; no newspapers here are published to chronicle events; no schools are permitted but those of the priests, who teach only the Catechism and the Lives of the Saints; and the result is moral and mental depravity that is not paralleled in Egypt and India. There are no Protestants in Quito, and none allowed to reside in the city. Everything is tolerated but opposition to the Church, and he who will not partake of the sacrament is stoned."

He who fancies that the Papacy would exhibit a different spirit in this, or any country where it became supreme, is either willfully blind, or a subject for commiseration.—Christian Evangelist.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with commendable ability, a topic which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar terms, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

Communications.

Paternity, Genealogy, Nature and Character of Jesus, in the Light of the Covenants; being two Lectures, with some Additions, Delivered at Wyoming, Delaware, by Dr. L. C. Thomas ...Concluded.

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" Matt. xxii. 42.

We are also asked by some who consider themselves wise and far-seeing, as to "what end does the miraculous conception seem capable of answering? Now for this miracle there does not, as near as we can judge, appear to be any necessity or any advantage in it!" Oh no! A mere man could have answered just as well for a Redeemer, a Savior of the world! The death and blood of a mere man would have been adequate to save the world; to answer and fill the purpose of God! A person so wise and astute as to be capable of conceiving such an idea, must be not only "wise above what is written," but above the great Creator. Such a person should be like some others, capable of perceiving that it was possible for this great creation to have created itself, and run itself, without any God! But this same writer, with his astute powers, cannot see how the matter of the Holy Spirit begettal, could have been kept so quiet in those days, nor how it could have failed to diminish the credibility of the Messiahship of Jesus, and so to have interfered with, and upset his mission, and his Father's purposes: and hence he concludes that it "is altogether inconsistent; and indeed such an occurrence would have entirely frustrated the plan!" Let all who take any stock in such foolishness, and fleshly conceits, bear in mind that our heavenly Father himself, (in connection with his Son after his birth) superintended and manifested those matters, in those days, so as to just exactly meet and accomplish his own purpose; as he always has and does now; "working all things after the counsel of his own will."

Is it not most inconsistent, for those who accept the Bible as God's Book, containing as it does, a small human element, which was doubtless permitted for a wise purpose—so many little mistakes, spurious passages, and little things which we cannot as yet fully understand and reconcile; although not sufficient to invalidate or interfere in the least with its general teachings and all-important truths to reject these chapters because, as they say, they contain a few of those things which to their finite minds seem irreconcilable? Another inconsistency is this: here is a question raised as to whether these chapters were not interpolated by designing men. Josephites find that there are a few writers who hold the affirmative. They readily accept and quote them; while on the other hand, there are a thousand to one of (equally as great and astute thinkers and writers, who hold the negative. The testimony of these they reject. It does not coincide with what seems to be their shallow fleshly conceit. Perhaps in charity I should attribute their unbelief more to their not understanding God's Word and purpose as to his Son, than anything else. But, as I have shown, the record in these chapters, is corroborated by the concurrent testimony of the entire Scriptures. Mind, they have no proof of interpolation; but they say, "there was ample opportunity for the corruption before the Peshito Syriac!" These are their words, and this is all their proof—"ample opportunity!" So, as witnesses, they gaily cry out, "terrible picture of fraud!" And yet they have as good grounds for rejecting the Bible as a whole, as for rejecting these chapters only. Says one of them, "we have as much confidence in the word of God today as we ever had." That may be true. But there is no doubt whatever, that these persons are, as days, who are like those Jews that crucified the Savior, who really think they understand and believe the Scriptures, but in fact do not; who really think they know and believe in Jesus, but in fact do not; who read and talk about the Scriptures constantly, and yet like those Jews, fail to apprehend their meaning, and therefore do not know Jesus, nor as a consequence can they be believers in him. Let us hear what Paul said of those Jews, and take warning. "For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not nor yet the voices of the prophets, which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him." Acts xiii. 27. And Peter told them that in order to be saved, it was necessary for them to repent and believe in him whom they had thus ignorantly condemned and crucified. Acts iii. 17, 18. I cannot conceive how it is possible for a person to be a believer in Christ, who does not understand nor believe that he was more than a mere man: who does not understand that a natural son of Joseph, a mere man from his birth, could not be the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, by laying down his life: could not possibly be the Redeemer and Savior of the world.

I will now give some quotions from a very able work by T. H. Horne M. A. of St. Johns College, Cambridge, Eng. He says, Book 4-Page 239, as follows. "Though we have such a chain of unbroken evidence, the most clear and decisive, that can possibly be addressed, to the genuineness of St. Matthew's gospel; several attempts have of late years been made by those who deny the miraculous conception of our Savior, to expunge the first two chapters from the sacred code as being a spurious interpolation: and hence, a recent antagonist of Divine Revelation has taken occasion (without examining the mass of evidence to the contrary) to affirm that the whole gospel is a falsehood. We have however indisputable evidence, both internal, and external, that these chapters form an integral part of the gospel.....In the second place, it is worthy of remark, that the two first chapters of Matthew's gospel are to be found in all Ancient Manuscripts which are now extant, which are now entire: as well as in many that have come down to us mutilated by the hand of time; and also in all the Ancient Versions without exception. Not only all Ancient Manuscripts now extant; but also all the Ancients Versions (two of which are of Apostolical antiquity) contain the first two chapters. They are also found in a genuine epistle of Ignatius, the only apostolic father who had occasion to refer to them. Justine Martyr, Hegesippus and Clement of Alexandria, who all flourished in the second century, have referred to them, as also Irenæus, and all the fathers who succeeded him, and whose testimony is undisputed. Celsus, Porphyry and Julian, the most acute and inveterate enemies of the Gospel in the second, third, and fourth centuries, admit them. Thus we have a continued and unbroken series of testimony of Christians, as well as persons inimical to the Christian faith, from the days of the Apostles to the present time. And in opposition to this, we find only a vague report of the state of a Hebrew copy of St. Matthew's gospel to be received, amongst an obscure and unrecognized description of Hebrew Christians (Ebionites) who are admitted, even by the very writers who claim the support of this authenticity, to have mutilated the copy which they possess, by removing the genealogy. Ignatius who flourished A. D. 107, has in his epistle to the Ephesians, an express reference to the history of the virgin Mary's conception of our Lord and to the appearance of the star that so wonderfully announced his birth. Now, as this father was contemporary with the Apostles and survived the evangelist John only six or seven years; we have in his testimony what amounts to that of the Apostles for the truth and authenticity of St. Matthew's gospel. Besides the uncontradicted testimony of manuscripts, and versions, we have the clear and undisputed evidence of the ancient fathers, in favor of the genuineness of these chapters, whence they have cited both words and verses in their writings. To which we may add, that the earliest opposers of Christianity never appear to have doubted their genuineness. Clement of Alexandria, who lived towards the close of the second century (A. D. 194), speaking of the order of the gospels which he had received from the Presbyters of more ancient times, says expressly that the gospels containing the genealogies were first written. (See the passage at length both in the Greek and English in Dr. Lardner's works 8d Vol. pp. 211—and notes). Here then we have assurance of the genuineness of the genealogies of Matt. i. ii.; and Luke iii. This testimony is so strong as to put its antiquity and genuineness beyond all question.

I will now close this investigation with two or three remarks. First, I do not think it possible for any person with an honest heart to carefully read and understand the foregoing pages, without being convinced that Jesus was not the son of Joseph, but the Son of God. Second. I think it impossible for any person to be saved without faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; which of course includes faith in his teachings—his gospel: and that to believe in him (into him) is to believe that he was not a mere man, but that his origin was in heaven, having been the Word with God, and which by the power of God became flesh—God's unique or only begotten Son in human nature from his birth. And that such faith is not saving faith, until it worketh by love, producing obedience in the observance of all things whatsoever he has commanded, as far and as fast as possible. Third. The most important truth is that which Jesus denominated "the rock," in union with "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," through the means of his gospel, the only gospel, "not another;" Gal. i. 7, 8; which consists in "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God—the things concerning the kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ;" Acts viii. 5, 12; which Jesus himself preached everywhere, in "all the cities and villages;" and which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16. It is, that this great and wonderful Personage, the Redeemer and Savior of the world, who is now in heaven with his Father—gone like a "Nobleman into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return"—when the time appointed shall have arrived for that kingdom to come and be set up "under the whole heaven;" Dan. vii. 27; for which the King when he was here taught us to pray, thy kingdom come. Then the Son of Highest will return and "restore again the kingdom to Israel;" Acts i. 6; "and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32.

Selections.

MODERN DELUSIONS.

Theosophy is the latest religion of transcendentalists. In it, the attenuated unbelief of our times is seeking to find relief from the ennui of denial. How to describe that which takes for itself the name of "Occultism," how to give an idea of doctrines which claim to be hidden from all but the initiated we do not know. It is enough to say that substantially it is Buddhism seeking conquests in Christian lands; "the light of Asia," offering itself to those who have turned away "from the light of Christ." It has its circles in many of our great cities, where its occult philosophy is diligently studied; though its following is small compared with that of spiritualism, it being the religion of the literary elite, as the other is of the common people. If we question it in regard to its doctrines, it tells us that they are the same as those of "the sacred mysteries of antiquity." It inculcates a very attenuated philosophy of evolution; it teaches the pre-existence and transmigration of souls, and instructs its disciples how by rigid asceticism they may extirpate what is called "the intuitional memory" by which they can enter into profound recollection of what they know in far distant ages. In a couplet which it is fond of repeating it declares that

Descending spirits have conversed with men,
And told him secrets of the world unknown.

And these words give the most reasonable hint of its origin. For its creed is "the doctrines of demons from beginning to end." No personal devil that which is mystically called the devil "being but the negative and opposite of God." No atonement except man's "unification" with himself; no forgiveness of sin, souls being required to wear away their guilt by self-expiation; miracles, mysteries, ultimate deification—these are specimen articles of its delusive creed. Its whole character and contents so far as we can comprehend them are yet another phase of satanic delusion.

Now if we compare these three systems, counting ritualism as incipient Popery, we find them agreeing remarkably to fill up the outlines of the predicted apostasy. The "forbidding to marry" realized in the celibacy of Romanism; the enforced continuance of theosophy and the antimarriage doctrines of spiritualism; the "commanding to abstain from meat" appearing in the superstitious fasts of ritualism, and the rigid abstinences from flesh enjoined on the initiates of esoteric Buddhism; the doctrines of demons manifested in the magic and idolatry which ritualism substitutes for the chaste and simple doctrines of ordinance of Christ, and which in many particulars hold a common ancestry with those of theosophy and spiritualism, and the fantastic miracle-working which characterize them all. All three of these delusions give a practical denial of Christ's second advent—that doctrine at which demons fear and tremble—spiritualism and theosophy declaring that in them the promised Epiphany of Christ is taking place; while ritualism by its doctrines of transubstantiation makes the communion declare the "real presence of Christ" in flesh and blood, when the Lord ordained it to declare his real absence "till he come" I mean, of course, bodily absence.

What now is the prophetic significance of all that we have said? This it seems to me, that according to the predictions of Scripture we are witnessing an irruption of evil spirits who are again working powerfully along their favorite lines—ritualism, superstition, and philosophy.

We hear much said about infidelity and communism "heading up" in a personal antichrist. Believing as I do, that antichrist came long ago, and that he was crowned a few years since in St. Peter's at Rome as the deified man—infallible and supreme, I see in the present aspect of affairs his final bodying forth, rather than his ultimate heading up. As in the case of Christ, so in the case of "the man of sin" the head is revealed first, and the body gathered throughout all generations grows up in all things unto "Him who is the head." For the career of antichrist is the exact parody and evil counterpart of that of Christ. If you say "the antichrist must be an individual as certainly as Christ is," I remind that the word Christ does not always stand for a single individual in description, for in 1 Cor. xii., the apostle describes the body of believers, gathered to the Lord through all time with its divers gifts and administrations, and this corporate whole with its many members, but all "baptized by one spirit into one body," he names Ho Christos—the Christ. So that evil system with its various offices and administrations yet baptized into unity by "the Spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience" is the antichrist. The one is the head of the ecclesia; but the head and the body are so identical that they bear the same personal name.

"But he is called 'the man of sin,'" you say, "and therefore must be an individual." Not of necessity. For the line of believers extending through all ages is declared by the apostles to be taken out from Jews and Gentiles to "make of twain one new man." I cannot believe that "the mystery of iniquity," which Paul declared to be already working in his day, has been toiling on for nearly two thousand years in order to bring forth a single short-lived man, and he so omnipotently wicked that the Papal antichrist, with the blood of fifty million martyrs on his skirts, is too insignificant a sinner to be mentioned in comparison. And now, I hear the objections coming thick and fast. "But is he not to open infidel stage he is said to deny the Father and Son?" Search your Concordances for the word "deny," and observe how constantly it signifies the denial of apostasy and false profession. But is he not the incarnate of Satan since he is called "the son of perdition?" Yes; Judas was named the "son of perdition;" and "Satan entered into Judas Iscariot;" but so far from atheistically denying Christ he openly professed him, saying, "Hail, Master," and then betraying him with a kiss. But is he not a godless blasphemer, since he is declared to have "a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies?" The counterfeit of Christ again, for Christ was twice falsely accused of blasphemy, because he made himself equal with God, and because he presumed to forgive sins.

The Pope is justly accused of blasphemy on both these grounds, for he profanely calls himself God, and assumes to forgive sins. Said Alexander VI.: "Cæsar was a man; Alexander was a God." But must he not be a Jew established in Jerusalem, since it is said that "He sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God?" No. This particular phrase "temple of God," is never in a single instance in the New Testament applied to the temple at Jerusalem, but always to the church, the body of Christ, to its head or to its members in heaven or on earth. But could the Holy Ghost call that "the temple of God" which has become apostate? Just as possibly as Christ could call the apostate Laodicean whom he spues out of his mouth "the church of Laodiceans." "But does not this view commit one to the year-day interpretation, since the career of antichrist is three and a half years and a papal system extends through centuries? Yes, for the one instance of prophetic time which has by unanimous consent been fulfilled, the seventy weeks of Daniel is demonstrated to have been upon this scale. Since the period was actually 490 years—a day for a year—and this may be taken as a clue to the prophetic time of Revelation. But if the Holy Spirit meant years in the Apocalypse, why did he not say years? you reply. Why, when he meant churches and ministers and kingdoms and kings and epochs, did he say candlesticks, and stars, and beasts, and horns, and trumpets? Yet, having used these miniature symbols of greater things, how fitting that the accompanying time should also be in miniature! To use literal dates would distort the imagery as though you should put a life-sized eye in a small photograph.

I have said that antichrist is the evil counterpart of Christ. When Satan offered Christ all the kingdoms of the world if he would fall down and worship him he refused, accepting present rejection and crucifixion, and waiting the Father's time for the kingdoms of the world to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. The papal antichrist accepted the kingdoms of this world when the temptation was presented him, and proceeded to announce himself the "King of kings" and that the kingdom had come, and that in himself was fulfilled the Scripture, "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from river to river, unto the ends of the earth."

The bride of Christ—the church—was left in the world to share her Lord's rejection and cross, enduring present suffering and widowhood, and waiting for the return of the bridegroom. But the harlot bride of the antichrist accepts an earthly throne and a present glory, boastfully saying, "I sit a queen and am no widow and shall see no sorrows." Do we not see that it was thus usurpation of the headship of the church by the man of sin; this premature grasping of the kingdom and the setting up of a mock millennium under rules of a pseudo-Christ, that destroys the millennial hope of the church and has infested generation after generation, with the delusion of a present reign and a present kingdom, while Christ is yet absent in person from his flock.

But this enemy of God and his saints must soon come to an end. In Daniel and in Thessalonians this end is predicted in two stages: gradual, and then sudden and complete. "They shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end," says Daniel. "Whom the Lord shall consume with the breath of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming," says Paul in Thessalonians. The consuming process has been going on mightily in our generation by the breath of the Lord's mouth in the world-wide diffusion of the inspired Scriptures. "And now the devil is come down with great wrath because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." He is putting forth the energy of despair. He is sending his legions to work along various lines, which will center, visibly or invisibly, in one head. On the line of sacredotalism he is seeking to thwart the work of the Reformation by again insinuating popish worship into our churches; on the line of superstition he is aiming to bewitch the godless and curious multitudes through the energy of unclean spirits; on the line of culture he is moving to foist upon the literary elite a diluted paganism as an extra fine religion. But these things cheer us rather than saddon us, for all the shadows point to the dawn.

The church's salvation means antichrist's destruction, and the same Scripture which speaks to us so powerfully today in the light of passing evils, "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry," says also, "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen." All this which I have set forth I have declared with unutterable sorrow. All this I can think of only with weeping, crying O, bride of Christ, how are they increased who would rob thee of thy chastity." All this I now review with a fervent prayer that if I have spoken aught against any of the Lord's anointed, he will forgive me, while for myself I cry daily unto him "Deliver me from the evil one."

Man and brethren: We are here for a candid and courteous discussion of certain great prophetic questions. Among these none is more important, as affecting our present testimony, than the one upon which I have just now touched. I need not remind you that one of the first tasks which the ritualistic leaders fifty years ago felt called upon to undertake, was that of getting rid of the Protestant interpretation of antichrist as the Pope of Rome. How desperately they wrought at this task, will be apparent to those who read Newman's essay on "The Man of Sin," and observed especially his earnest wrestling with the ominous saying of Gregory the Great, that "Whosoever adopts or desires the title of universal bishop, is the forerunner of antichrist."

If I must take sides between parties on this question, my sympathies will be with Latimer and Cranmer and Bradford, whose vision was clarified by the fires of martyrdom, to recognize their persecutor and call him by name, rather than with Manning and Newman, whose eyes are holden by the charm of mediævalism. But our appeal is not to man, but to the sure word of prophecy. The profoundest discussion of this question which has appeared in fifty years in my opinion, is contained in the two recent volumes of Mr. Grattan Guiness. There history is shown to answer to prophecy like deep calling unto deep; there the mysterious chronology written ages ago by God is verified point by point, by the terminal periods which are running out under our own eyes. Such correspondences cannot be accidental; such clear pointings to the man of sin as a story of his predicted age as 1260 years gives, cannot be fortuitous. One of the ablest prophetic scholars of the Futurest school in this country, declares that he knows not how the conclusions of these volumes can be gainsaid.

I humbly concur in that opinion. Nay, I speak rather of the Book than of any human books, and avow my conviction that the papal "Man of Sin" was accurately photographed on the camera of prophecy thousands of years ago; that no detective searching for him today would need any other description of him than that which is found on the pages of the Bible. Taking these photographs of Daniel, and John, and Paul, and searching the world upside down for their originals, I am confident that this same detective would stop at the Vatican, and after gazing for a few moments at the pontiff, who sits there gnawing the bone of infallibility, which he acquired in 1870, and clutching for that temporal sovereignty which he lost the same year, he would lay his hand on him and say: "You are wanted in the court of the Most High, to answer to the indictment of certain souls beneath the altar, 'who were slain for the Word of God and for the testimony which they bore,' and [who are crying, 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth?'"

My brethren, let us search the Scriptures anew, and let us be sure that they do not require it of us before we silence our testimony against the Man of Rome as antichrist.—Dr. A. J. Gordon, in Christian Repository.

Myself for Christ.

Paul in his letter to Philemon, which is a model of courtesy and delicacy, says to him, "Thou owest unto me thine own self besides." His true self, his new spiritual life, he owed to the instrumentality of the great apostle who led him to Christ. But if Paul could use this expression to his Colossian convert, how much more may our Lord and Savior apply it to all of us who claim to be Christians. His own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree. With a perfect right, therefore, may the crucified Redeemer lay his pierced hand on every one of us, and say, "Thou owest unto me thine own self." He will not be put off with anything less, any more than a true hearted bride would be satisfied with a gold ring or a finely furnished house. The only equivalent for a heart is a heart. Christ's self for me means myself for Christ.

At the very gate of discipleship he plants this challenge, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself." This is a demand that the great, greedy monster sin shall ground arms and submit. Sam Jones is right when he says that hell is only human selfishness on fire. The perpetual battle of Christian principle is with that artful, cunning, many-headed sinner, self. Pardon and eternal life are free gifts, but self-conquest is not a gift, it is an achievement. There is more pugh than pluck in a great deal of what passes for piety. It is an audacious attempt to get a free ride to heaven in a drawing-room car, with plenty of select company and good fare on the road.—T. L. Cuyler.

Grove Meeting.

At Odebolt, Sac Co., Ia., commencing Thursday, Sept. 1st, and continue over the following Sunday. Preaching each morning, afternoon and evening. Elder T. J. Whitsitt, A. J. Eychaner and others will be present to preach the word. Teams will meet the 4:17 train from the east each day. Those coming on any other train write to J. W. Appleyard. The place of meeting is at the Appleyard Grove, three miles east of Odebolt. Let the brethren everywhere come. It is your meeting; come.

A. J. Eychaner.
J. W. Appleyard.

Conference Notice.

The Second Annual Conference of the Church of God in Southwestern Nebraska will convene, D. V., Sept. 1, 1887, in Brother J. N. Prime's Grove, five miles southeast of Arapahoe and three miles southwest of Edison. Brother C. C. Ramsey will be present to preach the word. Now brethren let us come together and make this one of the most interesting meetings ever held in the State. All visiting brethren should notify the President so arrangements can be made to convey them to place of meeting. All come praying.

Almus Adams, Pres.
J. S. Miller, Sec.

National Conference.

The committee appointed at the recent conference at Antioch to correspond with State Conferences in the matter of a proposed National Conference composed of delegates from each State, recommend and request that our conferences everywhere at their next meeting consider the question of a National Conference, and upon approval at once appoint delegates thereto; they also invite correspondence relative to the proposed National Conference, which will receive attention if addressed to the chairman of the committee at Plymouth, Ind.

A. P. Haren,
Chairman.

THE RESTITUTION.

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months in the same ratio.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The Restitution of "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints associated with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to eternal salvation.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

Benjamin Davidson, author of the Analytical Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon, gives the following interlinear rendering of Psa. cx. 3, in his Syriac Reading Lessons: "Thy people shall be praiseworthy in the day of power, in the magnificence of holiness, from the womb, from of old thee the Son have I begotten." Such a variation from the Hebrew in the Syriac led us to examine the Septuagint and Vulgate Versions, and we found them both in accord with the Syriac, so far as the closing phraseology is concerned. The Septuagint gives this sense: "With thee the sovereignty in the day of thy power among the resplendent ones of thy saints. From the womb before light-bringing (before a morning-dawn) I begat thee." As the Vulgate is a very close rendering of the Septuagint, and may be better understood by a portion of our readers, we give the Latin: "Tecum principium in die virtutis tuæ in splendoribus sanctorum; ex utero ante luciferum genui te." In English, "With thee the pre-eminence in the day of thy power amid the splendors of the saints. From the womb before light-bringing I begat thee."

Having written thus far it occurred to us to examine some versions in the modern European languages, and we give the rendering in these with as near a word for word translation as possible. We begin with the German: "Nach deinem Sieg wird dir dein folk willig opfern in heiligem schmuck. Deiner kinder dir geboren, wie der thau aus der morgenröthe." In English, "After thy conquest thy people shall willingly offer to thee in holy adornment. Thy children will be born to thee as the dew out of the morning-dawn." The French reads: "Ton peuple sera un peuple plein de franche volonte, au jour que tu assembleras ton armee avec une sainte pompe; ta posterite sera comme la rosee qui est produite du sein de l'aurore." English, "Thy people shall be a people full of free-will, in the day when thou shalt muster thy army with a holy pompousness; thy posterity shall be as the dew which is brought forth from the womb of the day-dawn." The Italian reads: "Il tuo popolo sara tutto volenteroso nel giorno che tu raseguerai il tuo esercito, nel magnifico santuario; la rugiada della tua giovantu ti sara prodotta dalla matrice dell' alba." In English: "Thy people shall be wholly willing, in the day when thou shalt review thy army in the magnificent sanctuary; the dew of thy youth shall be produced for thee from the womb of the dawn." The Spanish is, "Tu pueblo sera voluntario en el dia de tu ejercito en hermosura de santidad; como el rocio que sale de la matrix del alba, asi te nacesan los tuyos." Translated, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy army-muster in the beautiful display of the holy-ones; as the dew which falls from the womb of the morning even so to thee shall those who are thine be born."

The two earliest versions made were the Septuagint and the Syriac, and they were both made directly from the Hebrew. The way they speak of the Son having been begotten of old, and before any dawning light, seems to indicate that the Hebrew manuscripts used must materially have differed from the one from which the authorized English Version has been made. Compare their statements with Micah v. 2. Note also how some of the modern versions vary from the English in rendering the Hebrew, as it now stands, in regard to a future increase of numbers in Christ's coming glory, an increase numerous as glistening dew-drops in morn's resplendent dawning. We submit the whole to our readers as a specimen of different versions.

BIBLE LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.

Lesson 8.

THE IMPORTANCE OF HAVING THE GOSPEL AS THE SUBJECT OF FAITH.

Lesson Chapter, Gal. i.

Sixth verse: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel." It seems from this verse that some had left the grace (or favor) of Christ for some other gospel.

Seventh verse: "Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ." We learn from this verse that in that early day there were some who did pervert the gospel and cause trouble. Now for the warning in

Eighth verse: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

Ninth verse: "As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed." It seems from the last two verses that it is dangerous for any person to preach anything that the gospel does not contain.

Tenth verse: "For do I now persuade men or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ." It was God persuading men by Paul to come to him. Paul did not seek to please men, but to please God by being a servant of Christ. Paul was not preaching his own gospel, but the gospel of Christ, just as he had received it by inspiration.

Eleventh verse: "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man." Paul had not received the gospel from man but from Christ.

Twelfth verse: "For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Now Paul taught the gospel just as he received it from Christ, or as it was revealed by God's own dear Son. Eph. iv. 5 reads, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." This verse shows there is but one true faith, therefore great care should be taken to obtain that one faith. Rom. i. 16 reads, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Greek." This verse shows that the gospel is the subject or ground work of faith, also the power of God to save all them that believe and obey the gospel.

Acts xxviii. 23, "And when they had appointed him a day there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the Law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning until evening." Vs. 30, "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him." Vs. 31, "Preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." These two last verses show how faithful Paul was in proclaiming the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God.

Rom. ii. 16, "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel." How necessary it is for all of us to believe and obey the gospel if we are to be judged by it, which is true.

2 Cor. iv. 3, 4, "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." From these two verses we learn that the god of this world has so blinded some persons that they cannot see the light of the glorious gospel of our dear Savior. Vs. 5, "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus sake." Col. i. 23, "If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel which ye have heard."

2 Tim. i. 10-12, "But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel; whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. For the which cause I also suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed, for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. Paul was not ashamed of the gospel of our dear Savior, which brought life and immortality to light, is also the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." which was committed to my trust."

1 Tim. i. 11, "According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust."

Matt. iv. 23, "And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." We see from the above that Jesus himself went around preaching the glorious gospel of the kingdom.

Mark xvi. 15, 16, "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned (or condemned). You see from the two last verses that Jesus commissioned his apostles to preach the gospel to every creature (or person). It is those that believe and obey that will be saved. This is a warning to the world.

Acts xx. 25-27, "And now behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more. Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." How faithful Paul was.

2 Thess. i. 7, 8, "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." How necessary it is to believe and obey the gospel.

Rev. xxii. 18, 19, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, etc." How careful we should be to neither add to nor take from the Scriptures of truth.

Summing up our lesson we note these points:

1. We may be removed from him that called us.

2. This removing may be brought about by accepting a perverted gospel.

3. Whoever preaches such a gospel, has the curse of God pronounced upon him.

4. That the gospel is not after man nor from man, but was taught to Paul by Jesus himself.

5. That God made Paul an apostle; that he called him, and revealed his Son in him, that he might preach him among the heathen.

6. That the gospel of Christ that Paul preached was the gospel of the kingdom of God, because in persuading men concerning Jesus he expounded and testified the kingdom of God.

7. The gospel, being God's power unto salvation, must be believed.

8. As that gospel relates to a kingdom, we must believe in that kingdom, if we would have the promised salvation. Jesus said he was sent to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God, Luke iv. 43, and going back to Mark xvi. 15, 16, "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized shall be saved." The gospel being manifestly the gospel of the kingdom of God that Jesus preached.

9. To the last, this gospel is hid. They let the god of this world blind their eyes. For them, the light of the gospel does not shine; they do not believe, hence will not have the proffered salvation.

10. God, when Jesus comes, will take vengeance on them that do not obey the gospel.

Reviewing our former lessons, we must keep in mind that it is the Lord that is speaking to us through his word: that it is his book that we are studying, and that to please him we must believe him.

It is God that is talking in Gen., it is God in Gal., it is God that is speaking in Eph.

He has given us but one faith. That faith must be in the kingdom of God. It is God's spell. It brings life and immortality to light.

The faith must be kept, we must have the faith and continue in the faith. We must not be moved away from the hope of the gospel—the hope of Christ's return to set up his kingdom.

In holding this faith and in endeavoring to spread it abroad, we may not please man, but we shall be the servants of Christ, and have our part in the book of life and in the holy city.

Selections.

"Over Whom Will Christ Reign During the Millennium?"

This is a difficult question to answer briefly, and yet intelligibly. We require to have, in the first place, a clear conception as to the condition of the world at the end of the present dispensation. The Christian dispensation can point to great achievements, but the world at large remains obdurate, and this will continue to the end. The visible church has shown to the world a vital force and grandeur which proclaims its heavenly origin; but how much of worldliness, error, and corruption has accumulated within and around it, marring its force, progress, and beauty! and prophecy leads us to look rather for the intensifying of the evil than otherwise.

The Jewish nation is an unsolved problem, and is destined to come more prominently before the nations as the age draws to a close. Their preservation as a distinct nation amid the sufferings, privations, and persecution to which for ages they have been exposed, is a standing miracle. But they are God's witnesses. Their restoration to Palestine, their vitality as a people, their national glory in the latter day is the burden of their prophets, and the hope of the nation. But these glorious predictions have their fulfillments, not in the present, but in the Millennial dispensation. There will be a partial restoration, but they will return in unbelief, and it is a state of things not so much the subject of prediction as of acceptation and recognition. It is spoken of as a condition of things existing at the end of this dispensation, which will call down judgment upon the people rather than blessings. It will be through a regime of severe discipline that they will eventually reach the golden goal. Politically, the far-seeing statesman discerns the lifting shadows of this coming event passing over the plains of Palestine, and offering a slight solution of the Eastern Question in keeping the way open to India and the East, and preventing the land falling into undesirable hands. But, notwithstanding the increase of light and knowledge in the world, the zeal and energy displayed by the Christian church, the brightening of the national outlook for the Jewish people, the world's conversion, the church's purity, Israel's glory will not be fully realized according to the prophetic word until the Millennium has begun.

The judgments which usher in the Millennium—and there would be no judgment if there was no rebellion—falls upon the church, the Jewish nation, the world at large. Judgment is to begin at the church; the mere professor in, and the apostate from, the kingdom of heaven receive their doom. The Jewish nation pass through a time of trouble, greater than they or any nation has ever before experienced; but their doom is not that of the apostate church, for a repentant remnant is spared, the nucleus of the nation's glory in the coming age. The world at large is startled and alarmed at the display of Almighty power and vengeance which lead men to seek for his grace, which will will be extended to them in the Millennial Age.

Hence we have the state of things upon earth, immediately upon the establishment of the Millennial kingdom, as the repentant remnant of Israel wholly converted, accepting their true Messiah, the King of Glory, setting themselves to the grand work of gathering their scattered tribes from every corner of the earth, and proclaiming the loving kindness and faithfulness of their God in every land; so that the knowledge of the Lord may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Thus their restoration shall prove to the world as life from the dead. And the kingdoms of this world having become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, the peoples shall bow before him, and all the world shall own his sway. Thus Israel will, in the future become the first of the nations. From Jerusalem will then go forth living waters, and there the ever-green and the ever-fruitful trees shall grow, whose leaves, in the hands of these zealous and devoted missionaries, shall be for the healing of the nations. These are the people over whom Christ and his church shall reign.

Conceive the marvellous change which will be effected upon the earth. We may rest assured that all the wonderful inventions of the present age will be preserved, and extended, and will minister materially to the comforts of the coming age. But what a mighty moral influence will be effected by the display of power, and the glorious appearing of earth's great King. And how will they be moved by the earnest, living, and flaming words of those who have tasted that the Lord is gracious! while the powers of darkness will be chained. During the Millennium no class will exist on earth. The nationality of Jew and Gentile—though one in gospel privileges and blessings—will be distinctly marked. Business transactions, and the cultivation of the soil, though probably not attended with the same anxiety and toil as now, will still be needful.—Edward Heath, of Wigan, in Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman.

The Temple of Bubastis.

The London religious papers very generally recognize the value of Dr. Naville's latest discoveries in Egypt. The London Christian World has this to say:

Mr. Naville and his co-workers on the staff of the Egypt Exploration Fund have succeeded in unearthing some stupendous relics of the ancient city of Bubastis, the Pi-Beseth of Scripture, and its Temple dedicated to the cat-headed goddess Bast, which has been described in such glowing terms by Herodotus. After the unsuccessful researches of Mariette Pasha among the mounds of Tell Basta, near the Zagazig station of the railway which connects Cairo with Ismailia, archæologists despairingly accepted the conclusion that nothing beyond a few blocks of red granite remained as memorials of a structure which, thousands of years ago, drew together immense crowds in annual pilgrimages. Superb monolithic columns, massive architraves, building blocks sculptured with bas-relief groups, and portrait statues of colossal proportions, have already rewarded the labors expended in clearing one-third of the site of the temple, which, it is estimated, must have been 600 feet in length, with an average width of 150 feet. Among the statues are several representing Rameses II.; of two of these in black granite the size will be understood when we mention that the eyes are seven inches in length. A statue in black granite of very much earlier workmanship—in accordance with a common practice among Oriental potentates—has been utilized as a memorial of the son of Rameses, who is described in an inscription as "General of Cavalry of his Father." The bas-reliefs, which are at present in Cyclopean heaps, are believed to have formed two large tableaux, one of which represented a great festival given by King Osorkon II. It is not a little curious that the fragment of an inscription which refers to the festival as one "which takes place every fifty years," after being hidden from the eye of man for uncounted centuries, should have been brought to light in this Jubilee year. Among other groups figured are processions of priests carrying shrines and sacred boats, and others engaged in religious dances. The first temple upon the site thus laid bare is believed to date from about 3,300 years before the Christian era. Usertesen III., a thousand years later, erected a new building, which, after another interval of a thousand years, was enlarged and marked by Rameses II.; Osorkon II., some 600 years later, added a festive hall. It will be a gratification to many of our readers to know that several of the remarkable monuments thus discovered are now on their road to this country, and will be shortly open to public view.—N. Y. Observer.

Paradise.

The Bible opens and closes with visions of transcendent beauty and glory. A Paradise stands at each end. The two are alike, yet unlike. They resemble each other as resplendent creations of God, of the home of human beings, as the scenes of the display of grace, mercy and infinite love. They are also unlike. The first shows how sin entered into and ruined a pure community, the second how it will be finally expelled from the abodes of the redeemed; the first was a state of probation, the second will be a state of eternal security; the one was the scene of contest with the arch destroyer, the other will be a memorial of final victory over him. The earthly Paradise was inhabited by only a single pair, the heavenly by an innumerable company brought out of all tribes and kindreds of the earth; the first looked forward to the unfolding of the history of a planet with its struggles, reverses, its shadows and sunshine; the second looks back over a contest completed and merging into the supreme glory of God and the ineffable felicity of the saints; the one was a failure, the other will be a glorious success; the one was the starting-point of innumerable ills and sorrows, the thrusting out of good by the influence of Satan, the other marks the entrance of supreme felicity, the raising the notes of the everlasting song of victory, as by the exclusion of sin all tears are wiped away. The vision of the first Paradise fades in the dim haze of history, a picture remembered, tale of early innocence, of untried virtue, which failed in the first attempt; the vision of the second, rises and expands before us as the city which hath foundations, having the glory of God and a light like unto a stone most precious, and peopled by the myriads who have come up out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. The Paradise of Eden will be a perpetual reminder of our loss by sin; the Paradise to come of our infinite gain by the redemption of Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave himself for us that he might present unto God a church without spot or wrinkle, a glorious example of saving power. The opportunities and possibilities of the first estate are lost; those of the second, thanks be unto God for his amazing grace, are possible to us all. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh from heaven.—Messiah's Herald.

Offer Yourselves.

Most of us wish that God would use us for some great purpose; but very few of us are so wholly given up to God in loving trust that we are in a condition to be used by him for a great purpose—or a little one. God is a great deal readier to use willing servants who proffer themselves unreservedly, than men are to proffer themselves unreservedly to God as his willing servants. We should all like to be taken "just as we are," for the honorable duties assigned to those who are wholly the Lord's. But the Lord wants us to come, "just as we are," and submit ourselves wholly to him, for whatever duty he may have for us to do. It is first the enlistment and then the detail; not first the detail and then the enlistment.

Now that the Pope and his coadjutors at Rome have come to a decision about the course of the church towards the Knights of Labor in America, perhaps they will have time to give attention to matters in Spain. Mr. William Moore writes to the London Standard from Puerto Sta. Maria, Spain:

"Your readers are aware that in cases of administering the rite of extreme unction to the dying it is customary in Spain to go in procession through the streets, the priest carrying aloft the 'custodia,' and an acolyte ringing a hand-bell, at the sound of which all passers-by are expected to kneel until the procession passes. Since the establishment of religious liberty in 1868 it is no longer obligatory on all to conform to this custom, and consequently many, from conscientious scruples, refrain from doing so, although, if possible, they endeavor to get out of the way, so as not to give needless offence. A poor woman—a member of the Protestant community—was passing through one of the streets of this town, and on turning a corner came into contact with 'the procession of the Host.' Not prepared to kneel, and unwilling to appear disrespectful, she stepped aside into a doorway to let the procession pass; but the priest rushed after her, dragged her out, and with great violence endeavored to force her on her knees. Not succeeding in this, he handed her over to two policemen, and charged her before the Judge of First Instance with insulting the 'established religion.' The judge took the priest's declaration (in writing), absolutely refused to hear the poor woman, and ordered her off to prison to await her trial. Heaven knows when this 'trial' may come on, and so this poor wife and mother is excluded from her home for an indefinite period. When her trial comes, it will be merely travesty of justice, unless we can secure the services of a respectable advocate. We are anxious to make this a test case, to see whether, under the Spanish Constitution, Protestants can be imprisoned for not offering an act of worship to the 'Host.'"

How shall we define this golden attribute of mercy? Is it not the one perfection which we creatures give, or seem to give to our Creator? How could he have mercy were it not for us? Mercy in the tranquility of his omnipotence, and the sweetness of his omnipresence; the fruit of his eternity, and the compression of his immensity; the chief satisfaction of his justice, the triumph of his wisdom, and the patient perseverance of his love. Wherever we go, there is mercy, the peaceful, active, broad, deep, endless mercy of our Heavenly Father. If we work by day, we work in mercy's light, and we sleep at night in the lap of our Father's mercy.—F. W. Faber.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V. in Bland and Heller's Block, Room 56, 275½ Ontario Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Central Market. Seats free. Brethren from abroad of like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome.

Indiana State Fair.

We are reminded at this early day of this approaching annual event, commencing September 19th, by the bright and cheerful posters to be seen everywhere, and a call at the business office plainly demonstrates that the Fair season will soon be upon us. The number of applications for exhibition space, sales of privileges, and the amount of mail matter gives every encouragement for success, and something more. Improvements are being made, more special exhibition buildings erected, a new roof on the main exhibition hall and the grounds enlarged.

The Indiana State Fair is now recognized as the centre of the great breeding grounds of improved stock. Herds of improved cattle were shown at the last Fair from nine different States. Eighteen States and the Canadas were represented, and the show of live stock and machinery never excelled on the continent.

An exhibitor making an application for space recently, remarked: "We have got to make an exhibition to keep up with the times or be considered as dead. The people come to see the improvements; the progressive men of the community attend the State Fair, in fact, can not afford to stay away, and the State Fair is doing more good for the industrial community than any other influence."

Conference Notice.

The Annual State Conference of the Church of God will meet at Claysville, Brackon, P. O. Huntington Co. Ind., beginning on Friday, Sept. 2, 1887, and last over Sunday following. Those coming by the Nickle Plate R. R., will stop at South Whitley. Those coming on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific R. R. or the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan R. R., will stop at North Manchester, where they will be met and conveyed to the place of meeting. The brethren and sisters at Claysville are able and willing to accommodate all who will attend. Make arrangements to attend this meeting. Appoint delegates and have them there early, prepared to select evangelists for the fall and winter work. Do not delay. Act now.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

The church of God in Iowa will meet in Conference at Deep River, Thursday, Aug. 25, and continue till over Sunday the 28. A general invitation is extended. Bros. A. J. Eychaner and G. M. Myers, will be in attendance.

G. R. CROWN, Chairman.

By request I visited Dixon, Ill., July 24, made two discourses and baptized four young ladies into the Christ. The Dixon Congregation is in a prosperous condition.

G. M. MYERS.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Paulgrell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

Tobacco Poison.

Tobacco, a poisonous weed and destructive narcotic, is a native of our continent. "Americans are becoming smoked sardines," says a writer of note. Who, in passing through our streets, can conclude that our country is other than a vast smoke-house? The chemical constituents of tobacco are a volatile oil, a volatile alkali, and an empyreumatic oil. The volatile oil has the taste and odor of tobacco, and produces an irritating sensation on the throat and lungs. The evil effects of tobacco are mainly due, however, to the volatile alkali, nicotine. This poison is scarcely inferior to prussic acid, one-tenth of a grain killing a large dog in the space of three minutes. A hundred pounds of dry leaf yield seven pounds of pure nicotine. Thus, in smoking a quarter of an ounce of tobacco there may be drawn into the mouth "two grains of one of the most subtle of known poisons." The empyreumatic oil is also an acrid and dangerous poison.

To the most deleterious habits of smoking and chewing we would now give a few moments' attention. Smoking has become so common with young and old that we wonder, as we see boys just emerged from short clothes with cigars in their mouth, at what age they acquired the habit. Smoking debilitates the nervous system and weakens the physical powers; but one of its distinctive evils is the injury which it inflicts upon others. The smoker has neither the power nor the wish to consume his own smoke. All in his company must share it. No one expects the strong arm of the law to be invoked to remedy the wrong done to the non-smoking public; but common justice and the popular idea of right should purify the atmosphere.

The evil and listless effect of the continued use of tobacco on nations is finely illustrated in the case of the Turks. Centuries ago they stood high among the powers of Europe; but becoming a race of inveterate smokers, they have lost all strength as a people, and are now the most indolent of Europeans. The extravagance of the habit alone would condemn it. More gold is expended by the people of the United States for tobacco in its various forms than is required to furnish our whole population with daily bread.

Alcohol-Poisoning.

In wines and all fermentations the alcohol is about fifteen per cent., and the rest is water. Such is the wonderful affinity of alcohol for water that it cannot, after repeated and various distillations, be absolutely freed from it. The so-called pure alcohol has from one to ten per cent. of water. It is well known as a heavy, colorless fluid, volatile in the open air and readily vanishing when heated. It thus goes to the upper atmosphere of our planet, where doubtless slowly oxidizes and plays an important part, perhaps in forming clouds, or in the Aurora Borealis, until finally its chemical elements may return to the earth to play again that important part in the eternal round of nature. By thus going aloft this poison is removed from endangering animal life, and returns finally, changed into innocent forms.

But, while thus volatile, alcohol is one of the hardest chemical substances to break up. It is a firm or stable combination of its three elements, C. H. O., and cannot be changed or broken up by any one ordinary process, such, for instance, as it meets with in the human body. It burns with a very hot, blue, hydrogen flame; but fire is necessary to set it afire; that is, to break up the firm chemical union of its elements by combustion. Hence it is used to preserve fruits, anatomical specimens, etc., because it is practically indestructible and because microbes cannot live in it. For these and similar reasons, it is very useful in the arts and sciences, and its discovery by the "worm," and its subsequent uses, were important steps in civilization, for which all should be grateful, but for the inhuman use to which it has been put by deluded men.

These sciences has already told us what alcohol really is; and if you wish to know it further, get some as pure as you can from your druggist; burn it in a lamp, volatilize it by heating; use it to preserve dead animals and to kill living ones; and if you wish to know how it does that, take a little of it in your mouth, nose and eyes and your contortions of pain will bring you to consider seriously—

2. The effect of alcohol in the human system.

The fact was stated above that in fermented liquors, like wine, cider, etc., the amount of alcohol was not above fifteen per cent; while in brandy and distilled liquors it was about fifty per cent. But why only fifteen per cent? The answer is the key to the solution of the question in hand. The reason is this that alcohol is so deadly a poison to all living animal cells and tissues that when it reaches fifteen per cent. in a fermenting liquid it kills the yeast-animal which excretes it, and the fermentation stops; and because it stops, the wine is said to be made, and it will keep until the alcohol is removed, when fermentation may occur again if glucose still remains in the liquor.

Now, just what alcohol does to the cell which produced it, it does to all animal cells and tissues; it is death to them to the extent used. No living thing can live in it an instant. The human system is large and tough, and will endure a great deal; but a small dose of pure alcohol—only half an ounce—is immediate death. It fells the strongest man as though struck with a stone, and for much the same reason, as we shall see; it causes a shock which is an explosion of the nervous system. But, as you say, people do take alcohol constantly. Yes, but only in drams, largely diluted with water, so that fifteen to twenty per cent is the highest rate of alcohol. Whisky and brandy are diluted generally more than half. If taken pure, the quantity is small and seldom taken or it soon means delirium tremens and death.

When alcohol is taken it never gets further down the alimentary canal than the stomach. The lower gate of the stomach, the pylorus, utterly refuses to let it pass into the lower and finer intestines. We cannot sufficiently wonder at the strict prohibition sense of this organ. For if alcohol could pass into the finer tissues and so reach the lacteals, they would wither at once and death would certainly ensue. The stomach has, therefore, to extrude the alcohol through its coats into the blood, so that it may be carried out of the system by the skin, the lungs, and the kidneys. Until this extrusion takes place, this devil, alcohol, simply plays destruction in the human system, in every organ through which it passes, in proportion to the amount used. It excites the stomach, and if used in quantity or for a long time, destroys that organ by inflammation; literally burns it up. It burns the life-carrying corpuscles of the blood, and makes its serum a thin watery and useless fluid. It inflames the liver until it finally becomes a "hob-nail" mass of sores. It inflames the liver, so that Bright's disease is liable to ensue at the least provocation. It inflames and rots the lungs so that pneumonia is invited and is generally fatal. The skin becomes inflamed, dirty, congested, and diseased. Not an organ of the body but cries out, "I am poisoned!" and by its inflammation shows its frantic efforts to get rid of the destroying corrosive that turns its very life into inflammatory disease.

But the most terrible consequences are seen in the brain, which is the most wonderful of organs, the seat and citadel of the soul. Its outer portion is composed, as you know, of a mass of fatty, gray matter, made up of millions of little cells, whose action is our life. From thence, little white nerves, motor or sensitory, go to and come from every part of the body. The music which these little gray cells play is the substance of our life, mind and soul! If their healthy normal action is disturbed or stopped, it is all up with us, as far as we can pretend to be rational, moral or responsible beings. Alcohol, when in the blood, is carried by it directly to these gray cells, for they are fed constantly by the blood. Then what occurs? Let us consider how these wonderful cells are constituted and we shall see.

They are chiefly composed of "the oleo-palmitate of the glycero-glacial phosphates of choline: "which is to say that a butter-like fat, similar to olive and palm oils (C. H. O.) holds a glacial and deliquescent form of phosphoric acid (H. O. P.) by the side of a nitrogenous substance called choline (from Greek chole, bile, for there it was first found), of which the elements are C. H. O. N. In the last two of these substances we have phosphorus and nitrogen; in unstable chemical equilibrium and constantly undergoing the interplay of change, felt and known to us as consciousness, thought, soul. In a word, these elements are chemically arranged in these gray cells like a most delicately attuned musical instrument, upon which the world plays by means of our sensitory nerves; and the music is carried by the motor nerves throughout the body so as to adjust it and keep us in harmony with the world. If we do not obey this music and so fall out of the order of the world, its mighty changes soon overwhelm and destroy us. It is only by being able to conform to the order of the world, that we can live at all. How to do this the world tells us by playing through the nerves of sensation upon the grey cells of the brain, and thence the motor nerves provide for our safety. The blood constantly brings the nourishing elements to these cells, which keep them in order, and in good time and tune.

But now suppose that the blood, in addition to its nourishment, brings this dirty, acrid poison, alcohol, with it; what happens? The water (HO) of the phosphoric acid, and of the choline is at once taken by the affinity of the alcohol, the nitrogen, phosphorus, and glycerine are thrown together, and a minute nitro-glycerine explosion takes place in the little microscopic cells of the brain, as surely as it did when General Newton's little girl touched the key which threw similar unstable chemical elements together under the rocks of Hell Gate. Whenever nitrogen, glycerine, and phosphorus are brought together in unstable chemical equilibrium, then you may be sure there will be "mischief to pay," whether under Hell Gate or in the human brain; for that is the chemical condition of the most terrible explosives known.

When alcohol gets into the blood, it does and must "go to the head;" millions of little cells at once undergo explosions; the play of the regular, divine world music is stopped by an unnatural intruder which knocks the instrument out of tune at once. The soul is thus stricken down in its citadel; the motor nerves have only disorderly messages to carry, or stand motionless and paralyzed. What is the result? That most complex organism, the human body, is no longer under orderly or rational control. The little nerves that hold the gate-ways of the blood at the ends of the arteries let go their hold for they are paralyzed! The blood rushes to the face and flushes it. The heart has a torrent of blood poured upon it, and beats and flutters. The limbs move without will or purpose. The tongue moves wildly and incoherently; the truth is told in wine because mental order and control are lost. The passions are let loose, but yet are impotent, as Shakespeare describes in the Porter scene in Macbeth. The head aches, throbs, and is finally "on fire" with these explosions. The next day after the drink it aches with soreness while the blood brings us its kindly nourishing elements to rebuild the cells and to renew the healthy music—which is our soul—to take the place of the wild orgie of this devil in the brain. You know, too well, this story of drunkenness. It is too common to need description of the stages which lead to death by delirium tremens, if happily kidney trouble or some inflammatory disease does not anticipate that most terrible death.

Well, you may say, taken in small quantities, it may have some good effects. When science discovered the true nature of alcohol, as above explained, it gave a decisive No! to every question of the kind. Doctors Benjamin W. Richardson, Willard Parker, W. H. Draper, and thousands of our other distinguished physicians express the true verdict when they say in the words of the latter, "Alcohol is our worst enemy; always baleful, more or less in its effects."—Thaddeus B. Wakeman, in Kansas State Register.

TORONTO.

Dear Restitution:

By invitation of very kind friends in Toronto to pay them a visit, I took the north-bound train on the K. & O. R'y. at noon of July 15th, and arrived at Cleveland 9:45 p. m. I spent the following day (one of intense heat, and dust) in that lovely and rapidly-growing city (its population being 200,000). I had a very pleasant interview with Pres. C. Latimer, Chief Engineer of Nip. & O. R. W. He is a brother of great intellectual powers, high scientific attainments, and closely occupied with Bible investigations relative to the Great Pyramid, weights and measures, and with the prophetic destiny of the Great American Republic. I promised to call when returning, and will probably address their society on the Hebrew Phase of the Eastern Question.

On Monday I took the cars for Buffalo and Niagara Falls. I crossed the Suspension Bridge about dusk and slept on British territory. I slept quietly under the deep thunder of the rushing waters of one of the world's wonders. What will this be in the coming age?

Tuesday, at 10 a. m. I was in Niagara, Ont. As this village has bright prospects in the very near future I give a brief notice of its location and attractions as a "Watering Place" for summer visitors. It is situated in Canada at the mouth of the Niagara River. Its boundaries are the river, the lake (Ontario) and the mainland. Its streets, wide, level and sandy, are at right angles, running parallel with the lake, and crossing perpendicular to the lake. It contains, usually, a population of about 1500. The Queen's Hotel fronts Lake Ontario, and commands one of the most charming water views that can be imagined. It is of immense dimensions, with grounds fitted up with taste, making an attractive paradise of this age. It was made the principal boarding house of the Prophetic Conference. The Pavilion, for the permanent meetings of the International Conference is erected on "Conference Hill," in the Hotel Park, by the proprietors of the Queen's Royal Hotel, and for the special use of said Annual Conference. Its commanding lake view is most charming. The building (pavilion) seats comfortably an audience of about 400 persons.

Another attraction of this Niagara locality is the location and permanent establishment of the Canadian Chautauqua Assembly, whose dedication I had the privilege of attending and to whose principal officers I was introduced, but a simple recognition was all that my time would allow. They have purchased about 100 acres along Lake Ontario, and laid out the grounds tastefully; have erected an auditorium that will seat an audience of 8000; put up a hotel of large dimensions, and are zealously preparing to accomplish a great work. Thursday was to be the day of their chief attraction, when Dr. Vincent, Chancellor of the American "Chautauqua" was expected.

The meetings of the Annual International Conference in July of each year, and the permanent location of the Canadian Chautauqua Assembly, will make Niagara-on-the-Lake an attractive village.

THE CONFERENCE.

By invitation I attended the conferences and was present at nearly all its sessions from the 19th of July to the 28th. I was very kindly received into the family of John T. Shapter, of Toronto (he being a member of the Conference) and entertained by him at his own personal expense. Such liberality and kindness from one whom I had till then never seen, and by whom I was known by my writings only, gave me pleasing testimony that my pen-work is not wholly unappreciated. The house of Brother Shapter, commodious and attractive, commanding a beautiful lake view, will be one of my interesting and welcome homes during my visit to Toronto. This free and unaffected kindness is a pleasing attribute of the entire family. One thought more, if brotherly associations are so sweet in this mortal, imperfect state, how intensified will it be in our new abode?

That the special work of this conference may be the better understood, we append its own list of subjects for daily study: Inspiration, Creation and Revelation, the Successive Names of God, the Redeemer and the Redemption, Vicarious Atonement, Christ and the Fulness of God, Regeneration, Justification, Sanctification, the Flesh and the Spirit, Calling and Responsibility, Our Inheritance, the Davidic Covenant, the Premillennial Coming, the motives of Foreign Missions, Probation after Death, How and What to Preach for the Conversion of Sinners, Israel the Priestly Nation, the Thousand Years in the Apocalypse and in the Old Testament, (by Dr. West, of St. Paul, Minn.), the Church and the Kingdom.

"There will also be a special study of select portions of the word, such as parts of Zechariah and of the Apocalypse, some of the Messianic Psalms and sundry chapters of Isaiah and of the Epistles." Let me further quote their published views.

"The number of students and teachers of the word who are interested in this Annual Conference is now so large that it is unnecessary to mention any names of brethren expected to lead in the study of these various subjects. It is enough to say that the brethren identified for years with this meeting expect to attend (they were there), as also others, pastors and evangelists, whose sympathy has often been expressed but who now for the first time hope to be present and take part in the teaching. It may again be repeated that this meeting to which Christians of every name are cordially invited, has had from the beginning as its object not merely the study of the Word of God, but rather through such study the mutual comfort and refreshment of the children and servants of God, the increase of their work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, and the better understanding of the revealed purpose of God concerning the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God in this present age and in that which is to come. Special request is made for fervent and unceasing prayer that the blessing of God may be upon the meeting this year in larger measure than ever. The critical character of the times, the increasing antagonisms in the world and in the Church, the pressing demand for laborers in fields white for the harvest in this land and in all lands, the deepening conviction that the night is far spent and the day is at hand, all prove the need of more zealous devotion and holy living, more practical knowledge of the Scriptures for every form of service, and more prayerful heed of the word of prophecy, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn and the day star arise." W. J. Erdman, 193 Springfield St., Boston, Mass., Secretary. Committee: J. H. Brooks, 212 5th St., St. Louis, Mo.; W. J. Erdman, Cor. Sec.; T. C. Lowe, L. W. Munhall, G. C. Needham, R. Norton, H. M. Parsons, S. H. Kellog, J. Donovan, S. R. Briggs. Besides there were many other able men, such as Dr. Pierson from Philadelphia, and Dr. West from St. Paul, Minn. There was an educated native minister from Burmah, and a converted Jew (minister) from Montreal.

I was anxious to learn whether their written and spoken declarations would agree. To ascertain this point I had the constant and zealous teachings of nine days. The intelligence which clothed the thoughts of the speakers, and the spirit in which they were uttered, did ample credit to the heads and hearts of the teachers. To an inquiry put to the President relative to the denomination to which a certain one belonged, he answered with much warmth, "I don't know and I don't care what church he belongs to, so he is a Christian." I think that I can say with perfect truth that I have never listened to so many teachers on such a variety of Bible subjects, with such an entire harmony with my own views; on the inspiration of the Bible, character of God, of Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the nature and practical use of the prophecies, the character and nearness of the second advent, the looking for and watching for that event, the Jews, definition of church and kingdom! They were clear and full on the personal and premillennial coming and reign of Messiah, the new earth and nearly every point. The ideas uttered, the manner and spirit in which they were uttered and the readiness that the most able teachers transformed themselves into pupils under others, certainly did honor to their humble character, both as teachers and pupils.

They constituted and exhibited themselves a body of intelligent and able believers. Some may wish to know how I myself, as an entire stranger to all their ablest men, and, I may say, to the whole body, was treated. To this I answer freely, I have no complaint to offer for the following reasons: 1. Able men among them are assigned their subjects a year in advance that they may have the year for preparation, to make their yearly meeting full of mature instruction. 2. The secretary had sent out circulars, as early as March 15, 1887, requesting the names of those that purposed to attend the meeting. 3. They have had eleven annual meetings. 4. I came there without giving them any previous notice of my expectation to attend or desire to take any part in their exercise. 5. They knew nothing of such a person nor of his claims to notice until his work on the prophecies (Eastern Question and Coming Age) placed on their stand attracted their attention. This did not take place till one week of the conference had passed.

The pavilion was generally full with intelligent lovers of prophecy from nearly all of the States and from Canada. I had, during the whole time taken my seat far back in the audience, (I never push myself into notice). On Tuesday of the second week, near the close of the morning exercises, the secretary, in reading notices, said, If Brother Westbee is in the audience, let him please come forward to the stand. I went forward, when the secretary remarked that he wanted to introduce me to the principal teachers of the conference, which he very kindly did. He said that he had lost sight of me for a few days. The next day I was called forward publicly again and called upon to open the conference with prayer, and afterwards to dismiss the audience. In the afternoon I took leave of the conference, and soon left for Toronto. My work gave me the introduction first, as the size commanded notice, and its variety of prophetic problems interested. The President, Dr. Brooks, said that he should like very much to read the work but that he could not carry it around with him. I took his address and promised to send it to him. Dr. West and others looked over the books. I hope that this visit will open up a new and extended field for their circulation.

In conclusion there are a few points I wish to notice:

1) Do they occupy the front rank in the army of pre-millennial advent proclaimers? Many reasons can be urged against the possibility of their occupying such a position? They do not seem to claim any special work in view of the speedy advent.

2. They believe in a future personal antichrist in the covenant week, ignoring the papacy, because there were many popes, overlooking the fact that it was the one-man-power, spliced 200 times like all human domination.

3. There was nothing taught relative to the signs of the times.

4. The special agents of Rev. xth and xivth were not noticed.

5. The national union of Israel and Judah received no special notice.

6. Life only through Christ was neither noticed nor believed.

7. We have, therefore, an advanced field which we must occupy.

8. I do hope that we can organize as a whole body to do this work.

9. Union then is great power. Why not call such a general conference? The work is vast; the time is short.

J. P. WESTBEE.

"Jesus Led into Temptation of the Devil by the Spirit of God."

Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Matt. iv. 1. Immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness, Mark i. 12. And Jesus being full of the Holy Spirit returned from Jordan and was led of the spirit into the wilderness. Luke iv. 1.

These quotations establish the fact that Jesus was led or driven of the spirit of God into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. What led the devil into the wilderness to tempt Jesus we are not told. Jesus' baptism in the Jordan was done openly. The declaration which followed immediately in audible voice from heaven, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased," as well as the descent of the spirit of God upon him, and seen by John who was told that he would be divinely marked out, furnished both Jesus and John with evidences not simply that he was the Son of God, but that the time had now arrived for his public manifestation to Israel as such. By what other name this one who in here called the devil was then known, nor any thing further of him beyond his having access to the battlement of the temple and his profession to be able to give all the kingdoms of the world (habitable) and the glory of them to Jesus if he would fall down and worship him; it is not said. The two first parts of the temptation relate to the present faith of Jesus in the public declaration of God that he was indeed the Son of God.

The third related to his possession of the kingdoms of the habitable. The two first show that in the judgment of the temple the Son of God should not suffer himself to be hungry or deny himself indulgence in any freak of his fancy because it was written that he would give his angels charge of him to save him from injury. These temptations were either the honest convictions of the tempter or assumed with the view to entrap Jesus into his power. The inference to me seems fairer to accept them as this real, although mistaken convictions. The Son of God could as easily have turned stones into bread as water into wine, and also as easily have walked upon the air as upon the water. The power was already in Jesus to do the one or the other either, to put forth or restrain, as he judged best. The evidence that he was the Son of God would be made more manifest by his subjection to the will of God than by any power put forth by him. He has showed that sonship is proved by obedience rather than by wonderful works. The popular idea as presented by the tempter that wonderful works were stronger evidences of sonship than obedience is abundantly manifested to be a mistake. The temptation presented by the devil is therefore simply such as is believed and taught by all men who judge and act according to their own judgment in preference to the expressed will of God. Jesus was hungry and could have satisfied his hunger if he had chosen; but the evidence of submission to the flesh could have been given and of obedience to the Spirit would have been wanting if he had done so. He chose that the world to manifest to men that he was the Son of God, but he could do this without tempting the Lord his God by presumptuously exposing himself to injury. The third part of the temptation is also based upon the human conception of how the end sought can be obtained in contrast with the divine. The possession of all the kingdoms of the world was already the promised inheritance of the Son of God. Both he and his tempter were under the same law which said "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." To fall down therefore and worship any one else was to violate the law and although it might give temporary possession of the kingdoms of the world deprive the worshiper of the permanent. Jesus knew that as the Son of God he was also the born heir of all these kingdoms and that no human power could either give to him or withhold from him his inheritance when the time came if he worshiped and served the Lord his God. The temptation therefore is a true and natural picture of the Spirit's ways of accomplishing his purposes which never fail in the end, however they may appear to fail in the progress to that end and the flesh's ways of accomplishing his ends which at best have only partial and temporary success for the present and total failure in the future, and in the end. Temptation or trial is the divine and perfect method for instructing men in his ways and of putting to silence the professedly wise and prudent, who prefer their own to his. Jesus proved by his successfully resisting the wisdom of the tempter that he had faith in God's declaration of himself as the Son of God and King of Israel. The tempter also knew that as he could not succeed by corrupting Jesus his only course now was to seek his destruction by denying his claims. He departed from him for a season but during that season put forth all his power to set aside his claims and account for the extraordinary powers manifested by him by affirming that he was mad and under the power of a demon or of Beelzebub the reputed prince of demons.

The kingdoms of the habitable contemporary with Jesus were not at the disposal of one man or one administration. There was a sort of triple power existing by compromise. This was composed of the Roman, Hebrew and the Aaronic. Each part striving for the mastery but neither one able to succeed. All these were moved by the success of John the Baptist and rejoiced when they put him to silence. All three were moved by the success of Jesus, and were frightened by the consequences to them and their power if they let him alone. The one however who was most bitterly moved was the Aaronic, and they are invariably found taking the lead and drawing the other two to partnership with them in their murderous purposes. It seems fair to infer therefore that the Aaronic or priestly power was the devil in the temptation who were defeated in it, but which on every occasion possible after that defeat attempted to entrap him until they became desperate through failure and determined to risk the effect of his destruction. This last resolve however only served to demonstrate the weakness and wickedness of human wisdom when brought into contrast with the divine. Divine wisdom sees the end from the beginning of every act or cause, and therefore can measure and reveal all the details arising out of it. Human wisdom deceives itself into the belief that it can do the same until its failure is made manifest to all. The flesh has lusted against the Spirit ever since there was flesh upon the earth. It is not subject into the law of God neither indeed can be. The history of Jesus from his immersion until his ascension to the right hand of God is the history of the contest and the failure of the flesh the beginning that is the flesh to gain success in any one thing which it attempted. The devil aimed from the beginning; for this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil, that is of the flesh, and deliver those who all their lifetime were subject to it or the bond slaves of it by obedience to its lusts and passions. Glory therefore be to God who giveth us the victory over the flesh, that is the devil, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

To the Scattered Ones in Indiana.

Having been chosen by the committee appointed at the June Conference as Evangelist to visit churches not belonging to the Indiana State Conference, and other places where we have no organization, I take this means of finding out your whereabouts. To such I will say, if you will address me at once, giving location, etc., I will try and visit you before the annual conference which will convene in September. To isolated brethren, where the Abrahamic faith is not preached, I will say, if you can arrange a place to hold a series of meetings, and believe that good may be accomplished, address me at once, and arrangements will be made to be with you as long as the interest may demand. Truly, "the harvest is great but the laborers are few." "Let us labor therefore that we may enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God." Address,

WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT!

What shall pleasure profit,
When the Christ appears!
Hoarded gold and rubies,
Of the wasted years!
Wilt thou for earth's poor honors,
Its joys and fancies gay,
Sell the future riches?
Give thy soul away!

Charm may stun voices
With their veiled strains;
And the hand of friendship,
May weave the golden chain.
But what is wreath of laurel,
To bend anear the lamb,
What the smile of flowers,
On the day of doom!

All thy treasured riches,
Bubbles fate of sin,
To the coming kingdom
Will not fit thee in,
Nor life, nor kingly glory,
Canst thou with these things buy;
Pleading at the judgment,
Vain will be thy cry.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

ON THE SEVENTH DAY.—NO. II.

It is remarkable that the introduction and enjoining of the Sabbath observance was in connection with the perishable and corruptible manna in the wilderness. But even if this has no significance, we notice the strictly local and Jewish argument of the decalogue. "I have brought thee out of Egypt." Every single and separate charge of the law was to this delivered nation. In the proclamation of the ten commandments, the various forms of direct address, thou, thee, thy, and thyself are used not less than thirty-five times, thus remarkably particularizing the new and rising nation of Israel, and twelve of these local and identifying terms are expressed in the charge of keeping the Sabbath. And there are twenty or more references of the great Law-giver to himself in similar variety of expression, unless the phrase, "Lord thy God" be taken as a unit. Thus in mode emphatic and clear, is this whole covenant defined and established between two parties only. The great Gentile and Christian world of today have never entered into that covenant or been embraced in it, a covenant of works, a covenant mainly of negations, prohibitions of transgression. It was a promulgation of a code, in terms of strictness, in marked contrast with the spiritual nature of the gospel. The law-giver was pleased to speak of temporal results of actions, whether good or bad, as to this decalogue.

Children of four generations should feel the pain and penalty of parental transgression, and for filial disobedience, the term of life in trans-Jordanic Canaan, might be, and would be brief. Thus temporal motives were urged. The terms of the law were in spirit and language peremptory, and obedience might be, as no doubt in great degree it was, profunctory. At all events, the original, unmerited, unchanging, heart-compelling love of God, his pity and grace, his purpose of salvation, is not revealed here, as in the gospel. Clearly the process and purpose of the divine leader out of Egypt was nation-building. This commenced with the call of Abraham, was continued in the work of Joseph and Jacob and Moses. A nation must have a birth, a constitution, must have law and organization, territory and religion. And everything in this Israel was an introduction, and adumbration of something better to come in another age. When the better has come, the introductory has vanished.

It is said that the political fabric of that time is the foundation of national order in all ages, that the institutes and statutes of Moses are practically embodied in all the best governments. This is true within limits, but not absolutely, by any means. For the Mosaic system recognized concubinage, and contained special provisions which were certainly not intended for all ages and nations.

Relative to the Sabbath, it was a "sign between" the Most High and the Hebrew nation, "throughout their generations." It is so expressed in terms. Its penalty was death. It was a bond of a "perpetual covenant." It was a legally and regularly recurring period of rest, with the negative requirement of abstention from labor, without any positive injunction of religious service or worship, certainly not in the terms of its announcement. Its purely Israelitish character therefore is sufficiently obvious. It never was changed or expanded from this function and application in the new covenant by express and revealed enactment.

It is particularly worthy of notice and attention that our Lord and his apostles have in the most varied and ample language, instructed us in Christian duties. Every kind of religious excellence is unfolded. Character-forming is constantly encouraged and assisted. Moral obligations are explained. The fruits of faith or its sequences, if you please, are given, in ever so liberal and edifying measure. And the Christian, in fact, comes by enlightened instinct, to see that with the true knowledge of God, comes the enlarged faculty or power or moral perceptions. This is the key of virtue. The believer in Jesus Christ is gifted with the secret of knowledge and love of righteousness. And hence it is, that the Sinaitic system loses its glory or force to him.

There is no need nor occasion for it. All fulness and power and preciousness are seen and accepted elsewhere. The glory of the law is but as the dim light of the gibbous and retiring moon, an orb whose opacity is more striking than its light enough to declare its desuetude. Its faint and trivial glow but pronounces it obsolete. And accordingly, to be informed in religious duty, and stimulated to its performance, I have other and higher motive influence, and have no occasion to turn back to the echoes of old thunder. I can not admit in the smallest degree that the code of Christ, if I may so express it, is not enough. There is enough, abundantly enough, in the gospel to satisfy every want, and to encourage every exertion. There is no longer need of stones for killing, nor darkness for alarming. Disobedience to the Christian, forever contains a formidable penalty in itself. He who falls short in growth and grace, is himself punished every step of the way. His own grief is a felt penalty, if penalty it should be called, or rather there is a chastening pain in conscious non-conformity. But in truth the genius of the gospel is not chief or real in penalty, it is in inspiration. It is in the call of God to come up higher. It is in spirit-quickening. It is in enlarged and enlarging views of truth. It is in new views of divine character. It is in the omnipotence of love, its inflexible purpose, its exalted and glorious persistence. He who breathes this fragrant air, who tastes this breath of heaven, has no call to go to Horeb. He who tastes the speckless and peerless honey, has no mind to nurse with his lips the discolored stave of a broken sugar cask.

Do this or die, is not the argument of life and action to him, but the gracious perceptions of the sweet supreme will, and the felt and gentle impulses of the Infinite Spirit, and the uttered goodness of the Lord in the land of the living, both in inspiration and nature, these are the things which move and mould a man born to the higher life. Does any man that lives beneath the cope of heaven dream that a single "shalt not" from a cliff of the stony peninsula, will have more potency to move a true pilgrim heart, than the "come and welcome" of the divine Jesus? Is a thunder burst from the old land of judgment needed to quicken him, to whom the cross with its dying Lamb has a pathos and appeal louder and more powerful than any vibration of Judaism? The moment we receive Judaism (except by and through the evangelism of the new covenant, when in fact it will be transformed) we galvanize a dead corpse to life. To me the Sabbatarian idea has an odor of a holy sepulchre, not that in which Jesus died, but that in which the legal system was entombed. Does it need to be resurrected? There be those who find for us dead Parachs, mute and grim in their mummy-cases, but I scarcely see the need for discontombing Judaism, even though it had been laid away in spices.

It is unnecessary to bring citations of blessing and approbation in the law and prophets for faithful Sabbath-keeping. It was the plain duty of Israel to keep the seventh day. But to extend the legal system of the Jews beyond its allotted limit, either of time of place, would be as mal-apropos as to deny that a Jew was bound by it. We may say that a misfit either way, would be an error and a misfortune.

For myself, I have no sectarian ambition. The truth is supreme in value and obligation. Amid the myriad jars of Christendom, I would seek that with a single eye. And a zeal not according to knowledge, to my apprehension, is as regretable as apathy with the truth fairly in the palm of the hand. And it has long ago been proved that an object with a lustre and brightness of truth in seeming, has enlisted a zeal of pursuit, and excited an order of attachment, and enthusiasm of propagation as intense as truth is sanity and purity.

With respect to the observance of the first day, I make no affirmation of duty, or positively, of expediency. But I look at the matter of days a little in this light. On the seventh day of creation the mighty Maker of the terrestrial frame, in some notable sense, rested. Very well. That rest was commemorated by a chosen people, constituted under law, into a nation, for fifteen hundred years, more or less. Then Messiah came, the elect of God. He was God's arm in another work, that is to say, of redemption. The heavens are the work of the fingers of the Omnipotent. But there was an arm bared like that of an athlete, for redemption. Here was power, and even labor in pain. There is something equal to a new creation in this work of zeal and strength, and in this witness of tears and blood, to the suffering of the Redeemer, with which nature itself sympathizes. When Jesus died he said, "It is finished." What? The work he came to do was finished, and he entered into rest. The resurrection brought rest to the glorious sufferer. That day was a day of delightful rest to him, it seems to me. When was there another rest day equal to that, since the world was made? And did not God rest also in the rest of his beloved Son? It seems to me so. Do we say Deity cannot suffer? Are we certain the heart of the one invisible God did not suffer, in the day of our Savior's agony? At all events I cannot see any day of rest grander than the day when our Lord rose from the dead. Then if such a rest-day is worthy of commemoration and regard, there is something Sabbath-like in it, and about it. It has a preciousness and a glory. Its observance is rather a voluntary than a commanded act of a Christian. In a sense, too, all time, since that great achievment of victory over death, has a kind of sacredness if we are sensitively alive ourselves, by a spiritual resurrection.

There is something notable, but not to be treated in a manner over-theoretic or dogmatic in the Jewish Sabbathe, beside the seventh. There is the waving of the sheaf of first fruits, on the morrow after the Sabbath. Yet again, counting seven Sabbaths from this morrow after the Sabbath, we come to a morrow after the seventh Sabbath, and there is again a priestly waving of holy things slain, with bread of first fruits. The tenth day of the seventh month, also, is a Sabbath of rest, and the fifteenth day of the seventh month begins a week of offerings by fire, and the first and eighth days are days of holy convocation, in which servile work is interdicted. I build no system, or construct no hypothesis on these or other institutions or observances.

It is not unnatural or wrong to remember, however, that on the question of Sabbath keeping our Savior was assailed with a greater bitterness, and regarded with a deadlier dislike, than perhaps on any other question. It was the Sabbatarian intensity that sharpened itself at last into a sting of death for the friend of man and the Redeemer of the human race. And I hardly need repeat the manifest unreadiness of Paul, in the view of this and other things that powerfully affected his mind, to make the smallest concession to the spirit of legalism, or to give charges or cautions of any kind whatever, in all the multitude of his brotherly and apostolic lessons, relative to keeping the seventh day. If there is no eloquence in this silence, there may be, at least, room to consider the allowance of liberty on the subject. Paul would give no charge if God did not, while with equal certainty we may believe he would if he did.

Some one may look up and say, "Honestly and candidly, now, do you think the law of the ten commandments is of no service to the church, has no influence, gives no light or help, and is worth nothing to the world?" In answer, I say, if there are those who need, or think they need, or are believed by others to need some stimulus from the law, I would not refuse it to them. There may be those of unspiritual mind, to whom a pedagogic rod has force. Those will use their discipline who are willing or desirous to take the responsibility. If children in or out of any ecclesiastic order need help other than the infinite possibilities of gospel and grace can give I have no thought of saying taboo. It may be well to be careful how we rear any structure however on a very narrow foundation, or strive with much labor to rear a pyramid in the inverted order, of apex on the earth, and base in the sky. The more this building grows, the less secure it is. The great rock of ages is Messianic. Here is the true building site. And here shall rise the structure whose top shall forever bathe in heaven, and glow in the light of the glory of God.

C. COLEGROVE.

Corrections.—In my last article, for "a law inseperable," read "a law irreposable." For "a law absolute by accomplishment," read "a law obsolete by accomplishment," and for "an article written at a single setting," read sitting, in its proper place.

THE COMING AGE,

—ITS—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contain over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. U. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvations; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the star of the Jews, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 440 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00.

The Gospel according to St. Matthew,

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. Dead PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 17, 1887. NO. 31.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms--TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months discontinued.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

JERUSALEM.

There are many things connected with Jerusalem, which one who has never seen the city, or, rather, who has not lived in it, can not possibly realize. Most of the references to Jerusalem which he has read or heard in his life have led him to think of it as a place of beauty and strength, attractive in situation, and imposing in size. The common mistake is, after all, a very natural one,—of supposing that the fervid religious language which is applied to the Holy City describes its present condition. No greater mistake, however, could be made, since the disparity between such religious phrases and the actual condition of Jerusalem is beyond conception.

Although this mistake is so common, every person has himself to blame for it in a measure, since every library contains carefully written books, which give all kinds of facts respecting this ancient city; and from these one can inform himself thoroughly, if he chooses to do so.

Let me mention a few points in regard to which one's preconceived notions of Jerusalem are widely at variance with the truth.

1. Its size. It is impossible for one to realize that Jerusalem is one of the smallest cities in the world. The longest distance across it, from north-east to south-west, is but a trifle more than three-quarters of a mile. The distance from east to west is less; and that from north to south is still less than that form east to west.

2. Its surface. It is impossible for one to realize that it is one of the most uneven cities in the world. This feature is not so striking now as it must have been in ancient times, since the debris in the parts where it is shallowest is about ten feet deep, and in the parts where it is deepest not less than ninety feet in depth. This little spot, so famous in history, was made up of four or perhaps five hills, separated by valleys of varying depths, in such a way that the hillsides were at some points exceedingly abrupt and almost vertical.

3. Its Poverty. It is hard for one to realize that Jerusalem is one of the poorest cities in the world. It can no longer boast of families of wealth. Most of the people are very poor, and it is true that a large percentage of the inhabitants scarcely know from day to day where they are going to get their daily bread.

4. Its Filth. It is hard for one to realize that Jerusalem—once "beautiful for situation," "the joy of the whole earth"—is one of the filthiest cities in the world. The inhabitants take no pains whatever to keep it clean, and the government does but little towards this end, and what it does is done in a very intermittent and slovenly manner. During the long, hot, dry summer, when, from the first of April to the last of November, the sun reigns supreme, everything—filth and carrion included—is burned up. Thus the natural effects of filth are to a degree obviated. People who talk of "modern miracles" need look no farther than Jerusalem to find one. It is a perpetual miracle that the city is not swept by a plague or a pestilence every year. Anyone from civilized lands, who goes about the streets of Jerusalem, especially in the Jewish quarter, during the rainy season; when he is obliged to wade in filth until he is actually nauseated by it, exclaims, involuntarily, "Why is it that this city is not visited by pestilence?" In the uninterrupted burning heat of the sun during the long summer, is found the probable explanation.

This subject is one which can not be dwelt upon in detail. All house, kitchen, and night filth goes into the street. Dead cats, rats, fowls, are left lying in the streets. Dead donkeys and dogs, after some hours or a whole day perhaps, are drawn outside the walls. Water closets are simply openings in the thick walls of the houses, descending to within five or ten feet of the ground, where they stop. Here, in the walls, which are not too closely built, all the deposits accumulate, year after year; and these pestiferous sinks are cleaned only when the atmosphere about them becomes too vile for even a Jew or an Arab to endure. Many facts, in corroboration of what I am saying of the filthy condition of the city, could be given, were they not too disgusting for public print. I could give, furthermore, the testimony of resident physicians, and I could speak of the efforts which physicians and consuls have made to induce the government to do something to remedy this terrible state of things. Individuals also have made efforts to induce single families or shop-keepers to clean in front of their own premises, but these various efforts have been of little avail.

People talk a great deal of nonsense about the Jews being healthy and long-lived, because they observe so closely the sanitary laws of Moses. So far as this is applied to the Jews of Jerusalem, it is pure fiction; for no other people on earth defy all sanitary laws so universally, persistently, and constantly, as do the Jews of Jerusalem.

5. Its Society. One can not realize how strangely society is organized in Jerusalem. Perhaps the word "organized" is quite inappropriately used in this connection. "Thrown together" would better express the fact. People are here from every country in Europe. Also from all parts of Central and Western Asia, from Northern Africa, and the islands of the Mediterranean. At one time I made a list of languages that I knew were spoken in Jerusalem, and they amounted to thirty-five. The variety in habits, manner of life, and especially in costumes, of these different peoples, is very great. Were a person to stand at the Jaffa Gate, through which most of the travel and traffic enters Jerusalem, and watch the motley crowds come and go, he could not possibly fail of being intensely interested and entertained. The speech, the dress, and the features of these his fellowmen, from different parts of the world, would awaken in him the liveliest curiosity.

6. Its Religion. This is another surprising fact connected with Jerusalem. The inhabitants of the city are divided into Moslems, Jews, and Christians, several kinds of Jews, and at least two kinds of Mohammedans. Altogether, the inhabitants number about 42,000. Of these, 20,000 are Jews, 12,000 Mohammedans, and 8,000 Christians. Many of my readers know already—still, the fact can be restated—that the word "Christian" has not the same signification in Jerusalem that it has in our own or in any other occidental country, since it is applied to any person who is not a Moslem or a Jew. This makes it a comprehensive term,—"Broad Church," with a vengeance.

The "Greek" church embraces the "Catholic" and the "Orthodox" branches. Many of the natives—that is, Syrians or Arabs—belong to this church, as well as the Russians, and persons of Greek nationality.

The "Latin" church embraces all Roman Catholics. There are also Copts, Abyssinians, Armenians, Syrians, and Protestants. Perhaps it should be said that the difference between the Copts and the Abyssinians is not very great.

These sects of Oriental Christians are very jealous of each other, and quarrels among them are by no means infrequent, especially in regard to matters connected with the Holy Sepulcher. The Latins and the Greeks are zealous in their efforts to secure new converts, and in the means which they use to retain the members of their respective communions. These great establishments pay, therefore, assiduous attention to the physical wants of their people, knowing full well that the spiritual allegiance of an Oriental is best secured in this manner.

Both of these churches have a large amount of property in their possession, consisting of lands, convents, and houses. They give every family of their communions house-rent free. They also give them bread twice a week, and frequently soup. Some families who own houses will rent them, and occupy a house belonging to the convent free of rent. The convent makes no objection to this. These things seem so strange to us here in New England, that I must add that I am reporting only what I know to be facts. By such means the good-will of these simple-minded Orientals is retained. That religion which furnishes house-rent and a large share of one's food free of expense,—why, "that is the kind of religion to have." Thus the people reason, and thus their superiors, or the church officials, allow them to reason. Some families, it is true, are so nearly destitute that help is very necessary; but no distinction is made, and rich and poor share alike in these favors of the convents.

I have often said that Jerusalem was a very difficult place for Protestantism to flourish in. And, if one wishes to know the reason why it is so, let him consider what I have just stated. The principles which actuate Protestantism on the one hand, and these two great Oriental religions on the other, are totally unlike. Protestantism inculcates independence and self-reliance. A man must provide for himself and his family. Charity is bestowed in cases of permanent disability, help is always given, in the hope that the recipient will soon cease to need help. In the Greek and Latin churches of Jerusalem, "charity" is given in the first place to secure converts, and, in the second place, to retain them. Under this "bonus" system, it is not strange that these two churches flourish.

A somewhat similar state of things exists among the Jews. Every Jew is helped by money that comes from abroad. "This 'haluka,'" or present, is a curse to the Jews of Jerusalem. It undermines independence, and encourages pauperism. A very few admit this, but the great body of the Jews look upon this money as a blessing, and reckon upon it as a part of their income.

In such an atmosphere,—where that is the best religion which furnishes most house-rent and bread free,—what foothold can Protestantism have? Nevertheless, in spite of these obstacles, Christian missionaries have not labored wholly in vain, even in this forbidding field. In a few cases, Christian manhood has asserted itself; and, while there is but a handful of native Protestants in the city, among them may be found families that, by independence, self-reliance, education, and uprightness in all their conduct, really adorn the doctrine which they profess.

Seventh-Day Adventism Renounced, after an Experience of Twenty-eight Years, by a Prominent Minister and Writer of that Faith.

As I propose to write a few articles upon my experience in keeping the Seventh-Day, probably the reader would like to know something of my connection with that work. The following from different papers will give all that is necessary. The Kalamazoo Daily Telegraph, May 20th, 1887, says: "Elder Canright has been a Seventh-Day Adventist for twenty-eight years, and has preached among them twenty-two years. He was acknowledged among all as one among their ablest, leading men. He has labored extensively from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Minnesota to Texas. About one thousand persons have embraced the Seventh-Day faith under his labors, and ten ministers are now preaching that faith who were his converts. Besides writing extensively for their papers, he is the author of twenty-two books, pamphlets and tracts on that faith, which have been sold by tens of thousands, and scattered to the ends of the earth. The Elder has held many responsible positions among them. Last summer he was sent to ten different States to attend their great conventions. At the time he dissolved his connection with them he had the charge of eighteen churches in Michigan, was assistant editor of the Gospel Sickle, was teacher of theology in the Battle Creek College, where he had a class of nearly two hundred, and was writing lessons for their Sabbath Schools throughout the world. He was decidedly the ablest debater in the denomination, having held fourteen set debates with able ministers, from Maine to California.

"Last fall he was selected by his people to debate the Sabbath question with Prof. D. R. Dungan [Disciple], President of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa. Canright said it cost him a terrible struggle to break away from all these long settled associations of personal friends and dearly cherished plans and ideas. But at last his convictions that Seventh-Day Adventism in some of its main features was an error, became so strong that he was compelled to abandon it. He parted from his former brethren with the kindest of feeling. Their leading paper, the Advent Review and Herald, of March 22d, says of him: 'In leaving us, he has taken a much more manly and commendable course than most of those who have withdrawn from us, coming voluntarily to our leading brethren, and frankly stating the condition of mind he was in. He did this in his own church in our presence, and so far as we know, has taken no unfair, underhanded means to injure us in any way. He goes from our midst with no immoral stain on his character, and chooses associations more pleasant to himself. This is every man's personal privilege if he chooses to take it.'"

The World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., March 23d, 1887, says: "This letter will be a pleasant surprise to the Crisis readers who have known Elder Canright to be an able, zealous, and remarkably successful advocate of Seventh-Day Adventism. Probably he has made more converts to that system in New England than any other person ever did, or ever can."

The Christian Oracle, Des Moines, Iowa, May 5th, 1887, says: "It is idle for Adventists to say that he is not the peer of any man they have ever had in their ranks. I have for a number of years been referred to Mr. Canright as the man that could defend their doctrine against anything that I might bring against it. At the very mention of debate last summer in this city, he was the choice of all men who were heard to say anything on that side of the subject."

The Christian Herald, Detroit, Mich., April 28th, 1887, says: "Rev. D. M. Canright was for many years one of the leading ministers among the Seventh-Day Adventists, and until his change of denominational relationship, he was professor of Biblical exegesis in their college at Battle Creek. He is the author of more than a score of books and pamphlets published in the interest of that denomination."

The Otsego (Mich.) Union, says: "Mr. Canright has long been known in the church, as one of the very ablest ministers in the Advent society. We publish a letter from the reverend gentleman this week. Mr. and Mrs. Canright are held in the highest esteem by our whole people."

I give the above that the reader may know whether or not I am qualified to speak understandingly on this subject.

WHY I LEFT THEM.

I did not leave the Seventh-Day Adventists because of any ill treatment by them, for they have treated me in the most kindly manner, paid me liberally, given me the best of positions, appreciated all I did, loved me as a brother, and did all it was possible to do to keep me with them. I left them because I became profoundly convinced that it was a system of error which was working evil to the believers, to society, and to the gospel. I cheerfully bear them record that they are an honest, earnest, self-sacrificing class of Christians, who believe in the fundamental principles of the gospel the same as other people do. In moral character and purity of life they will compare favorably with other churches, yet they have their full share of black sheep, as well as other churches. But to be honest is one thing, and to be right is quite another.

It cost me a terrible struggle and a great sacrifice to leave them, for in doing it I had to leave all my life-long friends, the cherished hopes of my youth, the whole work of my life, all the means of my support, every honorable position I held, and bring upon myself reproach, hatred and persecution. I had to begin life anew among strangers, with untried methods, uncertain where to go or what to do. No one who has not tried it can ever begin to realize the fearful struggle it requires. It is the dread of all this which holds many with them who are yet dissatisfied where they are. I know that this is so, for many have confessed it to me and yet remain where they were.

I will quote a few words from letters received: "I have had many blue times in my experience because of doubts. . . . Once I decided that I must follow the convictions of my own judgment in these things; but when the time came the pressure was so strong that I tried to convince myself that I was wrong. . . . The facts are, I am just miserable. . . . It seems like a terrible thing to take a course that will cause all the cherished friends of this world to look upon you as one fallen from grace; and here I am bound with these chains." And there he and hundreds of others remain today. Another writes: "It seems to me that the views held by Seventh-Day Adventists are so burdensome that they will crush me. They are a yoke of bondage which I cannot stand up under. Still I do want to be right." Another writes: "I tell you I am in a badly muddled up state in religion, and knowing you have been to the very bottom of the Seventh-day Adventist faith, and now have bidden adieu to it, I apply to you." Another minister writes: "How am I straightened, while the fetters are being forged for most unwilling limbs! . . . What a distress we are in as a people! how miserable! and is there no relief?" And still another talented minister writes me: "Our ministers, and people as well, are growing to be a denomination of hypocrites, by a slavish fear of expressing an honest belief. . . . I am sick and disheartened. . . . The basis of confidence is gone; and I shall only await the come-out of the matter." Still another writes: "There is a fear on the part of the powers that be, of free thought and free discussion. So far as this is the case it is a shame and disgrace to us." Another leading minister in writing me hits the point exactly when he says: "If any people ever were wise in bondage we are. Every point of our faith is covered by a vision [of Mrs. White], and we therefore have no right to investigate for the purpose of receiving new light. Our study must be to defend the faith because God has told us it is right." And yet all these good brethren patch up the matter some way, and go right on as though nothing were wrong. I know how to pity them without censuring them, for I myself have passed through precisely the same experience.

These are fair samples of how scores among them feel, men in leading positions to the humblest in the church. Largely they keep it to themselves, but occasionally it will out. Many of them almost get out, and then fall back to linger along in bondage all the rest of their lives. Some backslide entirely; some go off into Spiritualism, into Universalism, into infidelity, or into some fanatical notion, and so are ruined forever. I have before me a list of thirty-six ministers who once preached the Seventh-Day Adventist faith, but in the end were either ruined by it or else gave it up for Spiritualism, for Universalism, for infidelity, for some fanatical sect, or for nothing. Nearly all these were talented men, persons who were first-class ministers, fully as able, and in some respects, more talented, than any now remaining with them. In fact, more first-class, able ministers have left them than they now have with them.

Elders T. M. Preble and J. B. Cook were the very first Adventist ministers who embraced and preached the Seventh-Day Sabbath. They were both men of decided talent and wide influence. They wrote the first books in favor of that day in connection with the Advent doctrine. See Andrew's "History of the Sabbath," pp. 501, 502. Thus they were the real fathers and founders of the present Seventh-Day Adventist movement. But both these men finally gave up, and finally opposed it ever afterwards. This is a significant fact which makes a bad showing for a work which claims so much of divine guidance in its origin.

The ministers of less talent who have quit preaching it are more numerous still. Also I judge that about one-third of those who embrace the Seventh-Day finally give it up, while many of those who hold on to it live in a backslidden condition. Also, at different times, quite large parties have split off from them, holding on to the Sabbath, but opposing the visions of Mrs. White and other points.

WHY I GAVE UP THE SEVENTH DAY.

I gave up the observance of the Seventh-Day because I became fully convinced that the evidence was not sufficient to justify its observance, and that the blessing of God did not go with the keeping of it. Like thousands of others, when I embraced the Seventh-Day Sabbath I thought that the argument was all on one side, so plain that one hour's reading ought to settle it, so clear that no man could reject the Sabbath and be honest. I felt willing to meet the world in its defence. The only marvel to me was that everybody did not see and embrace it.

But after keeping it twenty-eight years; after having persuaded more than a thousand others to keep it; after having read my Bible through, verse after verse, more than twenty times; after having scrutinized, to the very best of my ability, every text, line and word in the whole Bible having the remotest bearing upon the Sabbath question; after having looked upon all these, both in the original and in many translations; after having searched in lexicons, concordances, commentaries and dictionaries; after having read armsful of books on both sides of the question; after having read every line in all the early church fathers upon this point; after having written several works in favor of the Seventh-Day, which were satisfactory to my brethren; after having debated the question for more than a dozen times; after seeing the fruits of keeping it, and after weighing all the evidence in the fear of God and of the judgment, I am fully settled in my own mind and conscience that the evidence is against the keeping of the Seventh-Day. Now, if others think that they know better about this question than I do, and that they can settle it in a day, as I once did, I shall not quarrel with them, but pity their credulity.—D. M. Canright, in World's Crisis.

FRUIT CULTURE IN PALESTINE.

Orange groves are confined chiefly to the sea coast, where the alluvial soil washed down from the hills and plains mixed with the beach sand, seems to favor their growth. At Jaffa there are no less than five hundred different gardens containing altogether not far from 800,000 trees. The trees are planted about fifteen feet apart, although there is no regularity or exactness in this, any more than there is in anything else that the natives do.

In July or August cuttings are made from the sweet lemon tree, each about eighteen inches long, and planted in beds and watered twice a day. In the second year they are budded. When the bud has taken, the lemon stalk is cut off a few inches above the bud, and the new shoots begin to bear in the third or fourth year. The trees continue bearing for twenty or thirty years.

Gardeners aim to water their trees every fifth day. A great well exists in every large garden, and an ample supply of water is found at a depth of thirty feet below the surface of the ground. The water is brought to the surface by horse power, horses, mules, donkeys, or camels being used, according to the owners' convenience. In first-class gardens the expenses, including the cost of irrigating, are reckoned at one-fifth of the value of the crop. In small gardens the expenses would amount to one-third or one-half of the crop.

Orange trees in Palestine do not suffer from any noxious insects, fungus growths, or diseases of any kind. Both climate and soil seem admirably adapted to produce healthy trees. In selling oranges fifteen hundred are reckoned as one thousand, and the reason is that the purchaser may, after the oranges are assorted, have one thousand good oranges that are fit for exportation. Large quantities of this fruit are sent to Europe, and among other ports Odessa is becoming one of the best markets for the Jaffa oranges. Thousands of boxes are sent to London, and an attempt has been made to introduce them into American markets; but the difficulties and uncertainties connected with shipping them so far, makes it problematical whether the experiment will prove a success. To our taste, there are no finer oranges in the world than the Jaffa oranges, and there are no others in the world so large as these. Their shape is oval, like immense lemons. As to lemons, a sufficient quantity is raised for home consumption, but very few are exported. Like the oranges, they attain a very large size, and are less acid than those found in our American markets.

Vines seem to flourish everywhere. Grapes that are raised on the hillsides are, however, the sweetest and best, and they also produce the greatest quantity of wine. The wine is likewise of a finer quality than that from grapes raised near the sea. All the hill country of Palestine being limestone, it is there that the best results in every respect are obtained. Where the ground will admit of it, the plough is passed between the vines twice a year. In some cases the vines are laid on the rocks or on piles of stones, but very seldom are they trained on sticks. Three years are required for vines to become bearing, and they continue bearing for an indefinite period, the natives say "for a hundred years."

The pruning of vines, and this is true of all fruit trees in the country, is done in the rudest manner; but even under the present poor system of cultivation it is astonishing what quantities of grapes Syria and Palestine produce, and their delicious sweetness will never be forgotten by those who have ever feasted on them. Great quantities of grapes are eaten. A large amount of wine is made, and the production of raisins is also an important industry.

The natives count as many as twelve kinds of figs, of which the "white" (which are really green) are the best. The trees begin to bear in the third year of their growth, and attain full bearing in their fifth year. From the nature of the fruit fresh figs cannot be shipped from the country. They are eaten fresh, and are dried in great quantities, and make a staple article of food in every household. The poorer qualities are used for making a very cheap kind of intoxicating liquor,—the vilest kind of "Arak,"—used largely by the Jews.—Selah Merrill, in New York Observer.

Fifty years ago, the Bible was circulated in 188 languages; today it is actually printed in 260 tongues and dialects throughout the world. During the last fifty years, 14 fresh languages of Europe have been honored by the publication of the Bible, while 12 fresh languages in Central Asia and Siberia, 12 in India, 14 in China and Mongolia, 10 in Japan and Malaysia, 19 in the Pacific, 30 in Africa, and 18 languages in America, now have the Holy Scriptures, or portions of them, written in their character.

We are not only created with ability to love, but are placed in the midst of objects worthy our affection. Love sweetens the sacrifices we make for others, lightens the burdens, and makes pleasant what would otherwise be irksome. EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jay" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jay6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886, "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your orders will be much more promptly attended to.

EXAMINE

The label on your paper, and if it bears a date previous to Aug. 7 please renew NOW. Do not wait for other notice to be sent, but

RENEW TODAY.

In the German text of Psa. cx. 3, as given in our last, the auxiliary verb "werden" was left out before the words "dir geboren."

In another part of our paper will be found an article written by Eld. D. M. Canright, which is one introductory to a series he contemplates writing for publication in the Michigan Christian Advocate. We give his circular letter and the notice of contemplated publication of these articles by the Advocate below. There was no notice in the Crisis showing that the articles were to be copyrighted. We shall write at once to the author, and if our limited means will permit us to secure the forth coming articles for THE RESTITUTION we shall be glad to lay them before our readers. If we can not do this we hope the Advocate will bring them out in pamphlet form so that our readers can finally obtain them in that way. The design will best be explained by the following paper. As there was no intimation of copyright, we conclude that this full publication of the author's circular, and the publishers notice, will prove perfectly satisfactory to both parties. May God's blessing attend the publication. We cannot add more now, as our paper is nearly full.

The Author, Eld. D. M. Canright sends the following, and a proof sheet of first article alluded to above.

OTSEGO, MICH., July 28, 1887.

Editor Restitution:

I herewith send you the first one of a series of articles I have written upon the subject named in the articles. Having had such a long, wide, and prominent experience in the Seventh-Day Adventist faith, as soon as I gave it up I was flooded with letters from all parts of the United States and from persons of all denominations urging me to give the reasons why I abandoned that faith. The only possible way in which I could answer all these was through the press. This James H. Potts, D. D., (Methodist) editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, Detroit, Mich., invited me to do. Seventh-Day Adventist doctrines and literature are rapidly being spread all over this country and to the ends of the earth. Every church is affected by it more or less. They have missions in most of our large cities and all around the earth, they publish some twenty periodicals and a list of over 200 books; and they have three large schools where hundreds are trained to go out and teach these doctrines. If it is an error, the public should know it. Every religious paper should be interested to post its readers on the question before they are misled. The question of Sabbath observance is a vital one and one rapidly coming up for discussion. Would you not do a favor to the truth and to the public to publish these articles? There will be about a dozen in all, covering the vital points of the Seventh-day Adventist faith. They are copyrighted. In order to cover the expense of time and money in preparing these articles I have to charge any paper which uses them a small amount for the privilege of doing so. If you wish them for your paper, please write me or Mr. Potts for terms or any information desired. Yours truly,

D. M. CANRIGHT.

Pastor of First Baptist Church, Otsego, Mich.

IMPORTANT ARTICLES.

Next week we shall begin the publication of a very important series of articles on the Sabbath question from the pen of D. M. Canright, who recently renounced the Seventh-Day Adventist faith, after an experience with that sect extending over a period of twenty-eight years. The articles will attract wide attention and do much good. They are strongly written, and come from a heart rejoicing in newfound freedom after nearly a life time of doctrinal bondage. We solicited the articles expressly for the Advocate. They will be copyrighted, but other journals can secure proofs of them for simultaneously publication by negotiating with us or with Mr. Canright, Otsego, Mich. Let them be widely printed. They are what the people need.

The Will as a Factor of Life, both Natural and Spiritual. Its Importance as Emphasized in God's Word, as well as in the Phenomena of So-called "Mind-Cure."

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve, God or Baal." "Today if ye will obey his voice harden not your hearts." "Then said I, Lo I come (in a chapter of a book hath it been written of me) to do thy will, O God." "In which will have we been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." "God in you to will and to do that which is satisfactory."

And the whole teaching of the Old and New summed up and emphasized in a plain statement of the fact that an offering or a sacrifice without the will of the one who offers it or makes it, as a prime factor, is unacceptable to God and comparatively worthless, might be taken as a text for the further elucidation of our subject. But passing to a consideration of the will as related to the natural life first, let us note its importance as seen from the standpoint of mere mentality. In passing note the common proverb and its common sense universal acceptance that "where there's a will there's a way." The indefinite way so aptly implies limitations and a certain uncertainty, while the positive assertion of some way as a fact or a factor that can and must be supplied, because and simply because its correlated factor, the will, is present, emphasizes, as in no other way it could be emphasized, the dominant nature, the exigence as it were that is in it. It is a form of reasoning that not only embodies the mathematical seeming paradox of let x equal the unknown factor we seek, the present known will being the convenient x laid hold of like the magician's wand to invoke the unknown we seek and drag it to the light; but it is an appeal to the imagination which in itself is a presage and prescience of victory and in the act there is "the promise and potency" of the infinite because it is an act of faith, and because this is the only rational way in which the creature can become the conformed image of his Creator.

If we are to "walk by faith and not by sight" (ordinary) and "as though seeing the Invisible" our path must be the royal highway of the understanding lighted by the sun of an illuminated fancy. If then as a mere act of mentality I can by willing so to do, travel here and there and anywhere along the beaten track of understanding, my power to proceed is limited within the sphere of the natural only by my power to will. What factor then in natural life even so potent as the will? And if so potent as an impulse of life, what may it not do as an emancipator of life when trained and developed to manifest-its higher powers in the gymnasium of a more rational philosophy? And if the individual will be so potent a factor in the individual life why may there not be "a correlation of forces," of will forces existing between the aggregate individual wills that own a common life? And if these postulates be accepted, namely, that the will has in it not only an energy to impel, overcome and emancipate within the individual sphere, and the energies of the individual spheres are correlated, what is more reasonable than to conclude that the power to influence through the will is only limited by the power to will according to the laws of a normal mentality?

This, in substance, is the claim of the new school of "mind-cure" practitioners although their theoretical statements and teachings of the why and wherefore and how are interesting to the trained thinker of any school of metaphysics principally for their logical absurdities and refreshing assumptions of original discovery, over which they are now fighting for pre-emption rights and patentee privileges. The facts or phenomena, so far as they are accredited are all that is worthy of serious attention and consideration on the part of the trained thinkers, and it must be confessed that while the phenomena are in no sense strictly new, the recent manifestation of them is hitherto unprecedented in number and degree of intensity, so much so indeed as to raise the question whether an entire new sphere of practical utility may not be developed in the great realm of mentality by a more careful inquiry into and a better understanding of the law or laws according to which the human will acts, and a better apprehension of the latent forces inhering therein providentially designed to be laid hold of and utilized in the great process of man's evolution from the lower to the higher organic development.

We should learn moreover from past experience in the realm of inanimate nature that mere theoretical inquiry and speculation has proved to be of very little value as compared with the conclusions of patient and exhaustive experimental tests. For instance; how much was ever discovered of any practical value in regard to electricity and its laws until the time of Benjamin Franklin and his actual kite? All the theoretical kite-flyers in this field before his day had brought down no single practical truth to the general apprehension of mankind, much less any general or specific utility. The same analogy holds good of steam and Robert Fulton's day. If then man's dominion over inanimate nature has been thus extended only by the discovery and intelligent manipulation of its uniformly working laws, are we not justified in supposing that his wider influence as a dominant factor in the sphere of animate nature must be asserted in this way if at all?

And if this be true and if we may assume as a first premise at the door of inquiry after fact, as this experience in another sphere would prompt us to do, that uniformity of phenomena in time and place imply both existence of law and uniformity of law, we have our pou sto and are prepared to move an earth. Then if we discover in this sphere of the animate as we have already analogously done in the inanimate, a law of subordination or better perhaps as a statement of fact subordination of law; may we not expect to find a dominant law in short in this animate sphere similar to and correlating with the law of gravity in the inanimate? And if sought for inferentially from phenomena where should we expect to find it except in the human will? The reader will bear in mind that in using the term law, the writer is using it not in the common acceptance of the term, even according to the older schools of philosophy, but in the latter and more accurate sense of an energy asserting itself uniformly in time, place and degree according to certain conditions.

The assumption that there resides in the human will an energy corresponding analogously at least to the energy in the physical universe which in action we know and define as the law of gravity, an energy which is constantly and uniformly asserting itself in the moral sphere of man's life in time, place and degree according to certain conditions known or unknown, and here and there becoming manifest to man's consciousness in ordinary or extraordinary phenomena according as these certain conditions are intentionally or unintentionally fulfilled and to which all the other moral forces are subject and subordinate as to a dominant factor, such an assumption I say serves to explain much that is now mysterious in so-called animal magnetism, clairvoyance, mind-reading, odic force, etc. For granting this first assumption to be true there are many postulates that logically follow it. If there be a dominant energy perchance in the human will which defies the ordinary limitations of time, space and matter, what more natural than to conclude that intelligence goes with this energy wherever and whenever it goes. We do not know enough yet about the processes of ratiocination to say how perhaps. But this plea may not bar our tentative inquiry. Because I cannot call up in memory a previous conscious state experienced, does this inability militate against the fact of the experience? May there not be dominant acts of intelligent will on your and my part which make no impression upon the palimpsest of memory, and which are not and were not intended to be subject to the mnemonic laws? Are you conscious of the law of gravity and its uniform energy in your normal, healthful condition? Yes, further, are you conscious through its phenomena of anything more than results? This assumption of an intelligent, dominant energy in the human will manifesting itself in unexplainable phenomena, involves no greater mystery and suggests no more insurmountable difficulties to the human reason. This, however, needs to be assumed only so far as conscious intent subject to the recall of memory fails to follow the dominant energy in the will. The influence of the will within the sphere of conscious mentality is a too well recognized fact to need proof. Our only additional assumption is that it is a dominant factor of life both in consciousness and beyond any consciousness that can be recalled and reviewed at will in memory.

And passing over now from natural mentality in the moral cosmos to "spiritual mindedness" as it is termed in revelation or the spiritual mentality would we not expect to find similar or analogous phenomena which in their correlation indicate analogous law or laws? How else can "God be in us to will and do" except that his dominant will set through our will? And if it does so act, it may be according to our assumption of dominant law in the merely human will both within and beyond simple mnemonic consciousness.

When the Christ asks, "Who touched me?" conscious that healing energy had gone out of him, was he really unconscious of where this energy had gone and how it had spent its force? Did the healing handkerchiefs and other garments of the apostles need in their healing application the conscious knowledge and intent of the apostle in order to be effectual? Did the apostle know always when, where and whom his shadow served to heal as he passed? Why did not the disciples always heal where they willed to heal? "Why could we not do this" they ask Christ. What light does his reply throw upon this inquiry? It implies that there is a specific way in which to accomplish the end sought and that means are to be used to bring about the desired end in this spiritual realm of law even as in the natural. But does it even by inference answer our query of whether conscious intelligence always follows the effectual energy according to the usual laws of mnemonic mentality? To my mind it serves to imply unconsciousness of anything except of results. "Do if ye would know of the teaching" also implies the same thing in principle. Indeed this seems to me the prime condition of any faith that is distinctively called a "living faith." It must from the very nature of things be experimental in contradistinction to hypothetical condition. From the very nature of faith one cannot be in a hypothetical condition of faith in other words. I cannot suppose myself to have faith in the genuineness of a dollar. I either have and am exercising faith, or I have not and am not.

The further inquiry is, what are the laws of mentality in this new condition of religious faith which accompanies or is a phenomenon of regeneration? The word regeneration implies a new life begun in which the individual organic will is or is not a dominant factor. We have assumed from analogy and for reasons drawn from revelation that the will is a dominant factor, and that its sway is co-extensive with its new sphere as we have shown it to be with its old sphere of the natural, and we have raised the most pertinent and common objection, namely, that will cannot as a dominant factor act beyond the sphere of conscious influence. But before raising this objection we have taken pains to show that this has not been proved to be true and is not probably true in the sphere of mere natural mentality and that the only rational solution of the phenomena of animal magnetism, clairvoyance, etc., is by assuming as a first premise that the human will does act as a dominant factor of life beyond the sphere of conscious mnemonic mentality.

The only further question is whether intelligence though unconscious in the ordinary accepted sense, goes along with the energizing impulse to direct and use means to an end as in the ordinary state of conscious volition. Having argued that it does in the merely natural, we are forced to the assumption that it is also true in the spiritual. For if it be true that "the natural man cannot apprehend spiritual things" for the reason that they are spiritually and not naturally discerned, I am justified in assuming that the converse is true that the regenerated spiritual man can discern spiritual things in some way. Now all Christians will confidently assert that they know or are acquainted with God. Can they tell when, where and how they knew him or how they reached this acquaintance? I will not say more than they can tell how, where and when they first knew their parent according to the flesh. If there is a natural instinct that brings along with it cognition we may assume that there is a corresponding divine instinct. Explain the relation of the will to the natural instincts in man and beast and we can then analogously at least explain the relation of the will to the new spiritual instincts that come with regeneration, and one of them is this power of the will beyond the sphere of conscious knowledge.

Can any one explain how the honey bee from any given point within a certain sphere takes "a bee-line for home?" Has the bee anything more to do in instinct than to will and act? Is the spiritual power to heal by a mere volition any more unexplainable than this? How does the dog find his old home a thousand miles away over a road and through a region he has never traveled? Is there anything more than active volition in this instinct exerted continuously to the end desired? Did intelligence go before the actual going and discover the way, or was it merely a constant concomitant of the way or was there neither will nor intelligence in the act? Who will dare to assert dogmatically on this point? Does the bird foresee the necessity of a nest before the nesting-time? Or does intelligence merely accompany the purpose to build? In short, what is instinct and how is it related to intelligence? If it be the divine intelligence and dunamis working through organic life, shall we be surprised at stranger phenomena and more wonderful results when manifested through the human organic life than that of the mere animal? Are these things "the greater works" which the Christ tells his disciples that they were "to become the cause of" because he was going his way to the Father?

To the Faithful in Christ Jesus Greeting.

"The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." Psa.

On account of failing health my pen has been laid down for some time past. On June 14th I left my home in Missouri to seek a more invigorating clime. Having a more distant point in view I stopped off in Chicago to visit Brother H. V. Reed and family; was most kindly and hospitably received and entertained by them for a few days, and then decided to try what benefit I might receive from the lake breeze, so I sought and found a temporary home near its shore, and find my health slowly improving by the change. I am, however, as yet in feeble health, but hope to improve still more as the season advances. For the three past weeks I have enjoyed the rare though highly esteemed privilege of meeting with the Church of God in this city on the first day of the week, and hearing the word expounded, as well as the word of exhortation by Brother Reed. The church though not very numerous seems to walk in harmony paying kindly deference to each other's views. That there exists such a difference of understanding of the word amongst those who have come out of Mystic Babylon is a matter of regret, especially to those who realize that we are exhorted to "speak the same things." Now it seems as if this might be easily done, if we would only divest ourselves of all preconceived opinions and go to the same dear old book to know what it teaches.

If we would know what the will of the Lord is we must go to the document which he has left for our instruction. Assuredly that word is not yea and nay. There is no conflict. It is all one grand and glorious harmony, uniting every member of God's entire plan and purpose toward our race. The night of Gentile darkness is far spent. The day of Israel's glory is near at hand, it heateth greatly. Then let us arise and go forth unitedly in the strength of our God, and proclaim to those who sit in darkness the wonders of his love as manifested in the great salvation wrought out by the Son of God for all those who accept of him by faith and follow him in obedience. To many whose letters lie unanswered I will here say, bear patiently with my infirmities. "The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." Your sister looking for redemption.

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

God's Order of the Kingdom.

To my beloved sister in Christ, our life! As my quoting of the word of the Lord to the brethren seems taken as if it is too high, too vague, or too comprehensive to be determinate, allow me, as you called on me, to talk over the subject, to vary my form of statement. The habit or drift prevailing is taken as truth, instead of saying, "Speak Lord, thy servant heareth!" Please observe:

1. The antichrist, the power of darkness, the god of this world, the adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; and "the rulers of the darkness of this world" were all in authority over 1800 years ago, while Jesus was then but the babe of Bethlehem.

2. "The fourth kingdom," Rome, officered Judea and "the whole world," Luke ii. 1, to "tax" it and dominate over it! Hence Herod the King (under Rome) could send forth and destroy all the children in Bethlehem and its coasts, from two years old and under, Matt. ii. 16, to make sure of crushing Christ!

3. "Why did the heathen rage? The kings of the earth stood up, the rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against his Christ." (Against Christ, is antichrist.) Acts iv. 23–27; Matt. xxii. All this God over-ruled, of course; Jesus was delivered from their rage, and when they crucified him he was raised up from the dead, he ascended to heaven and sent the Holy Spirit to sustain his apostles, and through this age, gather his church preparatory to his second coming and kingdom.

4. This officered, organized, world-wide opposition to Christ has prevailed. The Roman Emperor Constantine did confess Christ, and the Pope, against (or anti to) the example of Christ, Matt. iv., aspired to take the kingdom in Rome, as Satan would have had Jesus do under "the power of darkness."

5. We read of "eyes darkened that they see not." Psa. lxix. 23; Rom. xi. 10. Surely those who "will not" receive such abundant proof that the antichrist was then and there against Jesus, his apostles and the entire gospel of salvation, need a second conversion, like Peter after his denial of his Lord.

6. The gospel embodies this record of antichrist, names him five times, and as the "poneros," the wicked one, nine times; and as antidikos, your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion. 1 Peter v. 8. This should suffice! For to reject all this is to be joined to the antichrist. For "he who is not with me is against (anti) me."

7. Take the Bible view of the world's condition at the first advent, in contrast with what it will be at his second coming. Then the fourth beast, Rome, by its emperor and subordinate kings, etc., ruled the world. Luke ii. 1; Dan. vii. 23–25. But at his second advent, at the last trump, 1 Cor. xv. 52; Rev. xi. 15, "the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's and his Christ's!" He reigns for ever and ever! God in Christ is supreme! Antichrist, the man of sin is destroyed by the (splendor) brightness of his coming! 2 Thes. ii. 8.

The image portrays the truth, 1 Dan. ii. 31–45. (Thou, "The King of kings,") art—"This head of gold!" i. e. the Gentile-system of government, centered up in the person. Nebuchadnezzar "Thou art this head of gold." But trace out this "image" and see that, at the inauguration of the fifth kingdom which "The God of heaven will set up—all that composed the image of the kingdom men," (four times told chap. iv. 17, 25, 32; v. 21), is crushed out by "the stone!" No place left for them. The divine kingdom then fills full the scene forever. What dense darkness it is that does not even discern which God (or part) of the image is up!!

The Gentile system—the Iron Roman—ruled the world, when Jesus was, "the child born!" Cæsar, the Roman had taken his place in the line of succession from Nebuchadnezzar. Thence this "fourth" Gentile, ungodly power, has maintained its opposition to "God in Christ." This opposition is named the antichrist, and ends in the judgment, Dan. vii. 11. After the example of Sodom, Jude 7; Rev. xviii. 8.

Our world has not been converted! The second coming is to overcome antichrist, all obstacles, and introduce "the days of heaven upon the earth."

Yours in hope,

J. B. COOK.

"I am a Pharisee. The son of a Pharisee."

It was more than mere shrewdness that made the apostle in that furious mob avow himself a Pharisee, they held much that was Scriptural and truthful, and he gloried in those truths, "I believe there shall be a resurrection from the dead, both of the just and the unjust." That divided the mob, the Pharisees and Sadducees. Let us not indulge in a sectarian spirit, but let us take sides and defend any truth, though held by a Pharisee. If I must choose between the Pharisee and Sadducee, then "I am a Pharisee."

C. BOARDMAN.

Brother Dwiggins, President of our State Conference, suggests that churches who contemplate sending delegates to the Conference at Clayville, Ind., meet at their respective places of worship at 10:30 a. m., Sunday, Aug. 21st, and appoint delegates and arrange to send them to the Conference. Bro. Dwiggins says:

"The sisters can act as delegates as well as the brethren. Very important business will come before the Conference. It is therefore very important that each congregation in the State be represented. Some of the churches have failed to send delegates heretofore. We hope that every congregation in the State will send delegates to this meeting. This is the Lord's work and let us do it faithfully and well. This may be the last annual conference that we will have the privilege of attending before the blessed Savior shall come to claim his own. Let each one lay aside the business cares of this world and spend a few days in the glorious work of the Master."

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec'y.

Dear Restitution:

Shortly after returning from Conference, we commenced the agitation of a young peoples' society, which was formed two weeks afterwards, and has met weekly ever since.

The plan we pursue is to meet at the homes of the members one evening each week, and one public meeting at the church per month.

The programme consists of

1. Praise service.
2. Concert Bible Reading.
3. Scripture reading on a subject previously selected and prepared after the manner of the lessons published in your paper.
4. Essay on the subject of the evening.
5. Quotations.
6. Recitations.
7. Closing with benediction.

The society met with us last week, with an attendance of about twenty-five, although the weather was warm, the meeting was interesting, many expressed themselves pleased with our plan. And indeed with these societies in all the churches there is little time left for idle amusements.

MRS. F. T. DWIGGINS.

HILL.—At Floyd, Iowa, August 11, 1887, of dysentery after an illness of three weeks. Mary E. youngest daughter of R. J. and Cornelia B. Hill, aged 16 years and 11 months.

Her disease was of a very malignant type. She suffered terribly, but death came to her relief at last, and she sleeps in Jesus. She was prepared to go, and her hope was that she might receive eternal life at the appearing, of Christ. Although our hearts are filled with grief yet we sorrow not as those that have no hope. My wife is now down with the same dread disease. We ask the prayers and sympathy of the brethren and sisters in this our terrible affliction. Yours in hope.

Soldiers Reunion at Warsaw, Ind.

From August 19 to 21 inclusive a reunion of the Veterns of the late war will be held at Warsaw, in Lake-Side Park. Rev. J. H. Wilson will deliver his famous lecture on Andersonville Prison. Artillery and Military parades, sham battles and naval engagements will be among the chief attractions of this reunion. Excursion tickets will be sold to Warsaw on each day of the reunion over the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & and Chicago Railway at very low rates, good returning until August 23d, inclusive. See small bills giving time of trains and rates of fare.

Second Annual Excursion to Pittsburgh.

On Saturday, August 20th, 1887, the Lake Erie & Western R. R., in connection with the B. & O. R. R., will run their Second Annual Excursion to Pittsburgh. Trains will leave Plymouth at 8:58 p. m. Fare for the round trip, $7.00 Tickets will be good returning until August 25th, inclusive. Through solid trains to Pittsburgh, passing through Zanesville, Wheeling, and through the great Oil and Gas Fields of Washington Co., Pa. Sleeping cars on all through trains from Walkerton. Take advantage of the low rates, and visit the Great Iron City.

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

MISSIONARY FUND.

A fund of free will donations to send books and papers to mission workers in this and other lands.

THE WAITING ONES.

There are some among the blessed
Waiting, watching every day,
Peering through the misty shadows
To the clear and lighted way;
Listening in the dusky twilight,
Waiting even in the night,
'Mid the toil and heat of noonday
Bending forward to the light.

And they speak in eager whispers—
"Can we see His chariot yet?"
"Will the Master come this evening?"
Will the heavenly Friend forget?"
So they stand, these earnest servants,
Waiting, watching evermore
For the clouds to part asunder,
And reveal the open door.

There are dark-browed ones among them,
Looking through their eyes of night;
There are fair-haired little children
Passing up with faces bright;
There are aged pilgrims, longing
For the Master's spoken word;
There are some in every country
Waiting, watching for the Lord.

But they take their daily duties,
And perform them as for Him;
And they read His loving message
When their eyes are tired and dim.
They are living lives of blessing—
Lives of love for His dear sake,
While they wait with eager longing
For the morn of joy to break.

He will come, And will not tarry;
He will fold them to his breast;
He will make his watchers happy
In a calm and holy rest;
He will give them satisfaction
For their days of waiting here;
He will fill them with joy unceasing
When the Master shall appear.

The Power of His Resurrection. Phil. iii. 10.

Oh, this wonderful prayer of the Holy Spirit, in and through our beloved brother Paul! Only to be fathomed by its divine Author, and yet by the abiding anointing which we have received, teaching us of all things, we may surely in a measure enter into the arena of this knowledge also. It seems to me that this entire verse (10th) must have a power and reality to those who love and look for the glorious appearing of our Lord, which it cannot have to others. To you, my dear brethren of the "W. P. U.," I now write. Have we apprehended that herein, for which we have been apprehended? Are we living the resurrection life today? "I am clinging to the cross" may be good poetry, and true experience to many dear Christians, however bad its theology; but it will not and cannot do for those who are ardently awaiting his return. It is a life hid with Christ in God which must be ours—but his life is a resurrection life: one which has at once the cross, the place of penalty, and the tomb, the place of death, forever in the past—the unreachable, the untouchable past. But it has also the present with its waxing grandeur, its inspiring hope, and its assured glory, touching and interpreting for us every possible contact of thought or thing earthward, attaching us to the waxing life, and detaching us from the waning experiences of this sojourning hour.

Resurrection necessitates, first, a previous life; secondly, a previous death; thirdly, a present life, which from death at its inception, has the divine "everlasting" as its necessary sequence. With life unending, instead of death impending, what possible attitude of human energy is unaffected? I can only suggest the thought, which to follow closely and constantly will fill the spirit with divine joy, and the whole being with an energy and character, both noticable and knowable to all beholders. The life lived in the realised "power of his resurrection" will be the only life among men which consistently answers the question of the Holy Ghost—"What manner of persons ought ye to be?" 2 Peter iii. 11.

The "touch me not, for" of the Master at the shattered portal of the rifled tomb, spoke of the necessity of divine communication prior to all human contact; grandly supplemented however by that other "handle me and see, for"—which gives at once the proof and privilege of the divine-human contacts of all true resurrection life. Thenceforward step by step accompany him throughout his journey, to the place and hour of his ascension; his true selfhood unseen and unknown to any save his chosen ones; his spirit buoyant, and his face effulgent with the hastening hour of his glory—the garden, the cross, the tomb henceforth forever impossible; a life still among men, attesting his selfhood both of body and spirit, but his superiority to all human conditionings of matter, time, or place; the power of his resurrection life attesting the power in the resurrection fact. Follow him also to his seat at God's right hand, our intercessor, on which his resurrection places him, and consider the intensified expectation with which he awaits the nesting resurrection of his sleeping saints and the rapture of the living ones, the nuptial hour with his beloved bride, and the coronation day.

We, beloved, I know, are still in the fleshly body waiting, but with this exception only; for we in him, and with him, has forever passed the cross, the tomb, and we await with rest resurrection life the hour of our ascension. We may, while body pent, be body spent in human contests of rescue and testimony, but before us otherwise is all of resurrection fact, and resurrection meaning, and resurrection attitude toward the world, and from the world, which he the Master had and has.

With him we enter within the vail. With him we are unknown, yet well known. With him, already conquerors, we wait the coming, crowning consummation.

Oh, the power of his resurrection! Do we know it? Do we show it? Do we plead for it? Do we dare to grasp it, and by faith today to claim it? If not, why not? But let this whole prayer become a groan of pleading, until being so possessed thereby, it shall become a cry of praising, "that I shall know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." Yours pleadingly and lovingly, awaiting him.—J. P. Ludlow (Baptist), in Prayer Union Quarterly.

FRESH MUMMIES.

The following are extracts from a private letter of Rev. James S. Dennis, D. D., of Newark, now in Syria:

"The excavations and discoveries at Sidon still continue with remarkable results. The number of sarcophagi at present brought to light is eighteen, and some of them are most magnificent, and will rank high among archæological treasures. They are of enormous size, and the sculpture is elaborate and in perfect preservation. Upon one of them alone are eighteen almost detached statues about three feet in height, without a single scratch, and of pure marble.

"The most remarkable of them came to light last week. It is an ancient Phœnician sarcophagus, which has never been opened, and contained a mummy and a large amount of jewelry of great value. The mummy, when unrolled, was found to be the body of a man in middle life, and the state of preservation was astonishing. The features, and in fact the whole body, were intact; the flesh was tender, and yielded to pressure; and teeth, hair and viscera were all in place. Upon the outside lid of the sarcophagus is an inscription of seven and a half lines in Phœnician characters, and also one in Egyptian hieroglyphics. The bi-lingual inscription of such an ancient date excites great expectations. We shall have to wait to have it deciphered by the savants before we can know the full value of the statements it contains. The sarcophagus is of black basalt such as comes from Egypt, and it may have been made in Egypt by order from Sidon. The date of it is, of course, a matter of conjecture as yet. It may be anywhere from 800 to 1500 B. C., and even older. This strange being, who has been brought forth literally from the tomb of the ages to face the nineteenth century—who is he? What if he should be Ethbaal, King of the Zidonians' and father of Jezebel, or some older King who flourished in the earlier days of 'Great Zidon?' It is more than probable that he was a royal or princely character.

"The value of this enormous find is roughly estimated as approaching a sum not far from $800,000. One of the European Consuls at Beruit has offered $25,000 for one of the sarcophagi. It was not accepted, and the Turkish Government is boxing the entire lot, and have sent a special steamer to transport them to Constantinople.

"The discovery of the sarcophagus of Ashmunazer, in 1855, just outside of Sidon, was regarded as an important event. It also had a Phœnician inscription of twenty-two lines, and several interesting data were gathered from it. This is a far more marvelous and magnificent upturning of old Sidonian remains.

"The excavations still continue, and other treasures may be brought to light. A government official, Hamdy Bey, from Constantinople, is superintending the operations. These are days of great archæological wonders. Think of the old Pharaohs on exhibition in the Boulak Museum in Cairo!"—Los Angeles Times.

Science vs. Theology.

Remember the Bible is not a book of science, but it contains truths deeper than science. In it we have a lamp to light our feet towards the Infinite One, who was able to create the world. The Bible warns upon the lower life of man, and it commends everything that makes humanity better. It handles man as a social being. It gives the first great book on political economy. Industry, economy, temperance and virtue are woven into its system.

Scientists insist, after much study, that all languages are traceable to three great families. Yet centuries ago it was written, "Shem, Ham and Japheth divided after their families, and after their tongues in their lands." It has taken scientists thirty centuries to discover this, yet there it is in this great book. Physicians today are beginning to believe that most of man's maladies are traceable to imperfections of the blood, yet way back there we learn that the life of the flesh was in the blood. Scientists have recently discovered that air can be weighed, yet the Bible says, "He marks the weight of the winds and he weigheth the waters by measure."

The generally accepted theory as to the origin of the world is the "nebular hypothesis." First, the universe was diffused light. The light cooled and condensed, broke off into masses, and began to gravitate around centres and take on a globular form. The mists united and we then had the shoreless sea. The earth began to cool, the crust formed, and as it did this a vacuum was formed within, and the crust began to break, thus forming the ocean beds and the continents. Then came the lower orders of life and finally men appeared. This theory almost exactly coincides with the statements of God's book. The scientist speaks of a diffused light, a phosphorescent vapor, but he does not touch the origin of this light. Science has to do only with modes, theology with cause. "God said, let there be light, and there was light." Voltaire asked of the saints of his time: "What kind of a god is that of yours to order light three days before there was any sun or moon to give light?" and those old saints had to sit down and endure his irony, but before the old skeptic had been dead and damned for a century science had gone over to Moses. I tell you, it pays to stick by that book of God. It is safe to believe that God knows fully as much about the Bible as the scientist does. When I first began preaching I thought that if only those first chapters of Genesis had been left out what an easy time we clergymen might have had of it. We could then have carried conviction to mankind by the Bible's moral teachings; that is, if God had known as much about the Bible as I did he would have left them out; but there is that in this chapter that will carry God's teaching through storm and tempest.

The book says, "in the beginning," but it does not date that beginning. Again, science says there was a mist everywhere. And then the Bible says that God divided the waters above from those below. Science tells us of a shoreless sea, and how, as the earth cooled, it wrinkled and threw up the continents. The Bible says: "The dry land appeared." Science speaks thus of the vegetable and animal life. The Bible says, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath life." And the Bible goes further in regard to vegetation and speaks of the seed after its kind. Science says that after all this man appeared. The Bible says, "Let us create man after our own image."

If there is any deviation in science from the teachings of the Bible, it must be remembered that as yet not one ten-thousandth part of the earth's surface has been examined, and the time may come when all shall be in perfect order.

How happens it that through all the ages no great thinker has ever ventured on an order of creation? It is related that the world was made of a winged egg, fire, the four winds, but to old Moses, in the desert, at the head of a gang of slaves, has it been left to give the first order of creation, and now, after thirty centuries, we have at last hit upon the theory that fits the order of this old man.

Then come the laws of Moses. Solon and Lycurgus wrote laws, for little patches of people. They died, and with them their laws, but Moses gave to the world a code of laws that underlies the constitution of every civilized nation of today.

It is a great comfort to find these two books teaching the same fundamental principles.

From the lowest order animals were created till in man physical perfection was reached, and we can hence advance only in spiritual perfection. Let us welcome truth and all criticism on truth. Nothing can be done that will injure it. If anything will not stand the test let it go down. I stand today in repose on the teachings of Moses. May God help you all to find your way through this book to eternal life.—Bishop Fowler.

A Recondite Historical Point.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Steele, in the Christian Advocate gave the following explanation of the capture of Major Andre; "At the centennial of Andre's capture and execution, the fact that this important event was in answer to prayer should be widely proclaimed. The facts are these: On the voyage of Major Andre up the Hudson to meet the traitor, Arnold, and arrange the terms of his treasonable surrender of the fortresses of West Point, he required the aid of his private secretary, in the preparation of the papers. When the secret was disclosed to the secretary a pious young man and member of one of John Wesley's societies, he was struck with horror at the stupendous iniquity of Andre's scheme, yet he performed the required clerical service demanded by his superior. As soon as Andre left the Vulture to meet Arnold on the night of September 21, 1780, the secretary retired to his room overwhelmed with sadness at the thought of the great wrong to the colonies which was about to be committed. He saw that the iniquitous design was to cut off New England from the other colonies by the British possession of the Hudson and Lake Champlain, and then to conquer both parts of the country in detail. He saw that this would intensify and prolong the war, bringing ruin upon the colonies, and loss of life to many thousands of British soldiers. He fell upon his knees and spent the night in earnest prayer to Almighty God to interpose for the defeat of that stupendous treason which Andre and Arnold were then plotting at the foot of a shadowy mountain called Long Clove. He was probably the only praying man on earth who was cognizant of that great crime which was to strangle our infant Republic. On that prayer hung the destinies of the American nation. The prayer was heard, the plot was foiled. We have all hung with breathless interest over the account of Andre's arrest on the neutral ground when he incautiously declared that he belonged to the 'lower party,' thinking that his captors were Tories because they wore the refugee uniform. This slight mistake cost him his life and saved the Republic. God was answering the prayer of the pious secretary. Let his name be praised.

My authority for this account, which I communicated to Mr. Bancroft to be incorporated into his history of Arnold's treason, is found in the autobiography of the Rev. Ebenezer F. Newell of the New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He received these facts from the secretary himself in New Brunswick about the year 1800. The Rev. E. F. Newell died in 1867."—The Christian.

THE WATCHMAN'S ANSWER.

"The morning cometh." Isa. xxi. 12.

If the Christian Church were in truth—as so many people erroneously suppose—the great kingdom of prophecy—that "Kingdom of the Heavens" for the establishment of which on this earth we are taught continually to pray, there would be a difficulty in understanding this and other passages of Scripture. One passage especially, which is full of grand and glorious meaning when correctly understood, is otherwise comparatively meaningless. It is that in which the Apostle Paul reminds Christians, Rom. xiii. 11, 12, of what they ought to be in view of the fact that "the night is far spent; the day is at hand." The image before the apostle's mind is that of men who have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, cleansed by the washing of regeneration and sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, spoken of as still covered by the shadows of the night; still needing to be awakened out of sleep; still uncrowned with the anticipated great salvation. In what sharp contrast with this is the language of the same apostle, in another Epistle: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that the day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of the darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken, are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation." 1 Thess. v. 4–8.

And yet there is no real contradiction between these two Scriptures. All that is needed in order to harmonize them is, that we understand that in the one case the night and darkness are spoken of objectively, and in the other subjectively. True believers are even now "children of the light and of the day," the day-star has already arisen in their hearts; but they are still walking in that St. Paul calls "this present darkness," Eph. vi. 12; waiting and watching for that long-promised and radiant morning without clouds, which will only come when the Sun of Righteousness shall arise, with healing in his wings.

Let us for a few moments meditate on some of the most marked characteristics—first, of the "night" whose approaching termination is now near; and, secondly, of the glorious "day" which succeeds.

1. The night, then, which is far spent, is the night of nature's darkness. Its shadows fall upon the groves of the lost Eden, when man's sin had dimmed its primal sunshine, and its wailing winds awoke when he was driven out and heard the clang of its closing gates behind him. Above all, the moral night has been deep and abiding; "darkness has covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." Oh! long and weary night! shall it never end? Yes; even when St. Paul wrote, four thousand years of it had passed away, and, therefore, it was very true that "the night was far spent." But, if true then, how emphatically true is it now, for how much nearer are we to that blessed day when "the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God."

2. Again, the night to which the apostle refers, is the night of Satan's dominion. In Eph. vi. 12, we read: "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." And our Lord himself speaks of the evil one as "the power of darkness," Luke xxii. 53. As long, then, as Satan rules, not only in the hearts of men and the government of the nations, as we are taught in the Book of Daniel, but in some sort over the powers of nature, the night must continue, and not till he is bound and imprisoned can the morning dawn. This shows the folly of those who anticipate that by the advance of civilization, the more earnest and universal preaching of the Gospel, and the larger outpouring of the Holy Spirit, the dark shadows of the night will be dispersed, and the Millennial day dawn upon the world. No; the night, though "far spent," will not be passed till the oppressive curse be removed—till Satan be bound—till the Lord has come.

3. Once more, the night which is, blessed be the Lord of Life, so soon to end, is the night of death's desolation.

The history of this fallen world is most emphatically the history of death. Death has reigned, not only "from Adam to Moses," and from Moses to Christ, but even from Christ to the present hour, and still the veil of its dreadful night is spread over the world. Oh! ye bereaved ones, believing, how may you rejoice in the thought that the night of death is far spent! One by one we have laid the beloved ones—parents, friends, children,—in the silent tomb. But, glorious tidings!—"the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

"The night is wearing fast away,
The glorious light is dawning,
I see the streaks of coming day,
The bright Millennial morning."

"The day is at hand!" What day? We have seen some of the characteristics of the night.

What kind of day is it that we look forward to?

1. It is the day of creation's deliverance. For this the winds are sighing, as they make their sweet but melancholy music amid the leafy groves of summer; for this the wild waves cry aloud, as they dash themselves upon the rocky shore; for this the starving beasts of the forest, and the birds perishing in the cruel frost, and all the innocent, suffering creatures God has made, send up to him their constant, inarticulate prayer. "For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God." Oh, blessed thought! "The day is at hand. The day when all Nature's wounds shall be healed; when her sorrowing heart shall be comforted; and when, as in a mirror from which all obscurations have been removed, she shall truly reflect the glory of her Creator.

2. Again, the day which the Apostle declares to be at hand is the day of resurrection-life. Of the wicked it is said, in the 49th Psalm, "Like sheep, they are laid in the grave (sheol); death shall be their shepherd." But, it is added, "the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." And what morning is this but the morning of the resurrection? When they that have slept in Jesus shall awake, and be—to use the exquisite figure of the Psalmist—as the multitudinous dewdrops shining in the brightness of the morning sun.

Oh, glorious day! when disease and death shall no more torture and destroy "this trembling house of clay;" when by the possession of nobler powers we shall be fitted for a nobler though not a more acceptable service than we have been able to render here; when that which was "sown in corruption shall be raised in incorruption, and that which was sown in weakness shall be raised in power."

4. Lastly, "the day" which not only inspired testimony, but many concurrent signs also assures us is even now "at hand" is the day of Christ's presence. As long as he is absent, the night continues, for is he not the Sun of the moral and spiritual world? Yes, even before he rises on the world as the Sun of righteousness, he will be to his waiting and watching saints "the bright and morning star." Hence, in the parable of the Ten Virgins, the period during which the Bridegroom tarries is represented as the time of night, for it is "at midnight" that the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and the prophetic midnight immediately precedes the dawn.

In vain do we hope that the night shall end and the shadows flee away till the Day-star shines in the eastern sky; in vain we look for the dawn of Millennial day till "the Sun of Righteousness arise, with healing in his wings." No rest for creation till Christ comes; no binding of Satan till Christ comes; no Millennium of peace till Christ comes; no consummation of bliss in body and soul till Christ comes; for is his presence only is the fulness of joy, and on the wings of love and power he brings the everlasting day.

And, oh glorious assurance! that day is about to dawn. Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand." And what then? What are the solemn words which the Apostle adds? "Let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Strange and sad that such an exhortation should be needed by "the children of the day!" stranger and more sad that it should never be so much needed as now.—Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

TEMPERANCE.

"Please Do Not Sell My Father Rum."

"Please do not sell my father rum,"
Said a little girl, with ankles bare;
Tattered her dress, uncombed her hair;
And her bright blue eyes, in tears upturned
To the face of one in whose heart there burned
A love of gin, and a love of self,
That prompted him, for the love of pelf,
To sell her father rum.

"Please do not sell my father rum.
For ma is sick, and we are poor.
The rich, they drive us from their door,
When I ask them for a crumb of bread
To feed my ma and brother Ned;
And pa comes here with all the change,
And then comes home so very strange,
Because you sell him rum.

"Please do not sell my father rum—
It used to be, when home he came,
I'd leap for joy my father's name,
And clamber up about his knee,
And feel so happy and so free;
But oh! he's changed, and now I fly
And hide myself when he comes nigh,
Because you sell my father rum.

"Please do not sell my father rum—
Poor mother's life is almost gone;
Her face it looks so sad and wan;
He used to love her, and is kind yet
When not by appetite beset;
But when he tips the wine-glass red,
He drags poor mother from her bed,
And says you sold him rum.

"Please do not sell my father——"
But ere the child had said the word,
The demon dark was in him stirred;
With clenched hand and hellish grace,
He struck the child full in the face,
Who, with a shriek, fell to the floor;
And then he kicked her out of the door,
Saying, "I will sell your father rum!"

"What! not sell her father rum!"
With horrid oath and fiendish frown,
He said "If all the good folks of the town,
In one grand, long petition, try
To stop his sale, even then would I
Sell what, and when, and where I please;
I'd sell her father rum.

"Yes, I will sell her father rum,
Though hearts should break and eyes run dry:
Thats why I'd catch, their tears I'd buy,
And mix them with the father's drink,
(It's just the same to him, I think);
I'd drench the land with infants' blood,
Though drops should fall like Noah's flood;
Though tears should run like summer rains,
And every drop a thousand pains;
Though anguish weep, and Christ should pass
My doom for every burning glass,
Could I but gain the heavenly land,
I'd pluck the life fruit with my hand;
And did it pay me but one nail,
I'd damn the nations with its sale;
I'd ransack heaven and hell, before
I'd turn her father from my door;
No, child! I still will sell him rum."
—W. C. Pinkney, in Pittsburg Catholic.

Trying Moral Suasions.

A young man once advised me to advocate moral suasion. At a meeting where this young man was present I said to the audience, pointing to him: —"Some say we ought to advocate moral suasion exclusively. Now, I will give you a fact. Thirteen miles from this place there lived a woman who was a good wife, a good mother, a good woman." I then related her experience as she told it:—

"My husband is a drunkard; I have worked and hoped and prayed, but I almost give up in despair. He went away and was gone ten days. He came back with the small-pox. Two of the children took it, and both of them died. I nursed my husband through his long sickness—watched over him night and day, feeling he could not drink again nor ever again abuse me. I thought he would remember all this terrible experience. Mr. Leonard kept a liquor-shop about three doors from my house, and soon after my husband was well enough to get out, Mr. Leonard invited him in, and gave him some drink. He was then worse than ever. He now beats and bruises me.....I went into Mr. Leonard's shop one day, nearly almost to madness, and said, 'Mr. Leonard, I wish you would not sell my husband any more drink.'

"'Get out of this,' he said, 'away with you. This is no place for a woman; clear out.'

"'But I don't want you to sell him any more drink.'

"'Get out, will you? If you wasn't a woman I would knock you into the middle of the street.'

"'But Mr. Leonard, please don't sell my husband any more drink.'

"'Mind your own business, I say.'

"'But my husband's business is mine.'

"'Get out! If you don't I will put you out.'

"I ran out, and the man was very angry. Three days after a neighbor came in and said, 'Mrs. Tuttle, your Ned's just been sent out of Leonard's shop, so drunk that he can hardly stand.'

"'What! my child only ten years old?'

"'Yes.'

"The child was picked up in the street and brought home, and it was four days before he got about again. I then went into Leonard's shop and said, 'You gave my boy Ned drink.'

"'Get out of this, I tell you,' said the man.

"I said, 'I don't want you to give my boy drink any more. You have ruined my husband, for God's sake spare my child!' and I went upon my knees, and tears streamed down my cheeks. He then took me by the shoulders and kicked me out of doors."

"Then," said I pointing directly to my friend, "young man, you talk of moral suasion. Suppose that woman was your mother, what would you do to the man that kicked her?" He jumped right off his seat, and said, "I'd kill him."....I believe this, that you might as well attempt to storm Gibraltar with a pop-gun, dam Niagara with a bundle of straw, or do any other impossible thing, as to move a man by moral suasion who has no moral principle.

To the Scattered Ones in Indiana.

Having been chosen by the committee appointed at the June Conference as Evangelist to visit churches not belonging to the Indiana State Conference, and other places where we have no organization, I take this means of finding out your whereabouts. To such I will say, if you will address me at once, giving location, etc., I will try and visit you before the annual conference which will convene in September. To isolated brethren, where the Abrahamic faith is not preached, I will say, if you can arrange a place to hold a series of meetings, and believe that good may be accomplished, address me at once, and arrangements will be made to be with you as long as the interest may demand. Truly, "the harvest is great but the laborers are few." "Let us labor therefore that we may enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God." Address,

Indiana State Fair.

We are reminded at this early day of this approaching annual event, commencing September 19th, by the bright and cheerful posters to be seen everywhere, and a call at the business office plainly demonstrates that the Fair season will soon be upon us. The number of applications for exhibition space, sales of privileges, and the amount of mail matter gives every encouragement for success, and something more. Improvements are being made, more special exhibition buildings erected, a new roof on the main exhibition hall and the grounds enlarged.

The Indiana State Fair is now recognized as the centre of the great breeding grounds of improved stock. Herds of improved cattle were shown at the last Fair from nine different States. Eighteen States and the Canadas were represented, and the show of live stock and machinery never excelled on the continent.

An exhibitor making an application for space recently, remarked: "We have got to make an exhibition to keep up with the times or be considered as dead. The people come to see the improvements; the progressive men of the community attend the State Fair, in fact, can not afford to stay away, and the State Fair is doing more good for the industrial community than any other influence."

Union with the Son the Source of Spiritual Life.—No. 4.

"He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." 1 John v. 12.

But there are two sides to this great subject, a bright side and dark side, a portion for believers and a portion for unbelievers. Our text not only tells us that "he that hath the Son hath the life;" but it also tells us that "he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." We have dwelt so far on the former part of this passage, but we must not close without a few words on the latter part. Awful indeed will be the consequence of not having the Son, or not believing on the Son. On this point Scripture speaks as with a trumpet voice. "He that disbelieveth shall be condemned."—Mark xvi. 16. "He that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. The teaching of these passages is implied by the strong affirmation of the first part of our text, and the doom of the unbeliver would be certain from that even though the latter par had not been written. "He that hath the Son hath the life." Now if he that hath the Son hath the life, it follows, as a natural consequence, that he that hath not the Son of God, hath not the life. Than this, nothing can be plainer, nothing can be more certain. He is destitute of the divine life, and without the life of God here, there can be no eternal life. Immortality comes to us through Christ, and he who has no union with Christ cannot have immortality. God "only hath immortality," the apostle Paul says. It is one of Jehovah's natural attributes. If any of his creatures, therefore, are brought to possess it, it must be by his special gift. And Scripture plainly teaches that this gift comes only through Christ, and is conditioned to man on faith in Christ. Nowhere within the covers of the Bible is there the least proof that any man will have immortality who is separated from Christ. To bolster up the unbelieving, Christless sinner in the belief that he is immortal, is to cause him to err and stumble over the devil's lie. We tell you solemnly that apart from the Life-Giver, you are dead in sin. You have no spiritual life, and therefore, can never possess the life everlasting. Without union with the Son, you shall die the second death; you shall be destroyed both body and soul in hell; you shall be punished, even with eternal destruction; you shall be burnt up as chaff with unquenchable fire; you shall utterly perish in your own corruption. "He that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." Oh, what a terrible doom is the doom of the Christ-rejecting sinner. Without Christ, there is reserved for you the blackness of death; and suffering death, you will be deprived for ever of all the unspeakable blessings associated with life and immortality.

We are addressing some whose future prospects are thus dreary and dismal; some who have no hope of immortality, because destitute of a living faith in Christ; some whose spirits are dormant, who have no spiritual life, but who, in the language of Scripture, are "dead in trespasses and sins." The pulse of your heart does not beat towards the Son of God, and from his heart to yours there flows no divine life. And in that state of spiritual death, you do not see the dreadful danger to which you are exposed. We, who have been enlightened, and have life in Christ, do see it, and hence feel deeply in your behalf, and warn you. Alas many are on the very brink of ruin, and seem not to know it. It is as if they were seized with a moral nightmare, and were constantly under its power. O may that power be broken by the Holy Ghost through the word we are now speaking to you. We beseech of you to shake off your slumbers and arise; to cut off yourselves from sin, which is life indeed. Our desire and prayer is that you may do this now: not when special services may be held, but now; not when sickness may come, but now; not when ye go home and retire to your closets, but now. Our greatest difficulty, as ministers of Christ, is to overcome the strong tendency of the heart to procrastinate. Untold millions have been ruined by procrastination, by their delusive purpose of seeking, and believing on, the Christ in the hour of their death, or a little while previous to that event. But of all the periods of human probation, that is the worst for such an object. The most inconvenient season of all the seasons, between the cradle and the grave, for a man to become a Christian, is when he is dying. He has then little strength of body; sharp pains may be shooting through his wasting frame; his mental faculties may be impaired; his heart may be rendered callous; and Satan, by cunning and powerful temptations, may be striving to keep firm hold of his victim. We tell you on the authority of the Book, we tell you on the authority of a great cloud of witnesses, we tell you on the authority of the testimony of every man's conscience when enlightened by the Spirit, that the most convenient season is now, now, now! Every thing favors the present as the hour of decision, as the hour of renouncing sin, as the hour for believing on the Son of God. The Spirit is warning and wooing, believers are compassionating your condition and praying for your salvation, the truth is flashing light and conviction upon your minds, the angels are ready to shout for joy over your repentance; these and other considerations unite in declaring that now is the time to surrender to Christ. And remember this,—if you forget even the greater part of the sermon, remember this,—take this thought home with you and ponder it, that if you do not face the truth now, and reflect upon it now, and yield to it now, and get saved by it now, you may have to face it in the judgment when it will terrify you, when it will sting you, when it will condemn you, and when the hand of justice will hurl the thunderbolts of heaven upon you and destroy you utterly and for ever.

A Message to Loved Ones.

Almost three years have elapsed since I bade a hasty adieu to the scenes and associations of forty-five years. How strongly they had become interwoven in the fabric of my life I did not realize until I viewed them from a long distance. But how often now is memory busy re-enacting the scenes of that brief period. Now and then some pleasant association passes in review and I seem to view the scene as vividly as though painted upon canvas. Taking the most social view possible I conclude that this is mutual, that those who mingled with me in the pleasant associations of the past still retain a thought of the absent one. This view is confirmed by a question that was sent here to a brother in the faith. The question was this, "Is Brother Wagoner preaching the same gospel he preached in Indiana." Whether the question was answered or not I cannot tell, or if answered I cannot say that the answer was satisfactory. But this I do know that the language of Paul "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that we have preached let him be accursed" is just as significant to me now as it was then. I suppose I might be called old-fashioned, for in preaching on any Bible theme I use the same old texts employed in Indiana.

An additional proof that may be given is that the same results follow my preaching here that followed it in Indiana. But still to some all this may not entitle me to the claim of being sound in the faith, for I often see in print now such expression as "advanced truth," "liberal views," "broader views of God's plan." Now without a desire to be censorious I would suggest that we all advance with the truth. This is done by "letting the truth of God dwell in us," by being learners in the school of Christ. Some are so concerned about the salvation of nations that are dead and the unborn nations of the coming ages that they can hardly preach a present salvation to present dying men and women. They remind me of a character in the school books, a Mr. Phantom, who had gigantic schemes that interfered with his attention to any small affair, and of whom it was said that "between the great things that he could not do and the small things he would not do, his life would pass and nothing be accomplished."

What has led to this false sympathy for millions that bear the same relation to God's plan that the surplus bloom of the fruit tree bears to the fully developed and perfect fruit that golden autumn pours into the lap of the husbandman? What would you think of the orchardist who wasted his sympathy upon the fallen bloom and premature fruit of his trees even to the neglect of the healthy vigorous fruit? It may shock the tender sensibilities of some to institute such a comparison when such high values have been placed upon one of the human race. One human being has been put in the balance with millions of worlds and by this unjust valuation estimated as of more value than all these worlds. There are no such exalted views of man's worth found in the Bible. Here is God's estimate of human beings taken as nations. "Behold the nations are as the drop of a bucket and are counted as the small dust of the balance." As the small particles of the dust on the scales does not affect the true weight of the article weighed, so the loss of nations will not affect the true balance of God's plan. No wonder in view of this the Psalmist exclaims, "What is man that thou art mindful of him."

Out of the great moral forest of humanity God will select the material to accomplish his purpose, and who shall dictate to him how to dispose of the surplus? This surplus of human beings is to God's plan what the scaffolding is to the building; when not needed it is taken away. And who will object to the removal of the unsightly mass? Let us fear no false sympathy for the scaffolding, it served its purpose with the architect and now let it perish. Do not have any fears that any really valuable material will be overlooked; this matter of the selecting is in the hands of God, and remember that material that to us would appear faultless in the sight of God it may be full of blemishes. Never lose sight of the great truth that "the judge of all the earth will do right." The false hope of universal restoration or that God will finally bring all to salvation weakens the force of the gospel; it lessens men to say, "If I am not saved now I shall be in some coming age and now I will enjoy the pleasures of sin in this life." That this is its tendency the writer has good reason to believe.

The destruction of whole nations will no more interfere with God's purpose to fill the earth with his glory than the rejection of a single individual now of the offer of life and salvation will affect God's purpose of selecting the ruling element for the coming kingdom. Both these grand purposes will be accomplished. In this age the gospel calls or selects individuals for rulers in the coming age; hence "in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him," but in the next age God deals with the race nationally. "But the nation and kingdom that will not serve shall utterly perish." The saved individuals of the past and the present ages will constitute the Lord's cabinet of rulers for the coming age, hence it cannot be said that this part of God's plan is a failure for it accomplishes the purpose for which it was intended. In the age to come there will be enough of the saved nations to fill the earth with the glory of God, therefore that will not prove a failure, for God says my word shall not return unto me void but it shall accomplish that which I please and shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it." Thus the grand consummation is reached, the earth filled with God's glory, his word fulfilled, the original purpose accomplished; and God vindicated by all creatures that then enjoy the blessings of that age. The present age demands all our energies, for as we near the end the danger increases, crime is multiplied, infidelity becomes more bold, the truth is more fiercely attacked than ever before; hence let us be diligent, watchful and steadfast in the truth.

A short time after I came here I began a series of meetings three miles from my home. After laboring as faithfully as I could for about one year and no direct results visible I began a series of meetings at another point where I labored hard for almost a year, and still no direct fruit of my labor. I then began a series of meetings at a third place, and now, thank God, I begin to see good results from my labor. None have as yet obeyed but a good interest has been awakened and the neighborhood is stirred to its very depths. A frantic effort is being made by the advocates of the soul's immortality to save their sinking craft; committees are sent to the members who are investigating the truth, ministers are riding over the country warning the people to beware of that "infidel Wagoner;" in short the usual weapons employed by such men are brought into action, and I trust in God that the result may be that these honest yet deluded people may soon rejoice in the truth.

Now to all the dear ones in whose memory I still live, may I still crave an interest in your prayers? can you still extend the endearing title of brother to one while he may have been slow to accept "advanced truth" still feels solidly planted upon the rock of truth? And while the charge of infidelity or heresy has been rung by my enemies, this I do confess to all, that after the way they call heresy a "worship I the God of my Father, believing all things written in the law and the prophets. Dearly beloved, I bear with pleasure of the effort you are making to extend God's truth. May the Lord reward you. Amen.

J. F. WAGONER.

MICA PEN-AGTES.

I notice in THE RESTITUTION, an article by brother A. J. Gordon, from the Christian Repository, carefully insisting on the error and futility of the suggestion of any future "antichrist personal," so-called, and maintaining as a fact not to be denied, that the Pope of Rome has already, in its fullness and entirety, accomplished the prophecy of the "Man of Sin,"—or will have done so when the system of the power of papacy has fulfilled its allotted period.

I am well aware of the unprofitableness of any treatment of this subject not marked by Christian gentleness and carefulness, and nothing is more unwise and abhorrent than a spirit and manner of dogmatic assertion. I will therefore make some little rejoinder to the Repository article, with no disposition to insist and contend that I am right, but rather desirous only that the truth shall be seen and known, whatever it is. I had much better be dumb than dogmatic, and if the Pope as we know him now, and have known him in history, is the final and complete accomplishment of any and every antichrist of prophecy, I shall be as ready to accept and acknowledge it, as any one, I am sure. But let us see a moment.

That the pope is antichrist, I for one, do not now, and never have, for one instant denied or doubted. And so this being at once fully confessed and confirmed with every emphasis and heartiness, is not at all a matter for doubt or debate. It is settled by common agreement of all Protestant interpreters.

But the question is, if the pope himself has no momentary intensified antitype, has he not a deteriorated reproduction in any sense whatever under the canopy? If this is all a fancy and a fable, if it is all childishness and mere futile conjecture, let us know it and discard it. It is a question of Bible teaching and that only, and if it is not in the Bible, let it be remitted and resigned to the misliest midnight of oblivion.

To me it appears that with a large measure of typical fulfillment in the pope, there are prophecies which have never strictly been fulfilled in his career, but are yet future, but reserved to a little inch of space after an eruption of firstfruits. This withdrawal of the finer salt of the earth, leaves room for the closing exaggerated form of wickedness, when a Christianity deteriorated and degenerated for nearly thirteen hundred years, becomes utterly infidel in the end, and the self-apotheosis of man is complete.

To my mind there are some things not yet fulfilled. For example, I never yet could see how, or where, or when, such a marked and amazing phenomenon as calling down fire from heaven ever had any adequate fulfilment. Let us be candid. Did any pope ever do such a thing? Was a mere semblance or pretence of doing it, in a poor and meager way at best, a fulfilment of this startling photograph? Whenever I can see it, I will own it, instantly. Was burning men and women at the stake the fulfilment? Could the inquisitors summon fire from the sky to kindle their heaps of fuel, and did they?

Again I never read anything authentic and distinct, that should any where nearly fulfil a thing so graphic and tremendous as stamping the whole world of popish votaries with an indelible mark of allegiance in the forehand and right hand.

As to the sign of the cross which the papist makes himself, it is rather a type, than the thing itself—or am I so blind that I cannot see what some one more clear-eyed than I, can. Every Greek scholar knows that the word charagma, rendered "mark," signifies literally "a sculpture,—a mark cut in, or impressed." For illustration, "Ptolemy Philopator ordered all the Jews who applied to be enrolled as citizens of Alexandria, to have the form of an ivy leaf, the badge of Bacchus, to be impressed upon them with a hot iron, under pain of death." Have the popes, cardinals, legates, councils, Jesuits, inquisitors, kings or princess of the Romish world, made, or caused this kind of engraving to be made and executed, for twelve hundred and sixty years? I am teachable. Will some one please enlighten me?

Again, with careful and scrutinizing search, I have looked to see and to "count the number of the beast," and to see when, and where, in Popery or Romanism, the name or number of the beast, was, or was to be found, bearing in mind that it is "the number of a man." It is not the number of a system, church or kingdom, but the number of a man, and yet more crucially and explicitly the "number of his name." In other words, rightly counted. It is the name of a man. If this is not so, I want to be enlightened. It may be there is one pope out of two hundred whose private or official name will count six hundred and sixty-six, but if there is one, then each one of a hundred and ninety-nine will count something else, I suppose. I have searched this matter carefully, but I am ready to be enlightened. The word "Satan," or the word "apostate," is vague and general, and is not the number of a man, nor the number of the name of the man. And in fact, this very name of a man, is to be stamped on the forehead or right hand of every votary or servitor of the wild beast.

Again, there are the ten toes of the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. They are at the last extremity of the colossal metallic stature. I wish some one would kindly explain by what fair interpretation, ten kingdoms traced back to the disruption of the old Roman empire, and continually shifting for more than thirteen hundred years and their place in ten terminal toes of the image. The toes are but a fraction of the foot in length. They are a much smaller fraction, lineally, of the feet and legs together. Commentators have given as many as sixty-five different kingdoms in twenty-eight different lists, to represent the ten. It would be a singular and extraordinary view of the image, to discern ten divisions extending backwards and upwards through the meta-tarsus of the foot, through the tarsus of the ankle, and up the leg to the knee, in order that there may be a correspondence between it, and a ten-kingdomed division of the Roman empire for fourteen centuries. On the other hand the true interpretation of the toes, their relative place and size, being terminal and fractional,—what does this naturally and fairly signify and require? Perhaps I am blind and benighted—but if I have got eyes to see, then, the ten kingdoms are found, and found only in the very closing period of the times of the Gentiles. Their very formation is to be looked for strictly and truly at the very last point of the evil period of man's proud prosperity before the Lord's return. On these toes the stone falls, or on the feet of iron and clay, but the life and power of the whole image is evidently in the toe-formation of kingdoms—since it is "in the days of these kings," represented by the ten toes, that the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall not be destroyed. In harmony with this ten toe division of power, may we look at the ten horn division of the beast in Revelation, in its seventh-eighth headship, and these "receive power as kings one hour with the beast,"—and "they agree and give their kingdom unto the beast." Here is a solid confederation of powers, for a short time only, with a potent intelligent head, if I understand it. They are not plenty powers, but mighty, or at least respectable kingdoms. And they do two things,—they hate and waste the harlot, and they make vain and suicidal war with the Lamb. Have they done it yet? And let me ask is the beast identical with the pope, or the papacy, or the power of the Romish Church? If so, then the ten kings are confederate with the pope to destroy the pope. And if that is not the case, who or what is the harlot? These are simple questions, and I am waiting to be enlightened. If the harlot is the papacy, then the beast and the ten kings that destroy the papacy, are evidently another power or confederation. I cannot see the ten toe or the ten horn kingdoms in ten petty Italian States, which in fact, are now solidified with lost identity, into one kingdom. I can not see them except in type, or introduction, in ten new present European kingdoms. Why not? Simply because they are not confederate together at all, but ready to spring at each other in combat. And because still less are they confederate together to burn and destroy the Romish harlot, although they do not permit heretics to be put to death, and they have allowed Italy to make Rome the capital of the kingdom. Let us be honest and true to facts. Look at a firm and zealous alliance of ten kings under a final intelligent head, to utterly crush the Romish church system, and then in turn to be overcome by the Lamb. They are confederate for one hour, simply I suppose, a brief period without strict definition of duration, unless it be for twelve hundred and sixty literal days we have such expressions as "the hour cometh," and "the hour is coming," "the hour of temptation," "the hour of his judgment," etc.

For my own part, it is simply and entirely impossible for me to see this ten kingdomed close compact in the past,—to see the wild beast headship party to the compact, in the past, to see the papacy wasted to death, in the past, and to see the pope and the beast one and the same, when the beast destroys the pope and the entire belongings and appurtenances of Rome ecclesiastic. I want the light, and until I can see good reason for a contrary view, it is evident to my mind that a power must yet arise to supplant the popo. Call it antichrist or not. But it seems to me, that it is actually first antipope—and then vastly and truly antichrist. If not, will some one kindly show how it is.

And then again. I teachably and kindly ask some one to show how it is, that the ten-toe kingdoms which in symbol belong to the two feet of the image, can in fact be properly found only on one foot. And yet are not the so-called ten kingdoms of Europe, at present found in the western half of the old empire? At all events, Turkey, Egypt, Syria, Greece and North Africa were once Roman.

I know very well how it is that some who ardently love and desire the Lord's coming, shrink back, half appalled, at any further programme of prophecy anterior to that event. To me it is all easy and right, for the satisfactory and sufficient reason that an ablation of ready saints will probably precede the full evolution of the evil to come. If God's people are safe in the chamber of his hiding, what have they to fear of man's devising? If Christ so comes again in like manner as his apostles saw him go into heaven, he will not at first be visible to the world, but only to his elect. Is this hard and awkward, and trying, and incredible to faith?

I have left much unsaid, I have most carefully avoided dogmatism. I will sit at the feet of a wise man instructed of God, who will teach me better than I have yet learned. But pray, do not let him merely be content with a series of simple assertions. Take up the points of reference, one by one, carefully, lucidly and candidly, and I will be an honest reader, and a teachable pupil.

C. COLEBROOK.

Although, for myself, we have never embraced the theory of a future personal antichrist still we are teachable, and therefore ask Bro. C. to carefully state his points in full.—ED. RES.

UNDER WHAT BANNER?

Young man, young woman, under what banner are you going to enlist? I want soldiers to fight the battles of my king, and I want you? Will you go?

Better pay, you cannot get than that which he offers. He promises you a hundred fold down at the start, now in this present life, and in the world to come, eternal life. He promises you a land flowing with milk and honey, for an eternal possession. He promises you such honors and riches as no potentate of earth can bestow, for the are everlasting. His pleasures, are forevermore.

He proffers quietness and safe-dwelling, to them who "choose the fear of the Lord." but destruction as an whirlwind to them that "hate knowledge" and "set at naught his counsel."

Will you enlist? Will you become a soldier of Jesus? Will you bear his name aloft on your ensign?

He will go before you, you have only to walk in his steps. His angels will encamp around you; his hands will bear you up.

True, you must suffer, you must deny self, you must be submissive to orders. You must face the fiery darts of the enemy; but your leader has suffered to, set you an example; and if you suffer he says "you shall reign."

Soldiers are expected to endure hardships, they pride themselves on obedience to the commands of their captain, they glory in going forward, though it be into the very jaws of death, and all for the poor pay and praise of an hour; cannot you do all this, for a greater captain, eternal pay, an heavenly crown?

Enlist for the world,—she proffers treasures and pleasures, joyous gaiety, and sadless mirth, with a hopeless grave at the last; but you will find her promises a cheat; her treasures will flee, her pleasures go by, her mirth, be turned into mourning.

You will be left at life's close a poor, helpless beggar,—life gone, its golden opportunities wasted, the enduring riches thrown away.

Enlist for Satan, he proffers the kingdoms of this world, an envied fame on earth's brightest tablets, but your soul is the price, his promises a lie. Work out his will with might and main; forward his designs; fight over so feebly on the side of wrong, or over so bravely when it comes to the end, though you may have had the glory of the kingdoms of this world; it all goes by, and you stand "wretched and poor and blind and naked" with death for your pay.

Then, will you enlist for my King? Will you work for the wages he proffers? Will you take his gracious gifts?

Cowards will never come. They will never wear the resplendent robes of the golden city, they will never be saved.

Are you cowards? Are you afraid of the service?

Or would you rather enlist for Satan. Serve him and lose all that God has promised?

The time is passing, choose now.

The restitution of all things has ap. proached.

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months Issues Only.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the resurrection of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, since holy things are unclean for unholy ones.

FREE OUT!

We have promises from quite a number of our friends that they would pay indebtedness "after harvest," "in a few days," "very soon," etc. All of these "times" are "out." Had we a large bank account this should not be mentioned, but we are like the farmer who raised 100 bushels of choice wheat. Neighbor A asked for only one bushel for seed, saying he would "pay it back." Of course such a little accommodation could not be refused. Neighbor B asked a similar favor, and it was granted. The farmer granted favors to 100 neighbors. Not one of the 100 realized that the farmer had no crop to market, and it was such a little thing that he neglected to pay for his bushel of wheat. A word to the wise is sufficient. Just at this season of the year we have to exert ourselves very much to meet bills. Cannot you by a little exertion send us at least a small part of what you owe? Please don't we'll "next week" to attend to this, but act today, and then "next week" we will be relieved of our embarrassment.

READ with special care Elder D. M. Canright's articles on the Seventh Day question. His accurate quotations from the works of the early writers in the church of the first centuries will be of special value to our readers who have not the facilities nor the opportunities for consulting the original authorities. We have made arrangements with the author to publish these lectures. This course became necessary as they are fully protected by copyright.

HUMAN DESTINY.

Countless millions of human beings, having the same origin as ourselves, have gone down into death without any clear knowledge of God, and, also, without any conception whatever of the plan of redemption through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is most certainly an important factor to be taken into consideration in the solution of the great question as to the final destiny of the race. The long entertained doctrine, that the vast multitudes of the heathen nations, who have lived and died in their gross ignorance, are doomed to the unutterable agonies of hell-fire to all eternity, is too horribly monstrous to be entertained, and, above all, to be taught as a part of the revelation of God, whose tender mercies are over all his works. While we are perplexed with the idea that all these are only a sort of lost rubbish of creation, to be left in death, where they are, without any future life, we still must regard this theory as infinitely more consistent with the character of our God, who is not only holy and just, but also a God of loving kindness and tender mercy, than the horrific hypothesis that consigns a vast majority of the human race to unending agony. While not calling attention to this subject to commit ourself to any speculative hypothesis, at this time, we are willing to state an opinion, which is—that if the heathen are raised up from the dead at all, it will be for some benevolent and glorious purpose on the part of our Heavenly Father, or that they will be left in death where they now are. While teachable, we are not as yet prepared to commit ourself to either one of the theories, viz; that the heathen will all be raised up to be consumed into annihilation, or to have their future estate determined by a trial of indeterminable forever. The grand object, in our humble ministry, is to present the glorious gospel of the Son of God to the living, and to leave the dead, where they are, in God's hands, without speculating on what may be done for them in the economy of the ages to come. If salvation, in its wider range embraces the raising up and future enlightening of the untaught heathen who have gone down to the grave, we well know that the Judge of all the earth will do right.

Romanism in Ireland.

The following, which we clip from the Montreal Family Herald and Weekly Star of August 10, shows the true inwardness of Romanism. If that awful apostasy from everything Christian had the same power now that it had in the dark medieval ages, Sunday School children would fare no better in these United States. Romanism is now rising in the world, but it is to that toppling eminence spoken of by the Revelator, Rev. xviii. 7, 21, from which she will be hurled down to "be found no more at all." The ruler of this "great apostate city" is the anti-christ pre-eminently; and, for our own part, we are not expecting another. Though heaven's revenge has been slow in coming, yet the doom will be strangely dreadful when the hour of destiny strikes. Let Christians possess their souls in patience, "for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her"—the harlot city. The following is the clipping:

"As a party of Sunday School children connected with the parish church of Westport, and who had been on a picnic to Old Head, were returning home they were met at Lecanvey Catholic Chapel by about 150 people who groaned, hooted and threw stones at them. The drivers pressed on their horses, but at other parts of the road where there were hedges the party were stoned. One of the children received a severe blow in the spine while another had her cheek laid open and a third was knocked senseless. As there was no demonstration of any kind, religious or political, in connection with the excursion, the attack is supposed to have been due to the fact that they carried five little flags, 18 inches by 12 inches, to mark the ground for the sports. One of these was a union-jack pocket-handkerchief tied on a stick and another bore a harp and crown.

THE SEVENTH-DAY, No. 2.

[Copyrighted, 1887.]

DID THE POPE CHANGE THE SABBATH?

The one great point in the Sabbath question upon which Seventh-day Adventists stake the most, upon which they insist the strongest, the point which they repeat the most frequently and the most confidently, is that the pope of Rome did change the Sabbath from the Seventh-day to the first day. They assert that this is all and the only authority Sunday keepers have for observing that day. Sunday is the pope's Sabbath, and Sunday keeping is the mark of the beast, Rev. xiv. 9-12, a terrible sin in the sight of God. See almost any work on the Sabbath published by them. Thus:

"As an institution, Sunday is both pagan and papal; as a rival of the Sabbath of the Lord, it is wholly papal." Who changed the Sabbath? p. 23.

"Almost all the world now wonder after the beast, and observe the pagan festival of Sunday, which the great apostasy has substituted for the holy Sabbath. But when we profane the Lord's Sabbath, and observe in its stead the Romish festival of Sunday, we acknowledge the papacy above God, and able to change his times and laws." The third message, by J. A. Andrews, pp. 20, 21.

"Here we find the mark of the beast. The very act of changing the Sabbath into Sunday, on the part of the Catholic church, without any authority from the Bible." The mark of the beast, p. 23.

"Sunday-keeping must be the 'mark of the beast.'" The Marvel of Nations, by U. Smith, p. 183.

"Those who worship the beast and his image, by observing the first day, are certainly idolaters." Advent Review, Extra, Nov., 1850, p. 11.

To this claim Mrs. White has set the seal of divine inspiration. She says: "The change of the Sabbath is the sign or mark of the authority of the Romish church." "The keeping of the counterfeit Sabbath is the reception of the mark."—Great Controversy, Vol. 4, p. 281.

This settles it with every Seventh-Day Adventist.

My object now is not a belief of this as a fact induces many persons to give up Sunday for Saturday than all other arguments made by the Seventh-Day people. Convince a man that Sunday keeping is only a Catholic institution, a rival to the Lord's Sabbath and hateful to God, and of course, if he has any consistence, he will keep it no longer. Every one of them accepts this as a historical fact to fulfilment of Daniel vii. 25. Indeed, this is the one main pillar in their whole system, upon which all the rest depends. If their position upon this point is false, then their whole system of prophetic interpretation is also false, as they will readily admit. They claim to be raised up in the special providence of God to preach against that change of the Sabbath by the pope. For proof of this see almost any of their publications. The unmingled wrath of God is soon to be poured out upon all who continue to keep Sunday, the pope's Sabbath.

It would seem that such a bold and radical position should be supported by the clearest and most abundant evidence. They claim that it is an actual historical fact that at a certain time, about 500 after Christ, the pope did change the Sabbath to Sunday. If this be so, of course they should be able to produce reliable historical proof for it, giving the time, place, manner, facts and reasons for so remarkable an occurrence. I have before me two books written expressly to prove this assertion. They are "Who Changed the Sabbath?" 24 pages, and "Marvel of Nations," 282 pages. But the only proof offered is simply quotations from Catholic Catechisms, which claim that their church made the change! And is this all the historical(?) proof they can present on this point? Yes, for all that the Sabbatarian writers and scholars for the last 200 years have been able to find is just this and nothing more. Not one single historian in all the annals of the world has ever stated that the pope changed the Sabbath. For twenty-eight years I longed for such a testimony, but found it not.

Then if we admit on their mere assertion the boastful claim of the Catholics that they changed the Sabbath, why not also admit their claim that the pope is infallible, that he has the keys of St. Peter, the chair of the apostle, the only true apostolical succession, etc.? Seventh-day people quickly repudiate all these other claims of the Catholics, but eagerly admit their claim that they changed the Sabbath, simply because this suits their theory, for which they produce no other proof.

Moreover, even the claims of the Catholic Catechisms are misrepresented. The theory is that some hundreds of years after Christ the pope, by his own authority, changed the Sabbath, and the Catechisms are explained to teach this idea. But not one of them makes such a claim or anything like it. Every one of these Catholic quotations states distinctly that the change in the Sabbath was made, not by the pope, but "by the church" in the days of Christ and the apostles, not several hundred years afterward. Thus.

Ques. What are the days which the church commands to be kept holy?

"Ans. 1. The Sunday, or Lord's day, which we observe by apostolic tradition, instead of the Sabbath."—Catholic Christian instructed, p. 200.

From the same work, we take the following additional testimony:

"Ques. What warrant have you for keeping the Sunday, preferable to the ancient Sabbath, which was the Saturday?

"Ans. We have for it the authority of the Catholic church, and apostolic tradition."

Of course Catholics claim that their "church" originated in the days of the apostles, and any change made by the apostolic church was made by the Catholic church. Hence they claim that the "Catholic church" changed the Sabbath in the days of the apostles. Seventh-Day Adventists in using these quotations from the Catechisms wholly ignore this fact and carry the impression that the change was made by the apostate popes hundreds of years after the apostles. But the Catechisms claim no such thing, as is seen in the above quotations. Thus even the Catholic Catechisms, when fairly read, teach that Sunday observance originated with the Christian church in the days of the apostles—just the truth exactly.

We will now present an abundance of historical evidence, proving that the observance of the first day of the week as a day of worship was universal among Christians in the days immediately following the apostles. If Sunday worship originated here, then it did not originate with the papacy, which came up several hundred years later.

I have before me a small book entitled "The Complete Testimony of the Fathers of the First Three Centuries concerning the Sabbath and First Day," by Eld. J. N. Andrews. It is published by the Seventh-Day Adventists. Some years since all the writings of the Christian Fathers, from the very days of the apostles down to A. D. 325, were gathered together and translated into English, under the title of the "Ante-Nicene Christian Library." So all these are now accessible to any English reader who chooses to examine them. Eld. Andrews, whom I personally know and esteemed as a very careful and conscientious man, the best scholar in all the ranks of the Seventh-Day Adventists, copied out of these volumes every sentence relating to the Sabbath question. He says: "I have undertaken to give every testimony of every one of the fathers, prior to A. D. 325, who mentions either the Sabbath or the first day. Though some of these quotations are comparatively unimportant, others are of very great value. I have given them all, in order that the reader may actually possess their entire testimony. I have principally followed the translation of the 'Ante-Nicene Christian Library'" (page 4).

I prefer to quote from this work rather than any other because it is published by the Seventh-Day Adventists themselves. I take the quotations just as Elder A. gives them, and accept the dates as he fixes them. I omit the testimony of all such authors as he questions and take only those which he himself accepts. So the utmost reliance can be placed upon the following quotations touching early first-day worship.

The passages in the New Testament which are generally accepted by Christians as indicating that the apostles did use the first day of the week as a day for religious meetings, are so familiar to all that I need not quote them here. After all that has been said to the contrary by myself and other advocates of the Seventh-day, I am convinced that Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2 and Rev. i. 10, etc., do refer to the custom of the early church of holding their meetings upon the first day of the week. Knowing how strongly Seventh-Day people are intrenched in their views against anything which may be said upon these texts, I will make no argument from them. I only call the reader's attention to the fact, which will be abundantly manifest as we proceed, that the term, "the Lord's Day," Rev. i. 10, whenever and wherever used by the early Christian fathers, was always applied to the first day of the week. It was thus used in a familiar manner and questioned by none. In not a single instance is it ever applied to the Seventh-Day. It is evident to me that John used the term "the Lord's day" just as it was always used by Christians afterward, to designate the first day of the week. "The Sabbath" was the term invariably used for the seventh day, both in the Old and New Testaments. It was the term by which John himself always designated the seventh day. See John v. 9, 10, 16, 18; vii. 22, 23; ix. 14, 16; xix. 31. If John in Rev. i. 10, had meant the seventh day he certainly would have said, "the Sabbath," just as he always had before. "The Lord's day" was a new term made necessary by the use of a new day.

The Greek expression rendered "Lord's day," is not composed of two nouns, but of an adjective and a noun, and would be more accurately expressed by Lordean or Iordic day. The adjective kuriakes was 'formed by the apostles themselves.' (Winer, N. T. Gram., p. 236.) To the same effect testify Liddell and Scott. Of the mode of dealing with words in their lexicon, they say, 'We have always sought to give the earliest authority for its use first. Then, if no change was introduced by the later writers, we have left it with that early authority alone.' (Prof. p. 20). When we turn to the word kuriakos, they give as their first citation, and therefore as its earliest authority, the New Testament. The question now arises, why form a new word to express a sacred institution, if the institution itself be not new? Winer says: 'Entirely new words and phrases were constructed mainly by composition, and for the most part to meet some sensible want.' (Gram., p. 25.) What conceivable sensible want respecting the Sabbath did the Old Testament leave unexpressed? Clearly the new want arose from a new institution. This position receives additional strength from the fact that the only other New Testament use of kuriakos is found in 1 Cor. xi. 20, designating 'the Lord's supper,' which is certainly a new institution." (Peter Vogel, in debate with Waggoner, p. 110).

The lexicons define this term as applying to the Lord Jesus. Thus: "Kuriakos—of or pertaining to the Lord, i. e., the Messiah; the Lord's. 1 Cor. xi. 20; Rev. i. 10." (Greenfield).

"Kuriakos—pertaining to the Lord, to the Lord Jesus Christ; e. g., kuriakon deipnon, the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. xi. 20); kuriakē hēmera, the Lord's day (Rev. i. 10)." (Robinson).

"Kuriakos—of, belonging to, concerning a lord or master, especially, belonging to the Lord." (Liddell & Scott).

The Lord's day, then, is the day belonging to the Lord Jesus, as "he is Lord of all" (Eph. i. 22) in the gospel. We shall find this fact abundantly confirmed in the fathers. I now quote from "The Complete Testimony of the Fathers," by Eld. Andrews:

"Justin's 'Apology' was written at Rome about the year 140." "He is the first person after the sacred writers that mentions the first day, and this at a distance of only forty-four years from the date of John's vision upon Patmos." "It does not appear that Justin, and those at Rome who held with him in doctrine, paid the slightest regard to the ancient Sabbath. He speaks of it as abolished, and treats it with contempt." (Pages 33, 36).

This is the confession which even the historian of the Seventh-Day Adventists is compelled to make. The Jewish Sabbath was wholly disregarded by Christians within forty-four years of the death of the last apostle. And this is proven by the testimony of the very first Christian writer who mentions the first day, after the apostles. Does Eld. Andrews question the genuineness or truthfulness of this statement? Not at all.

But now hear what this same Justin says about the first day of the week, at the same time. Here are the words of his Apology on the subject: "And on the day called Sunday, all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read, as long as time permits; then, when the reader has ceased the president verbally instructs and exhorts to the imitation of these good things. Then we all rise together and pray, and, as we before said, when our prayer is ended, bread and wine and water are brought, and the president in like manner offers prayers and thanksgivings, according to his ability, and the people assent, saying, Amen; and there is a distribution to each, and a participation of that over which thanks have been given, and to those who are absent a portion is sent by the deacons. And they who are well to do, and willing, give what each thinks fit; and what is collected is deposited with the president, who succors the orphans and widows, and those who, through sickness or any other cause, are in want, and those who are in bonds, and the strangers sojourning among us, and, in a word, takes care of all who are in need. But Sunday is the day on which we all hold our assembly, because it is the first day on which God, having wrought a change in the darkness and matter, made the world; and Jesus Christ, our Savior, on the same day rose from the dead. For he was crucified on the day before that of Saturn (Saturday); and on the day after that of Saturn, which is the day of the sun, having appeared to his apostles and disciples, he taught them these things, which we have submitted to you also for your consideration." (Chap. lxvii.)

Does Eld. Andrews question the genuineness or truthfulness of this statement? No, indeed. What answer does he make to it? Simply that Justin does not call Sunday the Sabbath nor the Lord's day! This is readily answered by the fact that Justin was writing to a heathen emperor who would have been wholly ignorant of the meaning of either of those terms, but who was familiar with the term "Sunday." So Justin of necessity used that term. But there the naked facts stand, clear, positive and undeniable, that within forty-four years after the book of Revelation was written Christians did not keep the Seventh-day, but did hold their assemblies on Saturday. And Justin says that Jesus taught these things to the apostles. With these undeniable facts before him, it is a marvel how any man can say that the Sabbath was changed to Sunday three or four hundred years after this by the apostate popes. Such statements are contrary to all the plainest facts of history, as may be seen by the above unquestioned statement of Justin Martyr.

What is the Object of a National Conference?

To unite in one grand body the church of God, those of the One Faith. "In union there is strength, in division there is weakness," is often quoted by some of the brotherhood, and yet with this truth ever before them, with the effects of no union, no order, no organization, still staring them in the face, they cry down every effort that is being made to advance the cause. We have an example before us at every turn we make of a body of believers, starting out at nearly the same point that our brethren did, who with all their false theories, Sabbatarianism, a later day violoist to inspire them to action, are today sending out tons of reading matter, scores of workers, and are educating yearly, hundreds of men, women and children in their peculiar false views. What is the secret of their success? One word tells the whole story, Thorough Order. But while we would not for one moment have our people ground down with their scheming system, we must have some method if we ever expect to do any thing in this age, and we will never accomplish any thing by staying at home year after year, burying our own talents and discouraging others.

We want to build up a system from which we may send out "Armies of ministers" from which every member in the body may walk forth a light to the world, no longer hidden under a bushel, but like a city set upon a hill that cannot be hid. We do not propose to have a meeting of the brotherhood to furnish material for the devil to have a "great jubilee" at their house; neither to furnish an opportunity for a few ambitious men to exert a controlling influence over the church below them, and lord it over God's heritage, but rather to give an opportunity for every ambitious (and the Lord wants no one else in his work) man, woman, and child, to work, devise ways, means, money, time and human souls to enter the great harvest field, where humanity is hungry for truth, and gather sheaves for the Master's use. We want a meeting that the angels in heaven will rejoice over, that the waiting ones of earth may rejoice in, that the world may see a beauty in and be glad that Christianity is making an onward move. We thank God for a brother Westbee, who says: "Union then is great power. Why not call such a general Conference. The work is vast, the time is short." We thank God too for our aged, and loved father Chaplin, so glad to sacrifice for the truth, for an earnest Bro. Dwiggins, and scores of others who are ready, willing, and waiting for the work. And now brothers and sisters, shall a few work alone, do any of us want to stand and see the cause trail in the dust, or pass a head of us and we left behind? No! No! a hundred times no! but with God's help we will band ourselves in one common band of love, and with an earnestness, and zeal that should characterize every worker for the kingdom of heaven, with an effort and sacrifice never before made, let us send out the clarion notes of Onward for the Master; let the call come from hill and vale, from rich and poor, Here am I Lord, send me, send me, not when another year shall come, but now, today, this year, before the opportunity is lost in the great eternity of uncertainties, let us begin; and no better way to get the talent, and thought of good workers together, than by a general Conference.

MARY A. WOODWARD,
Chairman Committee National Conference for Michigan.

Dear Restitution:

Having returned home again after a short visit to Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio, by request I give a statement of the same. Was away from home 26 days, and preached 22 discourses in the parlor and yard of Brother John Barber, we trust to acceptance to the brethren and sisters and to the few outsiders, especially to some aged and middle-aged persons that have long since been disgusted with the popular religion of the day. One man nearly 75 years of age, said he had attended our meeting more than all the meetings he had attended in ten years. He, as well as others that were constant attendants, manifested their interest in the word spoken in various ways, by the hearty shake of the hand, come again, inviting me to go to their houses, giving me of their money to help pay expenses, etc. Brother Barber said that in all the meetings they ever had, it was the first time that any outsider gave anything to a speaker. We feel in hope that they will yet come out, and fully identify themselves with us as a people, and be found among the company that are "waiting for his Son from heaven." To do so must know something about it, and be ready, so as to say with the prophet Isaiah, "we have waited for him." O Lord help us all to be ready to hail him with joy, and receive the reward promised.

The brethren are working at the church building as mentioned by Bro. Westbee, and soon expect to have a place of worship. The Lord bless them in their sacrifice and numbers be added to them, such as shall be saved in the blessed kingdom under the reign of our Messiah, is my earnest prayer.

We have waited to hear from the brethren in answer to our appeal for a meeting-house in the State of Ohio. If no other place can be had more central (although as the edge of the State joining Pennsylvania and West Virginia,) the brethren and sisters of Salem will, as soon as their house is finished, open their house, hearts and homes to accommodate and have a conference. Now dear brethren and sisters of the One Faith, let us try and see what can be done. Sacrifice time and means, which is only borrowed, and only for a little time, and see what can be done, and hear the welcome, "You have done what you could," etc. Yours in the blessed hope. JOHN T. ONGLEY.

War in Europe.

Senator Frye, of Maine, has returned from a five-months tour in Europe, impressed with the conviction that war in that part of the world is not far distant. Peace is now preserved by the aged Emperor William, who is absolute with the German army, but trouble is likely to break out upon his death. Bismarck is strong politically, but is powerless with the army. The only way to avoid war, in Mr. Frye's opinion, is to disband the armies, and that it is impossible to do.

The Maine statesman corroborates the judgment of many observing foreigners in these views. The vast, standing armies of Europe can not always be maintained for mere show. Soldiers and Generals alike grow impatient of protracted life in camp. They want to see service in the field, are anxious for something to do. An eternal dress parade will never satisfy the soldier who has any bravery in his blood. New implements of warfare also are being constantly invented, and there is a desire to try their efficacy upon the battle-field.

The wonder is that a European war has been staved off so long as it has, and the fact is undoubtedly due, in a large measure, to the pacific policy of Emperor William. But the aged ruler's life is liable to be cut short any day, and when that event happens the dogs of war will be likely to break their chains.

Grove Meeting.

At Odebolt, Sac Co., Ia., commencing Thursday, Sept. 1st, and continue over the following Sunday. Preaching each morning, afternoon and evening. Elder T. J. Whitsell, A. J. Eychaner and others will be present to preach the word. Teams will meet the 4:17 train from the east each day. Those coming on any other train write to J. W. Appleyard. The place of meeting is at the Appleyard Grove, three miles east of Odebolt. Let the brethren everywhere come. It is your meeting; come. A. J. EYCHANER.

SEEDS.

We are sowing, daily sowing,
Countless seeds of good and ill,
Scattered on the level lowland,
Cast upon the windy hill;
Seeds that sink in rich, brown furrows,
Soft with heaven's gracious rain,
Seeds that rest upon the surface
Of the dry, unyielding plain.

Seeds that fall amid the stillness
Of the lonely mountain glen;
Seeds cast out in crowded places,
Trodden under foot of men;
Seeds by idle hearts forgotten,
Flung at random in the air;
Seeds by faithful souls remembered,
Sown in tears and love and prayer.

Seeds that lie unchanged, unquickened,
Lifeless on the teeming mould;
Seeds that live and grow and flourish
When the sower's hand is cold;
By a whisper now we bless'ng,
By a breath we scatter strife;
In our words and looks and actions
Lie the seeds of death and life.

Thou who knowest all our weakness,
Leave us not to sow alone!
Did Thine angels guard the furrows
Where the precious grain is sown,
Till the fields are crowned with glory,
Filled with fruit of life eternal
From the seeds we sow in fears.

Check the forward thoughts and precious,
Stay the hasty, heedless hands;
Lest the germs of sin and sorrow
Mar our fair and pleasant lands.
Father, help each weak endeavor,
Make each faithful effort blest,
Till thine harvest shall be garnered,
And we enter into rest.

Selections.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES.

A clear apprehension of the meaning of the phrase which constitutes the heading of this chapter—a phrase which originated with the Savior—is all important to the proper study and understanding of unfulfilled prophecy. What is the meaning of the term? When did the period, indicated by the phrase, begin? What are its special characteristics? Have we any Scriptural clue to its close? Are we nearing its termination? And if so what are the circumstances which point more immediately to its termination? By what is it to be succeeded? These are questions which demand our most careful consideration, and to which, as far as possible, we shall endeavor to give Scriptural answers.

The phrase occurs first in our Lord's answer to the question of the disciples as to the signs which were to portend the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem. Luke xxi. 24. Speaking of the destruction of the city and dispersion of the Jews, the Lord says, "and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." By this we learn that the "times of the Gentiles" stand intimately connected with and are representative of the subjugation of Jerusalem and Judea to Gentile dominion and control, and that when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled Jerusalem and the Holy Land shall be freed from their dominion and restored to their original possessors, the Jews. The language of the apostle, in the 11th chapter of Romans, confirms; he says (vs. 25), "I would not brethren that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceit; that blindness in part has happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Remembering then that the phrase "the times of the Gentiles" means the subjugation of Jerusalem and Judea to Gentile dominion, we proceed to inquire into the origin of that dominion, and the circumstances by which its commencement was accompanied. From the moment that the Lord began to deliver Israel from Egypt, to conduct them through the wilderness, and to establish them in the promised land, up to the election and reign of Saul as king, the Jewish state was a Theocracy, governed and ruled over by God.

The tabernacle was the palace, the dwelling place, the tent of the "Pilgrim God," the mercy seat was his throne—the throne of grace, the Holy of Holies, his throne room, Jehovah its occupant—the Shekinal cloud, the symbol of his presence on earth, and at Jerusalem, over and among the Israelites. The cherubim, or sherubic figures above the mercy seat were the heraldic supporters of the throne, and the conservators of the glory. "The Mercy Seat was the covering of the Ark, and the two combined constituted the throne of the Lord." Now, in the days of Eli, this "throne of the Lord" was captured by the Philistines. But the Lord smote them with sore plague and thus compelled them to send it back. The time of the Gentile supremacy had not yet come. In the days of Samuel, Israel demanded a king like the nations around them, and Samuel was sore grieved at the request; but the Lord said, "they have not rejected thee, they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." With the rejection of God, and the election of Saul as king, the Jewish monarchy was put upon its trial, though the throne rightfully belonged still to God; hence it is said of Solomon, when he came to the crown, that "Solomon sat upon the throne of the Lord."

Upwards of five centuries after the capture and enforced restoration of the Ark, the "throne of the Lord," by the Philistines, Nebuchadnezzar besieged and took Jerusalem. The Jewish monarchy had been on its trial five centuries, and had failed, and with the conquest of Jerusalem by the king of Babylon, the "times of the Gentiles" began. From this time the Ark, the "throne of the Lord," was missing; whether captured by Nebuchadnezzar, or buried by Jeremiah in Mount Nebo, as stated by the author of the book of Maccabees, must remain unknown. But as a symbol of the divine presence with and rule over Israel, it left Jerusalem then and has never since been discovered. In harmony with this fact, and as further illustrative of the idea involved in its loss, we find Ezekiel observing and chronicling the vision of the Shekinal cloud of glory leaving the Holy of Holies, halting at the threshold of the temple, then for a time hovering over the doomed city, and then finally, and as it were reluctantly, disappearing on the mountain on the east side of the city. chapters x. and xi. Now this symbol of the divine presence and power had been with Israel a thousand years. It inaugurated their deliverance from Egypt at the "burning bush;" it came between them and the Egyptians at the Red Sea; it was a light to the one and a darkness to the other; it went before them to choose their halting places during the forty years wandering in the wilderness. It took possession of tabernacle and temple when the first was consecrated by Moses, and the other dedicated by Solomon. It rested for a thousand years upon the mercy seat, and reflected back its glorious responses upon the Urim and Thummim of the High Priest. The prophet now sees it leave Israel, reluctantly depart from the altar and the temple, threshold and city; the "times of the Gentiles" had begun.

Contemporary with Ezekiel was Daniel. God gave to Nebuchadnezzar a vision of this bestowment of power upon himself, as the head of the first four monarchies, as the inaugurator of Gentile supremacy over Jerusalem. Daniel, inspired by God, recalled the dream to the memory of the despotic king, and interpreted it, "thou art this head of gold." He was the first beneath whose feet "Jerusalem was trodden down," and from that hour to this it has never been free from Gentile dominion and control. It passed from Babylonian rule to the Persian on the night when Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom. It was while under Persian rule that Nehemiah wrote the words, "behold we are servants this day, and the land which thou gavest our fathers to eat the fruit thereof, behold we are servants in it; and it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over it because of our sins." When the Persian power was destroyed by Macedon, the rule over Palestine and Jerusalem passed to the Greeks, and from the Greeks to the Romans, and from the Romans to the Saracens and Turks, as conquerors of that portion of the Roman Empire, who are its possessors at the present moment. Thus the "times of the Gentiles" have lasted already nearly two thousand five hundred years. Is there any indication that we are approaching their close? Yes!

(a) The ideal of government in the mind of God, is the rule of one. When he created Adam he made him earth's autocrat. Adam by the fall lost his dominion.

(b) The Jewish government was the rule of one, it was a theocracy; when Israel became unfaithful to its mission and its trust, the theocracy passed away. The times of the Gentiles began in the bestowment of power upon Nebuchadnezzar; "thou art this head of gold;" again it was the rule of one. Power in its origin and bestowment is divine—golden; passed into the hands of men it deteriorates. Darius could do nothing to deliver Daniel without consulting his counsellors, and even then, nothing against their will. Nebuchadnezzar cast the Hebrew youths into the furnace without consulting any one but himself, and if his counsellors had opposed the act would probably have cast them into the furnace too. The Macedonian monarchy was associated with, and limited by, a military oligarchy—a further removal from God's idea of government (i. e., the rule of one), and so, represented by brass, a metal far inferior to silver, and still more inferior to gold. The deterioration of power continues, and "iron" becomes the representative of Roman power. But in its last stage the "iron" is seen seeking to effect an unnatural and impossible amalgamation with the "clay," in other words, the monarchic principle—the rule of one—seeking to ally itself with the democratic principle, or the rule of all—a principle which has chiefly and marvellously developed itself throughout all Europe during the present century, and has within the last few years been professedly recognized by and incorporated with the stolid despotism of Turkey.

Now it is while this principle is developing itself, and compelling its adoption by the governments of Europe, as in the present day, that the stone cut out of the mountain without hands is seen to smite the image upon its "clay-iron" feet, and God sets up his kingdom upon earth, and earth returns to the rule of one—the second Adam, the "Lord out of heaven." The times of the Gentiles will have closed, the fulness of the Gentiles will have been brought in, and there will "come out of Zion the deliverer, and will turn away ungodliness from Jacob." The prophetic history of the four monarchies which was thus presented to Nebuchadnezzar under the figure of a great metallic image, was presented to Daniel under the figure of four wild beasts, ravaging and destroying the earth This is God's estimate of the four Gentile monarchies. In both visions the teaching is the same; the rise and successive subversion of four universal monarchies, followed by the setting up and establishment of Messiah's kingdom upon earth. But to the man of the world—the Babylonian monarch—Gentile dominion is typified by a golden image, while to the prophet—the man of God—it is represented by a wild beast! The closing scene in the first vision is the demolition of Gentile dominion by the "stone" smiting the image, and then becoming a great mountain, and filling the whole earth; in the other, the investiture of the Son of man with supreme authority by the Ancient of days, and the "saints" associated with the "Son of man" in taking the kingdom.

Now what is the summary and result of this vision's teaching?

1. It is manifest that no careful student of prophecy could have expected the setting up of Christ's kingdom upon the earth while either of the first three empires were in their glory before the fourth had appeared upon the stage.

2. Nor could Messiah's kingdom have been looked for while the fourth empire itself (the Roman) yet retained its undivided unity, and had not been split up into a number of separate sovereignties by the inroads of the Goths, Huns, and Vandals; for the vision, by its explicit language, and the angel, by the interpretation given to the vision, would have forbidden such an anticipation.

3. Nor until three of these separate sovereignties had been uprooted by, and in the presence of another little horn, by which their territories were appropriated, could the stone "cut out of the mountain without hands" be expected to smite the image and supplant its rule.

4. For the "little horn" is seen to persecute the saints, and thus a period of prolonged persecution follows the rise of the little horn before it is consumed and destroyed, and its body given to the burning flame.

5. Nor even then could Messiah's kingdom have been expected, till the democratic principle, "the clay," should arise in its power and compel its recognition and enforced amalgamation with the principle of autocracy or despotism, the rule of one, symbolized by the "iron."

But when the first three empires had passed away, and when the last—the fourth, the Roman—had appeared, and when that, losing its compact unity, had been divided by invasion and conquest into a number of separate kingdoms; and when the little persecuting horn had appeared and uprooted three kingdoms, and persecuted the saints; and when, as the last event in the series, democracy had compelled its recognition and adoption by the kings of the earth and the autocratic principle; then we have the fullest Scriptural warrant for constantly and intently expecting the setting up of Messiah's kingdom. As far as we can see or judge, we have reached the last scene and are gazing upon the last display of Gentile power, as in a dissolving view it passes away in the glories of Messiah's reign!

And now we ask, at this stage of our remarks, when did democracy, the last predicted event in the secular aspects of Gentile power, begin its course, and what is the position it has at present attained? We doubt not that in answer to the first question, the reader's mind will instantly recur to the French Revolution of A. D. 1793. That that event was the cradle of modern democracy is beyond dispute. Consequently it is not yet a century old, whilst its most rapid strides and its most determined advances have been made within the last fifty years, notably as starting from 1848. In reply to the second question, what is the position it has already attained? we direct the reader's attention in the first place to the language of the angel when interpreting the vision to Daniel, ch. ii. 43. He says, "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

From this we learn that the attempt to blend the two principles, the monarchic, and the democratic will not be permanently successful; we should therefore be led to expect, just prior to the end of the Gentile supremacy, a political illustration of the truth of this statement, in, first, the attempted and temporary amalgamation of the two principles, and then their practical and permanent divorce from each other, or the destruction of the monarchic by the democratic. Question.—Have we reached this last stage? or, in other words, have we yet witnessed any historic illustration of this prediction? We are certainly to expect it, prior to the setting up of Christ's Kingdom, according to the prediction of the angel. For, let the reader note, it is not the harmonious co-operation of the two principles, but their severance—not from the other—after their futile attempt at amalgamation, that we are to look for as immediately preceding the overthrow of Gentile power.

Now what is the fact? France, the birth place of democracy, after nearly a century of revolutions—after vainly attempting to associate the two principles in government action—has been compelled practically to admit that the iron and the clay will not mix nor mingle with each other. She made the attempt in the closing years of Louis the Sixteenth, again under Napoleon the first, under Louis the Eighteenth, Charles the tenth, Louis Philippe, and finally under Napoleon the third, to find it fail in every case, and now for the last few years seems finally to have abandoned the attempt and to have committed her destiny into the hands of democracy pure and simple. Whether similar results are to be anticipated in the other European kingdoms, before the "time of the end," we know not; but it seems, to our mind, that such a result is not necessary to filling in the conditions of the vision. Enough if, by some palpable and clearly recognizable fact the incompatibility or non-coalescence of the two principles should be unmistakably demonstrated, more especially if, as in the case of France, that fact should receive its demonstration, in the very country in which democracy took its rise. From this it is clear that the conversion of sinners by the preaching of the gospel is not the setting up of the kingdom of Christ on earth. For the gospel was preached with the most power and efficacy in the apostolic age, and the following century, and while such despots as Nero and Domitian swayed the Roman sceptre, and Rome in its terrible unity and undivided strength ruled the world; and when as yet the ten kingdoms of prophetic vision had not been formed out of its broken and scattered fragments. Furthermore, to make this still more manifest, we may recall the question of the disciples and the answer of the risen Savior, as recorded in the 15th chap. of the Acts of the Apostles. "Lord wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom (the rule) to Israel?" The Lord replied, "it is not for you to know the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." Now this question was asked subsequently to the commission given to them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. But if this "preaching the gospel" constituted the setting up of the kingdom, how childish and ignorant was the question itself, and how utterly unintelligible the answer! It is at least clear that neither the Lord nor the disciples confounded the one event with the other, i. e., the preaching of the gospel, with the setting up of Messiah's Kingdom. The one was then commencing; the "times and seasons" of the other, remote, unrevealed, and therefore unknown, kept by the Father in his own power—known only to him to whom all ages form one mysterious and everlasting Now!

Note. What the author of the second book of Maccabees says about the disappearance of the Ark is as follows, "And Jeremiah being warned of God ... went forth into the mountain where Moses climbed up and saw the heritage of God (Mount Nebo). And when Jeremiah came hither he found a hollow cave wherein he laid the Ark and the altar of incense, and so stopped the door.... And said as for that place it shall be unknown until the time that God gather his people together again in mercy; then shall the Lord show them these things, and the glory of the Lord shall appear, and the cloud also." ch. ii. 4, 8. Now what ever may be the value of the above statement as authentic history, the following facts in relation to the Ark as gathered from the sacred records, and grouped together here are not void of interest. (a) All the details and specifications for its construction were prescribed by God himself to Moses on the Mount. "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the Mount." (b) The principle and ultimate object of the rearing of the Tabernacle was to enshrine the Ark which was fixed in the Holy of Holies—its most sacred spot. (c) It constituted the Mercy Seat—which was its covering—the throne of the Lord, and therefore the symbol of his Kingly presence with Israel and upon earth. (d) When captured by the Philistines, in the days of Eli, the Lord smote them with sore plagues till they returned it. (e) It was solemnly inducted into its place, in the Holy of Holies, when Solomon had furnished the Temple, and instantly upon its induction the glory of the Lord descended and filled the house. 2 Chron. v. 13, 14. (f) That the Ark remained in the Temple upwards of four hundred years; i. e., from its induction by Solmon till the destruction of the Temple by Nebuchadnezzar, the first Gentile invader who captured the city and Temple. (g) that Jeremiah, who gives a complete list of the sacred treasures and vessels which were taken away by Nebuchadnezzar from the Temple to Babylon, ch. lii., does not mention the Ark as being among them, though it was the most costly thing in the Temple, overlaid within and without with pure gold. Exod. xxv. 11, 12. (h) That it was in the third and last expedition of the Babylonians to Jerusalem that the Temple was despoiled and destroyed, and that Jeremiah, between the second invasion—when the city was taken; and the third—when the Temple was destroyed—had been left in the city under the care of Nebuzar-Adan (after the removal of Zedekiah, and the destruction of the Jewish nobles), with full and ample liberty to do as he wished, according to Nebuchadnezzar's special command. Ch. xxxix. 11, 14. (i) That in the interim he went down into Egypt, i. e., passed down from Judea to Egypt, the self-same way that Moses came up with Israel from Egypt to the borders of the promised land. (j) That Ezra, who records a list of the sacred vessels brought back from Babylon to Jerusalem at the restoration, (ch. i. 6, 11) makes no mention of the ark. (k) Finally the Jews themselves admit that it was lacking in the Second Temple.

This much is certain, that the mysterious disappearance of the Ark—the throne of the Lord—synchronizes, and is coincident with the beginning of the "times of the Gentiles." Nor must we forget that the "glory of the Lord," the glowing cloud, the Shekinah, which always rested on the Ark, and was the special symbol of Jehovah's Kingly presence, was seen by Ezekiel (ch. x. and xi.) to come out of the Temple (in vision) to linger on the threshold, and finally to leave the city, the Temple, and, we may add, the earth, and ascend from the Mount of Olives till it became invisible. It was a vision alike historic and prophetic. Historically it pointed to the destruction of the "Holy and beautiful house" by the Babylonian King, consequent upon the withdrawal of God from the city and Temple. Prophetically it pointed to the ascension of the Savior from the same spot five centuries later, when he led them out as far as Bethany and blessed them, and was received up in glory, (Lu. xxiv. 50; and Acts i. 9–12). The prophet (Ezek. xliii.) saw the glory—the Shekinah—returning by the way of the East, down the Mount of Olives. The "return of the glory" is described as being coincident with the restoration of the Jews and Israelites to their own land; the building of the future temple, and the perpetual presence of God with his restored people; (ch. xliii.) circumstances which stand closely connected with the inauguration of the Millennium, when He, the true "glory of his people Israel shall descend, and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, when the sign of the Son of Man shall be seen in heaven;" and as "the lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." The departure of the glory in the prophet's vision pointed to the destruction of Jerusalem. The restoration of Christ was the prelude to its second destruction. The return of the glory (Ezek. ch. xliii.) was the accompaniment of Israel's future Restoration. The return of Christ—the Second Advent—stands connected with the same event. So harmonious are the teachings of Scripture, and to this there is nothing dissonant in the statements or anticipations of the author of the Book of Maccabees.—Burlington Wale in Closing Days of Christendom.

"In Ezekiel, 39th chapter, where Egypt is threatened with desolation and captivity, the same phrase is used as is used here by the Lord to designate the period of Israel's desolation and captivity. vs. 3, 4. It shall be the "time of the heathen," i. e., the Gentiles.

גוים

goyim, compare vs. 23.

The "Times of the Gentiles" transpire in an interval between the "times" of the Jews. The "times of the Gentiles" began when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem and the Jewish Monarchy, and thus terminated the "times of the Jews." The times of the Gentiles are to continue through and during the existence of the four Great Monarchies, and when Judea is delivered from Gentile (Turkish) dominion, the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled, and the "times of the Jews" return. Then the expression denotes the time of Gentile dominion over the Holy Land. And can the reader doubt, looking simply at the signs of the times, that when the Turkish dominion over Judea (already trembling in its fall) ceases that the Jews will re-possess their own land, from which they had been exiled eighteen hundred years! The jealousy of the European Powers will insure this.

SHINEHOLTZ.—In Frederick Co., Va., July 17, 1887, Emma Shineholtz, wife of Brother Asa Shineholtz, aged 28 years.

The great enemy of man laid his fatal grasp on Sister Shineholtz in the form of consumption from which she has been a great but patient sufferer for several years. But like Mary of old she chose that good part, which can not be taken from her; which was to fall at the feet of Jesus in her early life, by faith in the promises made of God to the fathers and being baptized by the writer in the all-saving name of Jesus Christ, which gave her a lively hope that if she died she would live again. This hope cheered her in all her afflictions, as she often expressed if it was not for this hope she would of all creatures be the most miserable. But although a monument of affliction herself she was ever ready to do all in her power for the sick and dying of her day and age. Like Dorcas in the days of the apostles, she was full of good works and alms deeds which she did. The writer was sent for by our much esteem Brother Shineholtz to come and see her in her last moments. A short time before she fell asleep in Jesus, which was on the 17th of July, 1887, she grasped my wife's hand with one of hers and mine with the other, and with a low, weak tone of voice said, "Farewell." And for her consolation I related to her the parting words of Brother Dull, of Philadelphia; just before he fell asleep, reached out his hand and said, "Good night, brethren, we will meet in the morning." She fastened her eyes upon me and with a serene, calm countenance, with an expression as if listening to something in the distance, she lay quietly while I continued to console her by referring her to the hope of the old man of Uz, the patriarch Job; that he knew his Redeemer liveth, and would stand upon the earth in the later day, and though worms destroy this body yet in my flesh shall I see God.

Soon after this, without the least struggle to deliver herself from the dominion of him who hath the power of death, she meekly and quietly submitted to his summons, by falling asleep like a little child on its mother's knee. Having talked up the propriety of memorial discourses instead of funerals at the time of interment, while there was a hymn being sung by the brethren the dear sleeper was laid away quietly in her old grandfather's family graveyard. An appointment was made for a memorial discourse to be preached by the writer on the first Sunday in August. There was quite a preparation made in Brother Jacob Good's grove to accommodate the meeting. We, according to appointment, met with the dear bereaved husband and four dear little children and a large family of near relatives and many friends, to mourn the loss of one who we all had learned to love. And like our Lord whose mission it was to bind up the broken-hearted, comfort all that mourn, after dilating several portions of the form of sound words, applicable to the occasion, we made an humble proclamation of the gospel of the blessed God from the nineteenth chapter of John as embracing the only hope or comfort for the fallen sons and daughters of the Adamic family, either the dead or living, and concluded with the apostle Paul's testimony to the Thessalonian brethren, that we should comfort one another with the word of the Lord in which we have the blessed assurance in the language of Martha to Jesus of the dear bereaved soon meeting the dear "sister" with the saints of all ages, and he who is the resurrection and the life in the resurrection at the last day. N. J. MORGAN.

The enemy hath late laid low,
With his cold hand and icy blow;
But one more strong than he will come,
Thy prison then shall be undone.

We then shall sing the victor's song,
"Oh, monster death, where is thy sting?"
Sweet be thy rest, 'twill not be long,
'Till we shall see our glorious king.

J. J. SPAID,
JOHN D. GOOD,
JACOB GOOD,
A. J. MILLER,
WILLIAM GOOD,
N. J. MORGAN,

"The Unspeakable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of Life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

---

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Heller's Block, Room 36, 316½ Ontario Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Ontario Market. Seats free. Brethren from abroad of like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome.

"ALL THE DAY IDLE."

All around you, everywhere,
Men and women do and dare;
With a purpose all alive,
In the swarming human hive.

Up and down, and to and fro,
On the endless round they go;
Patiently they bear their lot,
Life and death they question not.

Through the darkness, o'er the waste,
Voices call them, and they haste;
To the wind their fear they fling;
All their best they gladly bring.

If the wind blow east or west,
They can neither play nor rest;
So much work beneath the sky,
They can scarcely stop to die.

You are idle, and you stand
Just a dreamer in the land,
Having neither name nor place
With the runners in the race.

Are you made of finer clay?
Have you redder blood than they?
Must they always lay the meat,
Which they strive for at your feet?

Must they always, first and last,
Stand between you and the blast?
Are you God's peculiar care?
Has He favorites anywhere?

It were best that you should feel
Force of tempest, touch of steel;
Best to let your fancies flee
Quicken into flames divine.

Men and women, with their loads,
Toil along the endless roads;
Overtake them, help them lift,
And no longer dream and drift!

BIBLE LESSONS FOR EARNEST STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.

Lesson 6.

Lesson Chapter, Gen. xv.

THE COVENANTS OF PROMISE MADE TO ABRAHAM AND TO DAVID TO BE FULFILLED IN AND THROUGH CHRIST AS THE SEED OR SON OF DAVID AND OF ABRAHAM.

Proof: Christ the seed of David.

"Jesus Christ the son of David, the son of Abraham." Matt. i. 1. Jesus Christ, David's seed through Mary. Luke iii. David's seed, through Joseph, his legal father. Matt. i.

COVENANT MADE WITH DAVID.

Deut. xvii. 11–14; repeated in Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 18, 27, 28, 29, 34, 35, 36. I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up his throne to all generations. For the Lord is our defence, and the Holy One of Israel is our king. Also I will make him my first-born higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him forevermore and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. My covenant will not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me."

CHRIST TO REIGN ON DAVID'S THRONE.

"The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." Psa. cxxxii. 11.

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called wonderful, counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it, with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even forever." Isaiah ix. 6, 7.

That this child, this son, is Jesus. See Luke i. 32, 33. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Refer also to Matt. xxviii. 18.

"Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. i. 3, 4.

"Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch and a king shall reign and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is his name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness." Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; John i. 45; 1 Cor. i. 30.

Proof: Christ the seed of Abraham. Jesus Christ the son of David, the son of Abraham. Matt. i. 1; Rom. ii. 16, 17. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16.

COVENANT MADE TO ABRAHAM.

"And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land that thou seest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, thou shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee." Gen. xiii. 14–17. We learn from these verses that Abraham was then in the land of promise for the Lord told him to look at the land and to walk through it.

COVENANT TO BE ESTABLISHED.

"And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Notice, it is the land of Canaan that is promised to Abraham and to his seed (which is Christ and those that are his) for an everlasting possession.

Abram made to know that he will inherit the land, covenant ratified. Gen. xv., in the sacrifice of victims, and the passing of the divine glory between the pieces. The covenant being a divine, and not a mutual one, Abraham does not perform the usual ceremony; God's presence alone goes between the divided victims.

GOD MAKES OATH TO PERFORM THE COVENANT.

"And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, by myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 15–18.

What a multitude will be blessed through Christ the promised seed.

The covenants of promise, the hope, and the consolation, of the heirs of promise. Heb. vi. 12–20.

THEY WHICH ARE OF FAITH THE CHILDREN OF ABRAHAM THROUGH CHRIST.

"And the Scriptures, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise." Gal. iii. 7, 8, 9, 14, 26, 27, 28. These verses show that they which be of faith and put on Christ in baptism, become adopted into the Abrahamic family and heirs with him to the glorious promises made to Abraham. Heb. ix. 8; Gal. iv. 1–8.

COVENANT TO BE FULFILLED THROUGH CHRIST.

"But when the fulness of the time was come God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law that we might receive the adoption of sons. . . . and if a son then an heir of God through Christ." Gal. iv. 4, 7.

"I saw in the night visions and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 13, 14, 27. The kingdom spoken of here, will be under the whole heaven. Paul says the world was promised to Abraham. Rom. iv. 13.

"And the seventh angel sounded, and there was a great voice in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

"Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be. Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxii. 12, 14.

We think we have shown from the Scriptures of truth that Christ is the promised seed (or descendant) of David and of Abraham and the one through whom all the promises will be fulfilled. Our faith should be founded on the glorious promises of God or upon God's word which is truth.

Reviewing, we see that the Covenants of Promise, relate to a kingdom. That that kingdom is "the inheritance" promised to Abraham, Gal. iii. 18; Eph. i. 14; Heb. xii. 28; Rev. v. 10, appointed unto Christ, Luke xxii. 29, from which all things that offend and that do iniquity are to be gathered out, Matt. xiii. 41, in which the righteous are to shine, Matt. xiii. 43, the dominion from sea to sea, spoken of by David, Psalm lxxii. 8, and the kingdom prophesied of by Dan, Dan. vii., and preached of by Christ and his apostles.

"Let the truth stand." "Buy the truth and sell it not."

He Lived in 1752.

James James, a negro and citizen of the United States, who resides at Santa Rosa, Mexico, is probably the oldest man on earth. He was born near Dorchester, S. C., in 1752, and while an infant was removed to Medway River, Ga., in the same year that Franklin brought down electricity from the thunder clouds. In 1772 there was quite an immigration into South Carolina, and his master, James James, (from whom he takes his name), moved near Charleston, S. C., in company with a number of his neighbors. On June 4, 1776, when 24 years of age, a large British fleet, under Sir Peter Parker, arrived off Charleston. The citizens had erected a palmetto wood fort on Sullivan's Island, with twenty-six guns manned by 500 troops under Col. Moultrie, and on June 28 the British made an attack by land and water, and were compelled to withdraw after a ten-hours' conflict. It was during this fight that Sergeant Jasper distinguished himself by replacing the flag, which had been shot away upon the bastion, on a new staff. His master, James James, manned one of the guns in this fight, and Jim, the subject of this sketch, with four other slaves, were employed around the fort as general laborers. Jim followed his master throughout the war, and was with Gen. Moultrie at Port Royal, S. C., February 3, 1779, when Moultrie defeated the combined British forces of Prevost and Campbell. His master was surrendered by Gen. Lincoln at Charleston, S. C., on February 12, 1780, to the British forces, and this ends Jim's military career.

He remembers of the rejoicing in 1792 throughout the country in consequence of Washington's election to the Presidency, he then being 40 years of age. In this year his first master died, aged about 60 years. Jim then became the property of "Marse Henry" (Henry James), owning large estates and about thirty slaves near Charleston. On account of having raised "Marse Henry," Jim was a special favorite with his master and was allowed to do as he chose. His second master, Henry, died in 1815, about 55 years of age, and Jim, now at 63 years of age, became the property of James James, Henry's second son. In 1833 the railroad from Charleston to Savannah was completed, then the longest railroad in the world, and Jim, with his master, took a trip over the road, and was shown special favors on account of his age, now 81. James James was 10 years of age at his father's death, and when he became of age inherited large estates, slaves, etc., among whom were "old Uncle Jim" and his family. James James lived in South Carolina until 1855, when he moved to Texas with all his slaves. James decided that his slaves should be free at his death, and in 1858 moved into Mexico, so that they could be free before his death. James returned to the United States and died in Texas, and in 1865, after there were no longer slaves in the United States, Uncle Jim's children and grandchildren returned to the United States. Five years ago, at the age of 130, Jim could do light chores, but subsisted mostly by contributions from the citizens, but for the past two years, not being able to walk, he remains for the most part in his little cabin, his wants being supplied by generous neighbors. The rheumatism in his legs prevents him from walking.—Montreal Family Herald and Weekly Star.

THE EASTERN QUESTION

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Westher. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 560 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, plainest type to read, and good paper. Price $4.00. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $6.00.

DR. SMITH'S
BIBLE DICTIONARY.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with Sixteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller Illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Maps of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 776 pages, price $1.50.

THE COMING AGE,
—IN—
Nature and Proximity.
—By J. P. WESTHER.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thoughts of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents instead views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the events of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 300 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3 00. Send to this office for this work.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT.
—By B. WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. O. Thomas.

Title page.—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation; and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead to its authority. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 250 pages, Cloth bound. ### MICA PEN-NOTES.

Spiritual advantage and advancement, perfect daily living, and indwelling in God! Child of light and of hope,—that is what you chiefly desire, and indefatigably seek. There is nothing else or less, to be talked of, or thought of. What a struggle and strife, what an ever new and fresh rising and aspiring! In each waking hour of night, when the air is full of insect chimes, you look steadfastly and importunately up, you stretch your arms upward in the darkness. With the breaking day, again, you beseech the King of glory to make you wholly and entirely true, and light, and right and wise. There is no rest absolutely, and never can be, until you have surmounted every difficulty, and won the victory over earthliness. Hence how can one but say incessantly—"raise me, O thou God of might and righteousness, raise me from the dead, first spiritually, and then utterly and literally."

God is rich. He is infinite in all treasures of power and blessing. He can speak a word, and it is irresistible. What endless and boundless wonders he can do, without weakness or weariness or failure! And I know this perfectly. And I know my own weakness and poverty and ignorance. And I know yet further, that whosoever will grow best and most, must have the best and highest ideas possible of God. There is where so many come so disheartenlingly short. That is how and why I am myself so unequal in fact to the ideal, and then to the real, possibility of dwelling mentally aloft in God; and this in spite of the apparent paradox. In other words we must not bring him down by ignoble conceptions, but raise him far above all height of greatness and brightness. We see how the prophets rouse and exhort the people to exalt the Lord. Of course we cannot literally raise him above what he inherently and infinitely is, but we can raise him higher and higher in our own estimate, in the two fold faculty of imagination and faith. There is great error and wrong in ideas of God, and this is forever an impediment and an embarrassment. Perhaps we form images in the mind of a figure that we worship, but O, how paltry and poor is the idea of a shape, even though clothed with an ideal brightness! For the most part, I am afraid to worship a picture, even though it is purely mental. I query if it is not an infraction of the caution to make or adore no image. Hence, I worship rather, God invisible, God wholly invisible, but believed on with all the heart, as real, universal and full of energy and might. What shall stand as representative of that glory? First, I think, intelligence. A , that perfect, unsleeping, infallible and great intelligence! God is infinite intelligence. He is always seeing, and he is more perfectly familiar with all the secrecy and intricacy of all things, with all details, all minuteness and all vastness. And he is perfect truth and purity. And interior to all, and pervading, and present in all is goodness.

I know how it is that the righteously aspiring heart, desires to be perfectly purified and pure;—desires to be penetrated and wrought and transformed. O, what a want, what a felt need of the soul in which is a spark of new begotten life! And I realise that nothing would seem sweeter and more welcome than a felt working power within. Hearts yearn to feel the fire of God and would welcome a flame borrowed from the bush. Even Christians are not without a thought of something blessed and noble in the burning that quickens every spring of life, and makes heaven of earth. What good and great things, to them, are entertained in the heart beat of those two Emmaus-bound disciples! And I would never say such holy burning were impossible or unworthy of pursuit. I know the truth is a centre of power, and truth is power. And with it, a fire of joy, or a joy of fire, is both welcome and potent. Yet, in the main, the forces and fervors of the Spirit are secret and still, like manifold forces in nature. Like the power that makes the tree first faintly green with buds, and then strong and grand in perfected foliage, the power of God is in inaudible sparks of life; is in energy, it may be, mainly unfelt in its operation, but evident in results. I some times think it is faintly imaged by the most wonderful mute and delicate flesh and efflorescence of the Northern Aurora. There is no sound, but there may be unimagined power in these sky-painting flames. At all events, thus marvelously with a kind of occult power, does the Spirit work,—not with sparklike crackling and little explosions of force, but with an influence hardly more than a breath, a working of tenuity almost,—of gentleness and fineness, but yet of such real energy that it overcomes the very stoniest hardness, penetrates the profoundest darkness, and raises from painful deterioration, to life and glory. But it is all with a man's own seeking and asking, and never-ceasing entreaty to God for his unexampled and incorruptible Spirit-working, a divine and precious activity.

God is a Spirit. There I am glad to rest, and by that I am glad to press on, and I daily seek spirit life and power, perfect purity of purpose and imagination, and complete redemption from folly and faultiness. God will have his own. He will lead and train them. He will teach and perfect them. He hath set apart the godly for himself. Mind that, and consider that. Accordingly he will not permit such ones to go on their knees, in worship of worldly glory, and the fatness of earthly success and abundance. He will save them from human flattery, and the dizzy and hurtful pride of life. He may save them from fame, as that word is commonly understood. In harmony with his will, then, how we ought to prize the high and great election, and work it out with our own intelligent and filial will also! How we ought to say again and again—"none but Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth!" How we ought to be simple and single-minded, and true, having in mind Christ in his perfection, and having a God-like discontent with aught but a perfect Christ-likeness.

I look at a mighty sun-flower through our pantry window. What a stately, unassuming, but noble, stature! And how it bends and bows, with its broad and weighty bloom of gold, simple in its mantle of rude, broad leaves, saint-like with a perpetual humility, and seraphic with an instructive reverence! So was even our Divine Lord. So should be every soul of God's own. The grander the character,—the nobler the stature, the statelier and the weightier; by just so much, in the humility grander, that acknowledges God! And so God does and will raise up great ones, and they shall be Christ-like, and glorify his name;—glorify it, by first knowing and feeling the glory—and then, by causing others to know it, and all together as one confessing and extolling it. These, thus raised up, shall be distributing centers of Divine light. The more they are expanded and enlarged; the more nobly they will represent the perfection of the great Original. And so God will be the more exalted in ever-increasing numbers of souls reclaimed, intelligences loyal, and organic and immutable in loyalty. Are plants loyal to their sun? Do they change or waver. No more will the redeemed waver. O, what glory in store!

And, now, where are the humble people, that sent little letters of hope, and faith, to THE RESTITUTION, Where are they? Are they like crickets hid in the grass, that in the nighttime of trials, have hushed their minstrelsy? Is the night so weary and long, they can pipe no more? Are the clouds so thick and dark, they have no heart to sing again? To change the figure, some shepherd with his mantle and lantern might think it fit to go out calling. Perhaps some sheep would answer with a hearty bleat of greeting. If the gloom is but feebly cheered with stars, then there will be intelligence and love in the candle-beams streaming out into the midnight. "Beloved of my fold"—cries the bereaved keeper of sheep, peering out into shadow—"Where have ye strayed? Are ye cold, are ye faint, are ye far off in some glen, or have ye climbed some dizzy crag, and are ye afraid to put one foot down for fear of a fall? Give me a sign, that I may come to you with the warm red beams of my lantern, and show you kindly the way home?"

Think of only one sheep lost out of a countless host! And that shepherd, thinking of his one unfortunate sheep, can not go to his couch with an unclouded brow. If in all the broad area of his estate, there is one lost, then there is sorrow in his heart. He resolves and declares with a purpose as fixed, as love is undying,—"that lost one, must and shall be found. I will go and seek him. I will penetrate the blackest darkness. I will scale the giddiest height. I will venture to the most inaccessible recesses. I will brave the bitterest cold. My heart bleeds for the wanderer, and I shall not let him die alone and unfriended in the pitchy night. I reared that sheep myself. He was always wayward and shy, but I always loved him. I always yearned to win his confidence. Poor, fugitive, unfortunate, distrustful thing. I shall find him caught in some bush, or lost in some thicket, or lamed by some fall, or else palsied with fear, or shivering with cold, or nearly dead with hunger. I shall call him with the old halloo, that he will recognize, and I shall let my candle-light shine into his blurred eyes and on his burr-tangled forehead. I shall come to him with love and gentle words. I will win him with my compassion. I shall bind up his bruised feet, and take him in my arms, for I am strong, and I would carry him, if he were twice as heavy. Do people talk of a shepherd love that ever dies? They know not a shepherd's pitying heart, that would bear the heat of Ceylon, or the cold of Iceland, for the waywardest, or the paltriest of his flock. It is the waywardness and weakness that moves me to pity. It is the thought of that emaciated form, that scared look and haggard aspect, that makes me sorry and tearful. My heart-ache only makes me resolute. I shall face any danger. I shall confront every difficulty. I must find my sheep, and I shall win his confidence and affection. He will surely believe in me when I have saved him, and that will be joy and reward enough for all the trouble."

But I have said enough. The days are strange and tragic with warning and awful events. How true it is, though, in spite of all, that that day cometh as a snare! Some will have fears and misgivings, but multitudes will be full of excuses and explanations, and take no lesson to heart. Famines, drownings, burnings, whirlwinds, crashes, explosions, all pass on, as a tale that is told. But the day of God steals on steadily. And what a day it is, and will be!

THE SEVENTH-DAY, No. 6.

(Copyrighted, 1887.)

DID THE POPE CHANGE THE SABBATH?

We continue our argument from last week:

Elder Andrews admits that the epistle of Barnabas (A. D. 150) "was in existence as early as the middle of the second century, and, like the 'Apostolic constitutions,' is of value to us in that it gives some clue to the opinions which prevailed in the region where the writer lived." "Testimony of the fathers," p. 21.

We will accept the date which Elder A. himself fixes for the writing of this epistle, though others put it much earlier. Its tendencies, only ten years later than Justin, and within fifty-four years of St. John. In this epistle we read: "Incense is a vain abomination unto me, and your new moons and Sabbaths I cannot endure." He has therefore abolished these things." chap. 2.

Elder A. admits that "he presently asserts the abolition of the Sabbath of the Lord." "Testimony," etc., p. 22. This agrees with Justin. Coming to the first day of the week Barnabas says: "Wherefore, also, we keep the eighth day with joyfulness, the day, also, on which Jesus rose again from the dead." chap. 15.

What does Elder A. say to this testimony? He freely admits that it touches the abolition of the Jewish Sabbath and the keeping of Sunday, and that, too, only fifty-four years after the close of the New Testament. But he argues that such a doctrine is contrary to the Bible; that is, to his idea of the Bible. While I was yet a first believer in the seventh day, when reading this book, I was struck with the fact that Elder A., all through his book, had to oppose and combat the teachings of all these early fathers! The reason is manifest; he held one doctrine and they held another. He believed in the seventh day, and they believed in the first day. They lived early enough to have converse with the apostles themselves, while he lived eighteen hundred years later! Which would be apt to know the best?

In his "History of the Sabbath," p. 308, he says: "The reasons offered by the early fathers for neglecting the observance of the Sabbath show conclusively that they had no special light on the subject by reason of living in the first centuries, which we in this latter age do not possess."

What a confession that is from the ablest historian the seventh day ever had! He freely admits that "the early fathers" "in the first centuries" neglected "the observance of the Sabbath." What further need have we for witnesses to prove that the seventh day was not observed in the first centuries? But how does this harmonize with the theory that the Sabbath was changed to Sunday by the pope several hundred years afterwards? Suppose those early fathers were not good theologians, nor able reasoners; could they not testify to a simple fact? Could they not state whether they did or did not keep Saturday? Surely they knew enough for that, and this is all we wish to ask.

But we will hear further from these fathers themselves as to whether they kept Sunday. Again I quote from "The testimony," etc., p. 62: "Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, about A. D. 170, wrote a letter to the Roman church, in which are found these words: 'We passed this holy Lord's day, in which we read your letter, from the constant reading of which we shall be able to draw admonition.'"

Elder A. is not certain that the "Lord's day" is the first day of the week; but we have seen and shall see that this term is always applied to the first day. Coming only ten years later we have the "testimony of the heretic Bardesanes. Bardesanes, the Syrian, flourished about A. D. 180. He belonged to the Gnostic sect. He says: 'On one day, the first of the week, we assemble ourselves together, and on the days of the readings we abstain from (taking) sustenance.' This shows that the Gnostics used Sunday as the day for religious assemblies." "Testimony," etc., p. 53.

Here is another good testimony for Sunday, and another good confession from Elder A. All parties, orthodox and heretic, kept Sunday as early as A. D. 180. How, then, is it that Constantine and the pope changed the Sabbath to Sunday two to four hundred years later? Elder A.'s own words utterly refute such an idea.

Clement, of Alexandria (A. D. 194), calls Sunday "the Lord's day." Book V, chap. 14.

Tertullian (A. D. 200) is one of the most noted of the fathers, his writings being many and well known. He wrote only about one hundred years after the last apostle. Elder A. freely admits that he taught the abolition of the Jewish Sabbath and the observance of Sunday. Thus: "He asserts that the Sabbath was abolished by Christ." "He speaks of the Sabbath as abrogated by Christ." "With the observance of Sunday as the Lord's day he brings in offerings for the dead." "Testimony," etc., pp. 63, 64. Then he quotes Tertullian as follows: "'We solemnize the day after Saturday in contradistinction to those who call this day their Sabbath, and devote it to ease and eating, deviating from the old Jewish customs, which they are now very ignorant of.' Tertullian again declares that his brethren did not observe the days held sacred by the Jews: 'We neither accord with the Jews in their peculiarities in regard to food, nor in their sacred days.' 'We, however (just as we have received), only on the day of the Lord's resurrection ought to guard not only against kneeling, but every posture and office of solicitude; deferring even our business, lest we give any place to the devil.'" "Testimony, etc., pp. 65, 66, 67.

Does Elder A. or any Seventh-day Adventist deny the genuineness or truthfulness of these statements of Tertullian? They do not attempt to. Thus Elder A. is compelled to admit that as early as A. D. 200, or within 101 years after the close of the New Testament, Sunday was "generally honored." Thus: "The entrance of the Sunday festival into the church is an age of apostasy when men very generally honored it, was not merely not difficult to be effected, it was actually difficult to be prevented." "Testimony," etc., p. 65.

Again we ask, how does this agree with the idea that Sunday-keeping is the mark of the beast, brought in by the papacy about A. D. 688, or 338 years after Tertullian? These quotations from Elder A.'s own book have already utterly demolished that theory.

Origen (about A. D. 226) was a man of immense learning, and his writings are numerous. He says: "If it be objected to us on this subject that we ourselves are accustomed to observe certain days, as, for example, the Lord's day, the preparation, the passover, or pentecost." "Testimony," etc., p. 87.

This plainly implies that he did observe the Lord's day.

Of the "Apostolic constitutions," A. D. 250, Elder A. says: "The so-called 'Apostolic constitutions' were not the work of the apostles, but they were in existence as early as the third century, and were then very generally believed to express the doctrine of the apostles. They do therefore, furnish important historical testimony to the practice of the church at that time. Mosheim, in his 'Historical commentaries' (cent. 1, sect. 51), speaks thus of these 'constitutions': 'The matter of this work is unquestionably ancient; since the manners and discipline of which it exhibits a view are those which prevailed among the Christians of the second and third centuries, especially those resident in Greece and the oriental regions.'" "Testimony," etc., p. 13.

These, then, will be good witnesses to the practice of the church about A. D. 250. In section 7, paragraph 69, we read: 'And on the day of our Lord's resurrection, which is the Lord's day, meet more diligently, sending praise to God that made the universe by Jesus and sent him to us.' 'Otherwise what apology will he make to God who does not assemble on that day to hear the saving word concerning the resurrection.' In book 7, section 2, paragraph 30, he says: 'On the day of the resurrection of the Lord, that is, the Lord's day, assemble yourselves together without fail, giving thanks to God,' etc. In the same paragraph, in speaking of the resurrection of Christ, the writer says: "On which account we solemnly assemble to celebrate the feast of the resurrection on the Lord's day,' etc." "Testimony," etc., pp. 14, 18.

These testimonies are decisive, and do show beyond a doubt that the Christians of those early days used Sunday just as it is used now, for religious worship. Did they, then, have "the mark of the beast" at least 250 years before the beast had arisen, according to the Seventh-day Adventists' theory? These unquestionable facts of history, taken from their own published works and admitted by them to be true, show the utter absurdity of their position that Sunday-keeping is the mark of the beast.

Plenty more testimonies of the fathers from the same book could be given to the same effect if necessary.

Sabbatarians make much of the famous Sunday law put forth by Constantine, A. D. 321. It shows, they claim, that Sunday had been a day of common labor by all Christians up to that date, and that here they first began to observe it as a holy day. I am fully satisfied that their view of the case is utterly false. Certainly the pagans did not keep Sunday, and if the Christians did not, then what was the object of Constantine in making such a law? He made it to please and accommodate somebody; who was it? The wording of the law shows that it was not addressed to Christians but to pagans. He styles Sunday "the venerable day of the sun," a pagan term. The facts are that Christianity had become strong enough in the empire to make it politic for the emperor to favor and thus win Christians to his support. They universally kept Sunday, but had no law to protect them in it. To favor them he required all to cease work that day. This of course, secured a better observance of the day than before. Thus the historian says: "The first day of the week, which was the ordinary and stated time for the public assemblies of the Christians, was, in consequence of a peculiar law enacted by Constantine, observed with greater solemnity than it had formerly been." Mosheim, cent. 4, part 2, chap. 4, sect. 5.

On this point Smith's "Bible Dictionary" (article "Lord's day") justly says: "That Constantine then instituted Sunday for the first time as a religious day for Christians .... is absolutely refuted, both by the quotations made above from writers of the second and third centuries and by the terms of the edict itself."

As a fair, impartial and clear statement of the teachings of the early Christian fathers concerning the observance of Sunday we refer the reader to the above quoted authority. Here is a book easy of access to all anywhere, unsectarian, embodying the results of the most thorough and scholarly examination of every passage in all the fathers having any bearing upon the Sunday question. Any one who has read the fathers must confess that its statements are fair and truthful. I have only room for one more short quotation:

"The results of our examination of the principal writers of the two centuries after the death of St. John, are as follows: The Lord's day.... existed during these two centuries as a part and parcel of apostolical, and so of Scriptural Christianity. It was never defended; for it was never impugned, or at least only impugned as other things received from the apostles were. It was never confounded with the Sabbath, but carefully distinguished from it.... It was not an institution of severe Sabbatical character, but a day of joy and cheerfulness, rather encouraging than forbidding relaxation. Religiously regarded, it was a day of solemn meeting for the holy eucharist, for united prayer, for instruction, for alms-giving; and though being an institution under the law of liberty, work does not appear to have been formally interdicted, or rest formally enjoined. Tertullian seems to indicate that the character of the day was opposed to worldly business. Finally, whatever analogy may be supposed to exist between the Lord's day and the Sabbath, in no passage that has come down to us is the fourth commandment appealed to as the ground of the obligation to observe the Lord's day."

The man who will shut his eyes to all this mass of testimony, and still insist that Sunday-keeping is only an institution of the popes of later ages, is simply held by a theory which he is bound to maintain anyway. I have had a sad experience in this matter, and know just how a seventh-day man feels in reading these historical facts. I read some of them twenty years ago. They bothered me some, but I got over this by my strong faith in our doctrines and by believing them to be mostly forgeries. Afterwards as I read more, I saw that these testimonies were reliable and very decidedly against our theory of the pope's Sunday. This disturbed me quite a little, but I still got over them by simply ceasing to think of them at all, and by dwelling upon other arguments in which I had perfect confidence. In debate I was always anxious to shut these out of the discussion. I know the Seventh-day Adventist ministers generally feel just as I did, for we often referred to these testimonies of the fathers and the effect they had in debate. Of course, the great body of the members never read these things, and are in blissful ignorance concerning them. Or, if they do read them, it is in their own books where they are all explained away. Their unbounded faith in "the message" and in their leaders carries them right over these facts as matters of no consequence.

For myself, when once I decided to look these historical facts squarely in the face and give them whatever force they fairly deserved, I soon saw the utter falsity of the claim that the "pope changed the Sabbath." That old feeling of uneasiness on this point is entirely gone. I feel that so far as the evidence of history is concerned, my feet stand on solid ground. I feel so thankful to God for the relief that it has brought to my own mind that I would gladly help my old friends out also if I could, for I know full well the bonds with which they are held.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms--TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months thereafter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE "RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS" was fulfillment of all things which God hath "spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the total destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Youth's Column.

Slumber Song.

Evening is falling to sleep in the west,
Lulling the golden-brown meadow to rest;
Twinkle like diamonds the stars in the skies,
Greeting the two little slumbering eyes.
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep;
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

Now all the flowers have gone to repose,
Closed are the sweet cups of lily and rose;
Blossoms rocked lightly on evening's mild breeze,
Unconsciously, dreamingly, swinging the trees.
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep;
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

Sleep till the flowers shall open once more;
Sleep till the lark to the morning shall soar;
Sleep till the morning-star, lighting the skies,
Bids thee from sweet repose joyfully rise.
Sweetly sleep; Jesus doth keep;
And Jesus will give his beloved ones sleep.

A Brother's Charge.

One day a little boy asked his mother to let him lead his little sister out on the green grass. She had just begun to run alone and could not step over anything that lay in her way. His mother told him he might lead out the little girl, but charged him not to let her fall. I found them at play, very happy, in the field.

I said, "You seem very happy, George. Is this your sister?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can she walk alone?"

"Yes sir; on smooth ground."

"And how did she get over those stones which lie between us and the house?"

"Oh, sir, mother charged me to be careful that she did not fall; and so I put my hands under her arms and lifted her up when she came to a stone, so that she need not hit her little foot against it."

"That's right George; and I want to tell you one thing. You see now how to understand the beautiful text: 'He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone!' God charges his angels to lead and lift his people over difficulties, just as you have lifted little Annie over these stones. Do you understand it now?"

"Oh, yes, sir; and I never shall forget it while I live."

Can one child thus take care of another, and can not God take care of those who trust him? Surely he can. There is not a child who may read this story over whom he is not ready to give his holy angels charge.—Dr. Todd.

Excursions to Philadelphia.

Extensive preparations are being made by the citizens of Philadelphia for a fitting celebration of the centennial anniversary of the adoption of the Federal Constitution on September 15th, 16th and 17th. The President of the United States, his Cabinet, and other distinguished gentlemen will be present. Excursion tickets will be sold to Philadelphia and return from September 8th to 17th, inclusive, at one fare for the round trip from ticket stations on the Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh. These tickets will be good for return passage until Sept. 22d, inclusive. No other lines can furnish such excellent facilities and accommodations for reaching Philadelphia as the Pennsylvania. Call on or address the nearest ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Company, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railway, or the Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburgh Railroad Company.

Will you help us by getting one or two Trial Subscribers?

IN MEMORIAM.

Our little church in Plymouth has sustained a loss that deeply saddens the heart of every surviving member of the congregation. Death's relentless hand has deprived us of a sister for whom a slight acquaintance was sure to elicit praise, and a more intimate knowledge equally sure to win, not only high esteem, but sincere loving friendship. Sister Palmer is with us no more! These words have indeed a melancholy meaning to us all, want, as we have been, to see her presence in the little sanctuary that her loving heart and hands did so much to fix up and prepare as a place to worship God, and hold forth the words of life. From her bereaved companion, Mr. Charles Palmer, we have received the following brief notes of her past history.

Betsey Maria Walbridge was born in Co. bridge, Vt., Sept. 22, 1818. Her mother died when she was about ten years old. In 1838 her father, with a family of seven children, moved to LaPorte Co., Ind., where she was married to Chas. Palmer in 1840. In the fall of 1841 they moved to Marshall Co., where they have lived ever since, and where her death occurred, in Plymouth, Thursday evening, Aug. 25, 1887, after an illness of nineteen days. In early life she united with the Baptist church, but for a number of years past has been a member of the Church of God in Christ Jesus who are looking for the consummation of the promises made to Abraham, the Father of the faithful, in that "glorious restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

Our deceased sister was possessed of a very loving, affectionate, and sympathetic nature—a nature joyfully responsive to every kindly sincere demonstration of true friendship. But human amiability is not God's highest ideal of human perfection. A conformity to the image of his own dear Son is what God has predestinated with regard to all whom he will acknowledge as his children, and as belonging to the heavenly family. Accordingly, while our sister highly prized the holy and solemn outward institutions and ordinances of the gospel, she, as all true Christians should, regarded these as divinely appointed means and helps toward the attainment of Christ-likeness. She was well aware that new creative energies were required to quicken and energize faculties merely moral into a new life of divine activity, beauty and loveliness. This conformity to the divine image, this Christ-likeness, this new life, she sought to attain through the power of God's word of truth, and the operation of the Spirit of his grace. Although we are persuaded that her record is on high, and that her life is hid with Christ in God, still it was with sorrow of heart that we saw her in the casket for the last time, and with sorrow intensified that we saw that casket lowered into the grave. We felt how much we shall miss her in the Bible Class, how much in the worshiping assembly—how much at that sacred table spread with memorial emblems of redeeming grace and dying love. We feel there is a shadow of gloom in our little Chapel Hall. With grief we look upon the empty seat. But we sorrow not as those that have no hope. We believe thy last sleep is that sweet sleep in Jesus from which none ever wake to weep. In a darkened room of that house prepared for all living thou hast found thy chambered rest. In that stilly retreat from all life's cares and sorrows rest, dear sister, rest, till trump of God and arch-angel's voice shall call thee forth to the incorruptibility, immortality, and glory of the life eternal; to wear the fadeless crown, and enter within the pearly gates. Rest till earth's deserts become blooming Paradises, till the thorn, the thistle, and the brier give place to trees of life that shade the crystal river. We, the left and sorrowing ones, will toil on for the loved in heaven a little while longer; we have parted, but to part to meet again. When the parting skies shall reveal our savior we expect to meet thee in the general assembly and church of the first born ones in the Heavenly Jerusalem. Till then adieu, adieu.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer Saturday, August 27th, at 2 p. m. An unusually large number were in attendance, as Sister Palmer was universally loved and esteemed. S. A. CHAPLIN.

Some Food for Thought.

In the early days of the church, Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, successfully exposed the false teachings of the Ebionites, who persistently taught that Jesus was the begotten son of Joseph. And how sad it is that their followers are still with us teaching their God-dishonoring doctrine. The thought has often occurred to me that if Jesus was the begotten son of Joseph, how could he then be heir to the throne of David? Please note the following point:

If you will refer to the first chapter of Matthew you will there discover that Joseph is a descendant of Jechonias the son of Josoin, king of Judah, and concerning whom the Lord has distinctly said: (Jeremiah xxxvi. 30) "Therefore saith the Lord of Jehoiakim, King of Judah, he shall have none to sit upon the throne of David," (ver. 31) "and I will punish him and his seed, and his servants for their iniquity." See also Jeremiah xxii. 30;—"For no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah."

Now, is it not reasonable to conclude that if Jesus is the begotten son of Joseph, would he not also be reckoned as the seed of Jehoiakim, of whom the Lord so clearly affirms, "That no man of his seed shall prosper sitting upon the throne of David;" and being reckoned as the seed of Jehoiakim, would have no claim to the throne of David; and if the position I have taken is correct, does not the doctrine that Jesus is the begotten Son of Joseph undermine the foundation of the Christian's faith and hope?

The Heir of All Things.

How many readers of THE RESTITUTION have availed themselves of the privilege of reading this little work from the well known pen of our beloved sister Carrie Williams?

It is richly deserving of our attention and if we do not need it ourselves the most of us have friends who do. I was particularly interested in her argument on Isa. vii. 14, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel," etc. "We sometimes wonder that so plain a prophesy should need an argument, but the hosts of infidelity have contended for years that the child born of the virgin and named Immanuel is the same as the one born of the prophetess and named Maher-shalal-hash-baz in the eighth chapter.

The author quotes a long extract from somebody, I do not know who—which very fairly represents the infidel argument on this subject, and then proceeds to show that the two children cannot be one and the same. The book also contains historic notes on the Gospels from the pen of Dr. Alexander, and from Thomas H. Horne which gives valuable historical data.

A careful knowledge of this subject should be within the reach of every one who is liable to be assailed with the infidel statement that "the gospels were not written until about three hundred years after the death of Christ." Sceptics wrote this assertion in the face of all history and then coolly quote each other for authority. It is very amusing to see these men decide with a wave of the hand that Eusebius is inauthentic, Josephus interpolated and other histories forgeries, and then with some dignified remark about "better scholarship" quote the statements of some fourth rate infidel on this subject.

The more intelligent of them, to their credit be it said, have too much respect for the ordinary intelligence of humanity to insult it in this way. Many other points in the book are valuable, for instance the chapters on "Whose Son is he?" "Promises to the Fathers," "Promises to David, etc." Enclose a dollar to Carrie Williams, St. Joseph, Mo., and get four copies one for yourself and three for your friends.

Dear Restitution:

Since writing to you in May last, if I forget not, I have received letters from Bro. W. A. Prosser, Scholl's Ferry, Oregon, also letters from sister M. E. Leppo, of Foster, Umatilla Co., Oregon, which were thankfully received as well as others from brethren in this State. Oh what comfort it is to me to get THE RESTITUTION and read a letter from brethren of like faith, to look at the lines they have penned. I cannot speak only for myself, but it is consoling to me if written in the right spirit. Knowing we are but pilgrims here traveling to the bar of God, and there is a prize to the one that wins the race, immortality. When clothed with that life we are promised to sit with Christ upon his throne even as he has overcome, and sat down with his Father on his throne, which will make us a holy priesthood, 1 Peter i. 9; Exodus xix. 6; Rev. iii. 21. If this is the case who are we to officiate with and between whom? The Christ and the mortal nations of the earth. They shall learn righteousness. For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea, Hab. xi. 13 14. But by reading Acts xv. 16, you will find those that have the name of Christ called on them in truth (or as the Scripture has taught) are to be sought after. Also Amos ix. 11. If this is correct why should we not learn patience, for we must enter the kingdom through tribulations. Brethren, can you not see why? If such was not the case our feelings (or minds) could not in the ages be touched by the infirmities of the weak. Yes our High Priest was tempted in all things as we. Would like to hear from some one of our faith on these things pertaining to the kingdom. Yours in the blessed hope, with love to all. J. R. FISK.

Dear Restitution:

I have been exercised much in mind on the subject of the Rights and Privilege of the sisters in the church, meeting when they feel the Spirit filling their hearts. To me it seems to "quench the Spirit" when our hearts are full to keep silent. If God moves upon a brother's heart to speak, will he pass by a sister, and say, be still, keep silence? I have been pondering much on the subject of woman's sphere as to where God would wish to place her. Woman can be (in many ways) superior to man, and women need something to arouse them to a sense of duties we owe ourselves. I have had much feeling always on the subject of Paul's particular sense of placing women in the church. I know the state of the Corinthians in their church turmoil, at one time some boisterous) and yet probably good and useful women workers in the church, forgot themselves and demanded positions. We often see this in our day. Paul loved order, and thus his advice, "Let your women keep silence." I suffer "not a woman to teach." I am a weak sister myself and am at home when I hear others talk, and I keep silence but my heart gets very full and though I enjoy my silence, I wish the right to speak as the oracles of God. I could wish that all churches would give us an opportunity as we do here (at times). I feel that mothers in Israel of long years of study and experience should not keep still and crowd down the immense fulness of God's pure love in the heart, and feel that she must not say a word of good cheer to encourage the inquirer or help the babes in Christ who are living on the milk of the word and need our help. I could not profane the communion or bread and wine if I held not back a helping hand by words of cheer and encouragement, then I think we ought to speak of our progression in the divine life, it is a help to us all. Undoubtedly woman has a sphere and the only difficulty seems to be in defining its limits, or rather setting limits to it, when a woman speaks that she does not usurp authority over a man, Paul is sometimes misunderstood. In his closing letter to the Romans see how warmly he appreciated and commended his fellow-workers, the sisters. "I commend Phœbe our sister (perhaps a deaconess). This Phœbe (her name means moon) she had made the gloomy night of doubt, light as the day spring of promise, silvered the cloud overcasting the murky shadows of despondent man, as she groped the darkpath. If the skies were gemmed with stars she moved among them the queen of the firmament. Paul, Peter, John, may be glorious suns of splendor, but sister Phœbe only the moon shines with a light, moves within an orbit nearer the world, close to humanity, and tenderly out-line them all. Greet Priscilla (means Ancient) an old fashioned sweet freed woman with a gentle touch and low voice, loving the old ways of ancient days; a lovable woman too, for Paul calls her by a fit name, being the diminutive of Prisca, but we will not go back of Paul for he boarded with Pet and her husband, made tents and preached the Gospel. He sends his greeting to her and her husband at Corinth. This is what it should be, Her first. (The saints forbid that we put the man before the woman)," who for my life lay down their own, all the churches of the Gentiles bow down to this woman and her husband, Aquilla (it means eagle), she made a Pure Note of his Eyrie, just the church that their home. Do you suppose that this woman kept silence in that church? The apostle for whose life she had laid down her own, would he have shouted at her "let your women keep silence in the churches?" no by no means, she had influence in that church, and authority as much as a board of trustees. Greet Mary who bestowed much labor on us. We lift our eyes and look down along a vista of history where we get that name, (Mary same as Miriam) across the tossing billows of the Red Sea, minister of the wrath of God, gleams the white bright light of the Shekinah, the roars of the closing waters thunder to the lowering heavens that give back again their angry voices. The fury of the contending waves subsides, the sea smiles contentedly above its dead, we hear the sound of timbrel and the voice of song. Miriam and a daughter of Israel, "Sing to the Lord for he hath triumphed gloriously." Who should sing when Pharaoh's host was overthrown if Miriam must be silent? Mightier than Moses, the helpless infant, was the mother whose mother-love and woman-magnanimity was devising means for preserving his life while his father was doubtless in manlike helplessness or imbecility. Not Moses' brother, no, no. If not in the epistle to the Romans it is in the Pentateuch. There was no injunction against a woman, when I call the wife of Heber the Kenite deliverer of Israel. No man should let your woman keep silence. Resolute with sublime purpose then comes Esther carrying her life before the golden sceptre for her people's sake. Woman bringing their little ones before the Savior (whose mother was a woman) in the face of the disciples, rebuke; he does not censure them for usurping anything over a man neither in that prayer meeting in that upper room, women were there also, a woman washes his feet with tears. Joanna, Susana, Mary, minister to him out of their substance, women last at the cross, first at resurrection. Men are dependant on the nurse while in the cradle, a woman, a handmaiden to a big brother although a sister near.

MRS. J. L.

[We only say here, that, in our own opinion, the Apostle Paul's interdiction was not by any means directed against women's taking part in religious worship such as our sister alludes to above. His reference was to other matters.—ED.]

Report of Meeting.

The meeting held at Deep River as announced in THE RESTITUTION commenced Aug. 26. The attendance was not large of the brethren, but outside attendance was good and much interested. Bro. Myers and the writer did the preaching. The subjects treated were the kingdom of God. The Rest. The mission of Jesus, and condition of man in death.

The Iowa Conference met on Saturday at 3 o'clock, called to order by G. R. Chown, President. The minutes of last Conference were read and approved, when we adjourned to meet at 6 o'clock p. m., Aug. 26. Met as per adjournment. Election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows, G. R. Chown, Pres. A. J. Eychaner, Sec. A. Hipsher, Treas. The following Resolution was then passed, That the Board of Directors of the Conference heretofore elected be discontinued and the business be done by the Pres. Sec. and Treas., and that all articles conflicting with this resolution be hereby repealed. The minutes of this meeting were then ordered sent to THE RESTITUTION for publication. Adjourned to meet at call of Pres. and Sec.

While here we had an invitation to speak on temperance from the W. C. T. U., to the Band of Hope, of Deep River, which we accepted, and Bro. Myers and myself addressed a crowd of boys and girls on the issues of the day. Bro. Myers remains to continue our meetings. A. J. EYCHANER, Sec.

HEREDITY AND TEMPERANCE. No. 1.

Our ultimate design is to bring the facts and the law of heredity to bear on temperance, or on the consequences of intemperance; but for the present let us endeavor to understand the import of heredity, and the influence it exercises in the world of life, to which man, of course, belongs. What a man leaves the members of his family, who were his heirs, comes into their possession as his will or the law of the land happens to determine. To assist apprehension, we may venture to style that heredity in respect of money, goods and real estate. From such a transaction the scientific term heredity (Latin: heres, an heir) takes its origin, and relates to facts having an intimate and inevitable relationship to life, health, bodily organization, and mental qualities. In a general way we are all conversant with the action of the law and the principle described by the new term, which of late has come into popular favor. The law can be seen operating in all the races of living creatures on the globe. Swallows produce swallows, elephants produce elephants, horses produce horses, and man produces and so continues his kind. The same is true of grasses, flowers, trees and grains. There is no uncertainty as to the definite continuance of a given species of animal or grain-bearing plant. Parents, in a word, reproduce themselves—make a new link in their special chain of being, so that each race or line is continued when the parent-tree, or the parent-quadruped or the parent man, has mouldered into dust.

The same mysterious force operates in producing color, and specialties of form and features. It creates also distinguishing marks of difference in the human family, for example, between the Briton and the African, the Japanese and the Hindu, the native Australian, and the copper-hued tribes in our own far west. Each race is thus prolonged in its offspring from year to year and from age to age. Dr. W. C. Edwards, in his work on "The Physical Characters of Races," published at Paris in 1829, gives an admirable illustration of the point we have under notice. "Jews in all ages," he writes, "resemble each other, and differ from people among whom they live."..... "At distant periods, they had the same external characters. In the Last Supper of Leonardo da Vinci, this painter, who was an excellent naturalist and close observer, has painted faces which might be portraits of living Jews. This was 300 years ago; but we have evidences that 2,000 years ago the Jews had the same characters," or more exactly, physical characteristics.

While the variety of mental feelings and faculties are in ordinary circumstances transmitted from parent to offspring in varying proportion, sometimes qualities conspicuous in one of the parents, or it may be in both, are handed down in birth as conspicuously to the children. Thus mechanical ability, musical talent, humor, thought-power, imagination, or mathematical skill, re-appear, and indeed often re-appear in descendants, perchance along a series of generations. This becomes almost a certainty when both parents have been more or less signally endowed. But a child may resemble that one of his parents who happens to be deficient, say in musical or constructive skill, in which the other remarkably excelled, which would amply explain an obvious difference in the matter of endowment between it and its more gifted father or mother. The same holds true of all other attributes or functions of the human mind. Benevolence re-appears in a child, so does greed, and obstinacy, and reverence, and warm-heartedness, and conscience, and vanity, and pride, and so does integrity, and nobleness of character. But as both parents always differ from each other, sometimes very broadly, the child may take more from the one or the other, it may be as a deficiency, or as a shining excellence.

There is not merely the transmission of the essential or normal properties of the mind-talents and emotions, but there is such a thing in the animal life as the transmission of acquired qualities, or parental attainments, to the offspring, becoming at length what may be pronounced instinctive hereditary properties. The property of setting and pointing, for instance, in certain hunting dogs has really been imparted to them by skillful training, till at length they have become a part of their nature and an addition to the original intelligence of their class. An informed English writer, speaking of the painter has this: He "is disciplined in this country, into staunchness; and what is most singular, this quantity is, in a great degree, inherited by his puppy, who may be seen earnestly staring at swallows or pigeons in a farm yard." We see the same law, or something very like it, operating in the physical improvement of certain domestic animals, and even in the quality of fruits, and flowers and cereals. The antecedent being transmits improved qualities to its descendant, be it in the animal or vegetable kingdom. Animals are thus improved in form, in quality of tissue, in aptness for control, and in disposition. So on the other hand, by neglect, poverty of diet, and improper methods of originating progeny, races of animals can be deprived of their superindowed qualities and placed on a level far below the point to which they had been artificially raised.

But there is another fact of immense importance in the animal region of nature, and especially in the human department thereof, namely, diseases, or tendencies to disease, are transmitted to offspring also. Some maladies in such a classification rise to an alarming pre-eminence, frequently as they develop themselves entailing acute suffering and premature death, in spite of all the nostrums that quacks have invented for their cure. Among them are to be named consumption, scrofula, cancer, insanity, rheumatism, and gout, which latter a humorous writer pronounces "a most unjust disease. The father has had all the fun, and the son catches most of the pain." Even blindness and deafness and dumbness are known sometimes to be hereditary, and involve those afflicted with them in sorrows manifold, from which there is no escape. These and peculiarities go down from generation to generation, and are all the result of violating the organic laws, which operate benignly when they are wisely obeyed, but as certainly inflict misery and often early dissolution on those who run counter to their unalterable appointments.

From this rapid survey of admitted facts, it must be apparent that heredity is a mighty factor in racial and social problems and conditions. As a thoughtful writer has said: "This law shows how the ancestral life lives in the descendant, how it moulds form and feature, and weaves itself into nerve, fibre, and brain tissue, and into the finer fabric of the soul." As a factor it is unfortunately ignored in the prolongation of the human species, and as a result untold miseries descend upon families and generations because its rigor and requirements are so commonly overlooked.—W. G. Moneriff.

The Annual State Conference of the Church of God of Michigan will meet at Watson, Allegan Co., Thursday, Sept. 29, 1887, and last over the following Sunday (the Lord willing). Able speakers will be with us from abroad. We are hoping to have a general rally of God's people press in and try, if possible, to beat the record of the June conference, for if we are doing our duty we are growing in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Sacrifice, if necessary, that ye may be with us. We earnestly hope and expect all who are able will come and come with hearts full of love, souls full of prayer and lips ready to speak forth the mighty songs of deliverance through the Almighty God, as good old David of old, and especially those chosen on the different committees, as we have considerable important business to attend to.

Those coming from the north will leave Grand Rapids at 11:45 a. m., change cars at Monteith, reaching Fisk's Station at 2:30 p. m., where they will find welcome friends to meet them. Those coming from the south step off at Monteith, where the brethren will meet them Thursday and Friday at the three o'clock trains.

To shorten time with our business there have been committees chosen previous to meeting that they might be better prepared for duty.

Finance committee: Jacob Lemon, W. W. Jameson, Clark West, John Grant.

Committee on the best mode of evangelizing and doing missionary work: W. B. Woodward, Frank Bennett, Newton Pike, Martha Pike, Mrs. Jacob Lemon.

Committee on National Conference: Noah Howser, Clark West, Newton Pike, Mary Woodward.

Committee on Bible readings: W. W. Jameson, Calvin Winchester, Mary Smith, Essie Anderson, W. B. Woodward.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jan" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "8" and reads "Jan8" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1888. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January, "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881. "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

O ANGELS, SING FOR ME.

Of him my grief-fruit soul would speak.—
The Lamb of Calvary;—
But harp is broke, and I am weak;
O, angels, sing for me!

From hands and feet, from head and heart,
The crimson streams I see;
The nails, the thorns, the keen spear-dart.—
O, angels, chant for me!

Attune the trembling chords you string
To sorrow's tenderest key;
The agonies of Christ you sing
If you shall sing for me!

"'Tis finished!" Hear the heart-rent cry
Come from that blood-stained tree;
Last Mother-love's soul-killing sigh;
Then tune grief's plaint for me!

From eyes that watch that stone closed tomb
How bitter tears stream free;—
The Lord of life is in that gloom;—
O, angels, mourn for me!

O soul that love without a bo'som —
Wail like the mourning sea!—
My broken lute can give no sound;
O, angels, swan for me!

The Young Preacher,—and How We Felt on Returning Home From Hearing him preach, last Lord's-Day, Aug. 21, During his Vacation.

Daughter began singing snatches of the hymn—"Looking off unto Jesus," —which so inspired my heart with the desire to get the books and sing the whole hymn that I called the family together and we enjoyed one of the richest seasons before the Lord; and all so unexpected. We not only sang, but we prayed and praised and felt truly that we had had a second blessing after the thrilling discourse from the text "Looking unto Jesus," Heb. xii. 2, from the young Timothy which the Lord has raised up among us; and now the tide seems to carry me on to tell the story of his mother's conversion.

This will take us back to a scene of twenty-three years ago before our young friend saw the light.

His father, a man of intelligence and influence, living about twelve miles from us, on hearing of the meetings in highways and hedges became interested, and sent a request that we hold meetings in his neighborhood. We responded, and met with a warm reception from himself and wife, a lady of marked sincerity and comeliness of person, and also from their large family of interesting sons and daughters who shared their parents' cordial spirit. Although none of the family professed religion yet they all seemed concerned for our mission-work and had procured the use of a large, new, and nicely painted white school-house in the vicinity for the meetings which we continued for a number of months.

Our "host" became very much interested in Bible research. We also had a supply of Bibles from the "American Bible Society," from which we furnished the children, and the family read with us in worship. Thus things moved on until one pleasant morning in May, 1864, just as I had finished an epistolary chat with distant friends, and prepared a package of good reading for our colored friends in Rochester, N. Y., a carriage drove up, and who should alight but this our distant friend, with his wife, whom I did not at first recognize so greatly had she changed in the few weeks since we last saw her. A severe cough, night sweats, loss of appetite, and voice, with general prostration had rendered her case so alarming that she summoned her little remaining strength and wished to be brought to our house as a last resort, as her husband said as he led her in "I have brought up my wife that you may do her good both soul and body."

We referred him to the Great Physician. In the first leisure moments I sought the Lord with all my heart to take the case into his own hands and to accomplish all his will in her coming, and to suffer her to remain a few days at least. This prayer was answered; for, after a careful examination of her lungs had revealed to her their critical state, she consented to remain; and her husband bade us adieu just as the first drops of what proved to be a heavy shower began to fall—so soon did the Lord let us see his hand in her tarry.

On Saturday, the third day after her arrival, she pressed me to know husband's true mind, as physician, in her case; which was, that for her he had no faith in medicine. If the Lord did not help he saw none for her. Then I added my own conviction—that if she would surrender herself without reserve to God he would delight to make manifest to her his loving heart in her restoration to perfect health.

In the afternoon I felt that God was working in her heart with power, for she remained by herself and did not, as usual, come out where I was obliged to be. Having finished preparation for the Lord's day, I went to seek her. Found her in my room, before my little rocking-chair in tears before the Lord. Joined her. Now the promises of God came in freshness to my mind in her behalf. Now it was that she opened her heart saying—"I came in here and threw myself before the Lord with this resolve—

If it be his will I will not rise until I feel that I am his. I have my desire, I am blessed."

At this time she also vowed a vow unto the Lord, that if he would spare her life and give her health again, she would consecrate it all to him; and train up her family for him.

We rose up praising God while she continued—"I want to be baptized before I go home. Will not brother Willard baptize me? I do not wish to wait for Elder Hastings. I may not live to see him come. I am so weak I feel I may drop away any time, even in my chair; and I wish to do all."

Husband assured her of his willingness to assist her, and, in the name of the Lord, bade her go forward. She passed a poor night, having several sinking-spells in which she almost despaired of seeing the morning; but her resolve to obey God continued firm. At ten o'clock in the morning we set out for the lake at Old Hammonton, N. J., two and a half miles distant. When she heard the distance, she was almost in despair but she took courage. The place was one of the most commodious and lovely for an invalid, a bathing house on its margin, in a beautiful park of native trees spread with a carpet of nature's own green. After the singing of that beautiful hymn—"Jesus I my cross have taken," we prayed; at the close of which she summoned all her strength, Yes, she laid hold on God's strength and broke forth in a most impassioned prayer that God would now manifest his power, and cleanse her inside and out, and heal her both soul and body. To the little company of devout souls kneeling about her the conviction was strong that that prayer had entered into the ears of the "Lord of Sabaoth" and that she would live to witness its answer. As she came up out of the water she laid her hand upon her breast saying, "I feel strengthened here." A shout of praise went up from the shore as we received her; and, after the prayer for her entire sanctification through the Holy Ghost and practice of the truth she, in quite an audible voice exclaimed—"O, I cannot tell you how much better I feel."

She really enjoyed her homeward ride, remarking with interest upon passing objects; such a contrast from her going.

At four o'clock in the afternoon, in our hall with about twenty of the dear saints, we celebrated the Lord's Supper. "And glory crowned the mercy seat."

I was lifted up in the Spirit and caused to glorify God that we were made the instruments to open the way of salvation to a fainting dying child of Adam, to make her escape from the city of destruction to the city of God; and prayed that this house might still be made a Bethesda to all such. She, too, praised God in the fullness of her soul; and we rejoiced together for what he had done for her.

In the evening the hall was well filled and after the sermon precious testimonies were given for God; and this feeble sister who, by the blessing of God, had not lain down during the day, now added her testimony and was really a well woman. She slept all night without waking, was bright and cheerful in the morning, conversed with ease, read with us in worship, and prayed with voice sufficient to be heard by all in the room.

With the Psalmist we exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes;" and she lives to this day praising God for his healing power, and witnessing to all that,—"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

In a few years from this we had the happiness of witnessing upon the banks of our most noble river—The Delaware—in the soft twilight of a spring evening the baptism of her oldest daughter.

Since that time two sons and two daughters have made profession of his name. The elder one of these two sons is our "Young Timothy" and was the first child given his mother after her surrender to God.

The father has gone the way of all the earth. And as he lay in his casket I could but remark to his eldest daughter, whose filial devotion was unremitting to the very last act, He has the head of a senator.

Now my heart goes out to the Editor of this paper who for many years was over us in the Lord, and admonished us; whom we esteemed very highly in love for his works' sake, and whose sphere has been enlarged to feed thousands of the "flock of God" with whom, as with himself let me say—"Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen."

E. S. WILLARD.

Dear Restitution:

Let me say to the many brethren and sisters that I am at home again, for which I feel truly thankful to my Heavenly Father. I left home on the 25th day of May. Got on board Nahum's Chariots at Parsons, Kan., and landed at Macy, Ind., on the 28th. Found all well. Mother seems well and hearty for her age, 85 last February. Found the brethren in good spirits at that place. Preached for them over the fifth Sunday to a house well filled, and all seemed interested there. On the first Sunday in June I had an appointment at Roll, in Blackford Co.—a new place to me. There I found J. T. Brotherton at Hartford City, waiting at the train to convey me to Roll. He took me to the hotel and here the outward man had to be fed, which was done very satisfactorily to me at least. Then for Roll on a lumber wagon, a distance of eight miles. At Roll we met a part of the strange brethren and friends so far as their names are concerned. They are still strange, but I think I will recognize them when we shall meet in the kingdom. This much I can say, I never was treated any better in any place than I was there, and I expected to remember the names but have forgotten nearly all. We had a good meeting. All seemed to be glad that they were alive and at the meeting. Spoke only three time. Once on the downfall of the Adamic man, then on the plan of the ages or restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all God's holy prophets. Acts iii. 19–23. On account of poor health and threatening rain I staid with Brother and Sister Brotherton all the time and therefore formed only a slight acquaintance at that place. I hope and trust that sometime in the future there may a way be opened so we will become better acquainted.

As I had left an appointment near our late deceased Brother Samuel Anderson's for Monday night, I had to say farewell to the brethren and leave for Bunker Hill to fill my appointments Monday and Tuesday night. The Progressive Dunkards opened up their church house and gave me a large congregation to preach to. Brother and Sister Anderson could not attend meeting. Preached two discourses, one on the creation of man, his trial and downfall, and the other on the restitution of all things; that God had been and now is still taking or selecting a bride to help Christ in the restitution or in the blessing of all nations. Some seemed to think that looked very reasonable. I left them with the promise that if I ever should come to Indiana again that I would give them a call. I believe that would be a good place for an evangelist to go, that is, if he is not bound to a creed, so that he can preach the gospel that was preached to Abraham, saying, "in thee shall all the nations be blessed." I staid all night with our beloved Brother and Sister Anderson as he was then lying on his last sick bed. Looked upon him on Wednesday morning for the last time in this mortal life. Bid him my last farewell and started for Macy; spoke that evening at Rabbit's Glory school house to a well-filled house.

On Thursday went to old Antioch Church to attend what the brethren call conference. There I met a great many old soldiers, and a great many young in the cause; Brother Israel Roberts, the Brother Hallsbacks and their families, Brother Underwood and family, Brother Thompson, our beloved brother, the Editor, R. S. Dwiggins, Brother Woodward and others. To make a long story short, we had a good time for about three days, lots of good singing and praying and exhortations. Very little preaching done. What was done seemed more like exhortations to the church, Brothers R. S. Dwiggins and Woodward doing it all. It was all right to me as I was glad to hear their noble exhortations, but I should like to have heard Bro. Hook and Bro. Jones speak some; as I believe from their conversation that they believe in the blessing of all nations.

To say all that can be said we had a grand old fashioned social meeting, but the conference part was more like a legislative body than the old fashioned conferences that I used to attend in Indiana and Kansas. But it may be that it is all right; God only knows, I don't. When there is anything done outside of the Bible I always go slow as I do want to do right, or at least want to please my Heavenly Father. Well, the parting song was sung on Monday night, "When Jesus shall come to reward his servants." All sang with spirit, and parted no more to meet till Jesus comes, or at least some of us will never meet till Jesus comes. Monday I went to Macy and stayed there three more nights and preached for them. This is where our young brother, L. E. Conner lives. He is zealous and will make a good worker some day in the cause if he should keep his health and strength.

On Thursday evening bade them farewell at Macy, staid with mother one more night, Friday morning bade her farewell and started for Shoals, Martin Co., Ind., where Brother and Sister Stuart live, whom I baptized in Crawford Co., Kan. Two more zealous and devoted Christians you will never meet, all in the faith of Abraham and heirs of the promise. They believe strongly in the word and oath God has made to Abraham, saying, "in thee shall all nations be blessed." There I staid over two Sundays, had two old-fashioned basket meetings in the grove and a good time generally. The Christian or Campbellite brethren opened up their church house for us and came out themselves to hear and also to help us sing.

On the night of the 20th of June our meeting closed. One came out and on Tuesday morning we met at the water to bury this one and the result was that two more came out. There we saw our brother, Alvin Stuart, bury three souls by baptism into the all-saving name of Jesus the Christ of the Bible. Two were daughters of our beloved Brother and Sister McDonald. They had two daughters that had been buried by baptism before, but these two have gone to their resting places, awaiting the call of the Master who is the resurrection and the life. The Lord gave them two more in place of the two that have died, and one son-in-law. My prayer to God is that they may do as their sisters did, continue faithful till death or till Jesus comes. A more faithful church can not be found. They are all poor so far as this world is concerned, but rich in faith and heirs of the promised kingdom. They have come to this conclusion, that preacher's women wear clothing and so do preachers likewise, and that the iron horse must be fed or he will get stubborn and wont let you ride; and the preacher must eat too, as well as they themselves. Oh, if they were rich, they would move things, unless they should do like the rich generally. If you want to preach a whole gospel go to the poor.

Well, we bade them farewell and started for Rich Hill, Mo., where our old Brother John Willis lives. Got off the train at Rockdale, Mo., where I met Brother Robbins, a brother-in-law of John Willis. Went twelve miles by means of a spring wagon. Arriving at Brother Robbins we took refreshment and a good night's rest. Thursday evening began meeting at what is called Lee's school house, to continue over Sunday. Had a good time and a good turnout all through the meeting. On the first Sunday I was at that school house bid them farewell and on Monday started for Fort Scott. The brethren at this place remembered my necessities as they also did at Roll. They did well at both of these places. At Macy they throwed in their mites, and so at conference also. At the school house at Brother Willis' one sister gave me $4.00, so that in all I was only out $8.60 when I landed home. I feel truly thankful to the brethren and sisters and hope and pray that they may be rewarded when Jesus comes.

To return to my trip, I landed at Fort Scott at a little after midnight, July 4th, at the home of Brother and Sister Herron. On the 5th day of July I buried by baptism a daughter of Brother Herron in the river in the town of Fort Scott, in the presence of quite a number of ladies. It seemed something new to the people of Fort Scott. Brother Heron said that I should say to the brethren that any one coming through Fort Scott, to give him a call, as his house is ever open to Jesus and his friends. On the 6th of July I started for home where I found all well. I feel thankful to my Heavenly Father that all was well. My health is not improved very much as yet, and I feel as though I had made my last trip to Indiana. But the good Lord knows how that is, let his will be done. Finally, my dear brethren, be of good cheer, be of one mind, live in peace and the God of love and peace be with you all is my prayer for Christ's sake. Amen. Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

JOHN FOORE.

[Note. Our conferences are not legislative bodies in the remotest sense of the term. Each and every church is a perfectly independent organization in no way under the control or dictation of any other church whatever. Some things can be done by co-operation that cannot be done in any other way. For instance, there is need of an evangelist, or evangelists, to spread the glad tidings of the grace of God. No one of our little churches alone and by itself can raise a sufficient amount to sustain a man in the field; hence we combine to accomplish this purpose. Brother Foore has doubtless found out that the good wish, "God bless you," uttered ever so heartily, will not feed or clothe the preacher's family or supply his own personal wants. True, we emphatically counsel our churches to conform to the Bible requirements in their organization, and to select both deacons and elders. To speak plainly we have sufficiently seen the outcome of loose-jointed disorganization.

Furthermore, the gospel, authorized to be preached by Christ's commission, is to be preached in all the world to take out a people for God's name. Acts xv. 1–16. When this shall have been accomplished, our Lord will return—as the same connection of Scripture shows—and rebuild the fallen tabernacle of David that "the residue of men might call on the name of the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called saith the Lord, who doeth all these things."

Rev. xvi, 6, directs our attention to the ministry that will proclaim this (elsewhere, not everlasting) "gospel of the age to every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue." Let us distinguish the times. Individuals out of nations, kindreds, etc., are converted in this age to share with our Lord in future royalties. The conversion of whole nations, or of the world belongs to the next age. Sabbatarians have been making very clumsy work of Rev. xiv. 6–11. While we read "Millennial Dawn" with quite a degree of pleasure, still, in preaching we confine ourself to the gospel of this new passing age, and leave the gospel of that coming age to its "angel" or appropriate messenger. In love.—ED. RESTITUTION.

Individual Preparation.

Here is importance greater than any other matter to each one. How oft are we led in ways seeming to our own ideas adverse to the course of service to God. But he knows us as we do not. We plan and we are disappointed at the result, although we planned in the fear of God. Blame is not here on our part. We acted conscientiously and sought divine guidance. This guidance is granted, but the experience is unlike our expectation. Long years spent in the fear of God turn up much, far too much to be told in few words. "To me human life is a mystery," remarked a man in my hearing. It is indeed a mystery to the reflective mind unenlightened by the Holy Scriptures. Why we live, is a puzzling query to such. Ethan, the Ezrahite (Psalm lxxxix. 47), seemed perplexed in his thoughts about mankind as he pondered matters concerning Israel.

And not the writer only, but I opine many, very many others, who have seen mature years, not to say old age, have at times had troublous thoughts about existence. What is its purpose? The Bible tells us it is ultimate and eternal good. Look anywhere but in the Bible and the thoughtful mind is bewildered about the future of the race. To the query once put in the presence of intelligent men, Will the earth ever become incapable of sustaining its population? a New York citizen of superior attainments remarked: "There will always be a safety valve, war or somewhat else will come to sweep off the surplus;" a dread lookout indeed at the future! Others, perhaps, think that infanticide, fratricide, etc., must be resorted to. Relief, however, we find only in Revelation. Thank God for the determined issue! A new creation. "No more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

To attain to this immortal state is, or certainly should be, the chief concern of each one. Possession of tenets, sound though they may be, will, of themselves alone be unavailing. Personal knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ is life eternal. John xvii. 3. Plain words; woe to any who would weaken them! Again, John xiv. 23, "If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and he will come unto him, and make our abode with him." What an assurance! Disregarding Christ's words is a proof of lack of godliness, and would we appear without shame before him we must prove ourselves by his commandments. Faithfulness with ourselves is true wisdom. Let us not shun self-examination. If we are afraid of looking directly at our Lord's commands we cannot be true lovers of the Master. His eyes are as a flaming fire. He searcheth the reins and hearts; let us so be that we can bear his scrutiny. With earnest sincerity let us pray with the Psalmist, cxxxix. 23, 24, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way (way of pain, or grief, Heb. margin) in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

"Every man (1 John iii. 3) that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Are we thus pure? Here is a personal matter, and it is our wisdom to satisfy ourselves about it. Are we thus like our Lord? "Examine and prove yourselves."

A Disregarded Beatitude.

Perhaps no other one of the beatitudes of Christ is so overlooked and so disregarded as that which he pronounced among the peacemakers. Who ever heard a sermon on it? How many strive to get its benediction? Surely no Christian duty is more neglected than that of peacemaking. There are many people who are really strife-makers, rather than peacemakers. They do not seek to heal estrangements between others, to prevent quarrels and contentions, and to bring together those who have been divided or alienated. Their whole influence goes toward widening breaches, intensifying bitterness, and exciting anger and hatred. When they meet a man who speaks qualifiedly of another, they take the opportunity to emphasize the qualification, thus confirming the man's doubt or suspicion concerning his neighbor. When they find a rankling in one man's mind a bitter feeling against another, they do not try, in a brotherly, generous way, to remove the feeling, but manage to deepen and intensify the bitterness. The true peacemakers are few, even in Christian society. Is it not time that we should get our Lord's beatitude down from the shelf and brush the dust from it, and try to win its benediction?

The Bible.

How comes it that this little volume, composed by humble men in a rude age, when art and science were but in their childhood, has exerted more influence on the human mind and on the social system than all other books put together? Whence comes it that this book has achieved such marvelous changes in the opinions of mankind—has banished idol-worship—raised the standard of public morality—created for families that blessed thing, a Christian home—and caused its other triumph by causing benevolent institutions, open and expansive, to spring up as with the wand of enchantment? What sort of a book is this, that even the wind and waves of human passion obey it? What other engine of social improvement has operated so long, and lost none of its virtue? Since it appeared, many boasted plans of amelioration have been tried, and failed—many codes of jurisprudence have arisen and run their course and expired. Empire after empire has been launched on the tide of time, and gone down and expired. But this book is still going about doing good—leavening society with its holy principles—cheering the sorrowful with its consolation—strengthening the tempted—encouraging the patient, calming the troubled spirit and soothing the pillow of death. Can such a book be the offspring of human genius? Does not the vastness of its effects demonstrate the excellency of the power of God?—Dr. McCulloch.

Seed-Time.

There is a time for the sowing of seed. No matter how good the seed nor how fertile the soil, if the seed is not sown in the proper season, the desired crop will not be obtained. A man who should plant his garden in midsummer could not expect to gather the fruits of his toil as he would if he had done his work equally well in the proper season. God gives summer and winter, seed-time and harvest. The seed-time must be improved, or the time of the harvest will bring no fruits.

There is a seed-time in life. In infancy, in childhood, and in youth, good seed may be sown within the heart, which shall produce a harvest blessing in this world, and fruit unto life eternal in the world to come. Minds may be stored with knowledge, hearts filled with pure thoughts; and righteous principles and precious truths may be implanted in the soul, which shall make the whole life luminous and fragrant. And if this opportunity is neglected until the mind is preoccupied and habits are formed, we cannot expect the results that might have been secured by timely and persistent endeavor.

Let those who desire a harvest of blessing improve the seed-time, sow beside all waters, and their toil and patience shall be rewarded by precious fruits in the harvest day.

Obituary.

Mrs. Harriett Covey, widow of Lucius Covey, died at Rhinelander, Wis., July 31, 1887, in the 74th year of her age.

Deceased was born July 2, 1814, in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. About thirty years ago, she, with her husband and family, moved to Canada, where they resided until 1864, when they moved to Wisconsin. In 1871 she was left a widow by the death of her husband, since which time she has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. H. J. Davis, at Omro, Wisconsin, until a few weeks ago when she came with them to Rhinelander. She leaves two daughters and three sons to mourn her absence. In childhood she gave her heart to Christ, since which time she has lived a life wholly devoted to his cause. Ever forgetful of self, she was constantly thoughtful of the welfare and comfort of others; and her patient, gentle ways made a lasting impression on all who knew her. Those who knew her best were able to say: "We never heard her speak a quick nor impatient word." Her funeral was held at the residence of her son, C. C. Covey in Omro, Rev. I. S. Eldridge officiating. She was laid to rest by the side of her husband in Rushford cemetery. "He giveth his beloved sleep."

Indiana State Fair.

The experience of thirty-four years will be brought to bear by the management in their efforts to excel in every particular with the coming State Fair, commencing September 19th, being one week earlier than usual.

They realize the importance of sustaining their reputation which has become national in its character, having been the pioneers by introducing the principal features of the Model Fair of this day and age. This is no vain boast, as facts will prove, and letters of inquiry from distant States and Territories show that the Indiana State Fair is a credit to the State.

It was the first to offer premiums without limit "open to the world." The first State Association to own its Fair ground and other property. The first to adopt the system of paying awarding committees. The first to create the Superintendent of each department from the members of the Board. The first to abolish the sale of Liquor on the Fair ground. The first to abolish the offering of premiums on machinery without actual tests. The first to (create and) erect a large Exposition building in connection with the State Fair, and last but not least the first to organize a Woman's Association to take charge of that part of the Fair, which has proved an immense success.

The Board has distributed over a quarter of a million dollars in premiums, and has about $200,000 in Fair ground property. They have this season invested $18,000 in improvements and extension of the Fair grounds. The main building has been re-roofed and remodeled, with a thorough painting inside and out and the grounds put in complete order.

At present the indications are that some of the exhibitors in their delay of applications for space and stalls and pens, "are going to get left."

President Cleveland is confidently expected to be present.

SPECIAL PREMIUMS OFFERED.

The American Jersey Cattle Club offer in competition at the Indiana State Fair $100 for the best herd of registered Jersey cattle, consisting of one bull and four females.

The Holstein-Friesian Association of America offer as a special premium for Holstein-Friesian cattle $100 to add to the first premium of $150, for the best milk breeds in competition.

The American Clydesdale Association offer a silver medal to the owner of the best recorded Clydesdale stallion, also same for best recorded Clydesdale mare bred in Indiana on exhibition.

The American Percheron Horse Breeders' Association offer a gold medal, to be awarded for the best Percheron bred in Indiana.

The Oxford Down Breeders' Association offer a silver medal for the best breeding pen of six recorded Oxford Down Sheep owned in Indiana. Pen to consist of one ram and five ewes, any age.

The Lake Erie & Western R. R. have placed on sale at all coupon stations mileage tickets at $20 each, good for one year.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME.

This do in remembrance of me,
The Savior in tenderness said,
My body here broken for you,
Now take as you take of this bread.
O Savior, with wonder and grief,
Thy body here broken we see;
And though of all sinners the chief,
We eat in remembrance of thee.

This do in remembrance of me,
Oh take ye and drink of this cup;
It tells of my blood freely shed,
When high on the cross lifted up.
O Savior, we see thy blood spilled,
Thy thirst for our sake on the tree;
The cup with thy blessing so filled,
We drink in remembrance of thee.

This do in remembrance of me.
Be this the sure pledge of my love,
The bond of sweet fellowship here,
The seal of a sweeter above.
O Savior, this feast thou hast spread,
Our hallowed communion shall be;
And one, as we eat of one bread,
We love in remembrance of thee.

This do in remembrance of me.
Until I in glory return,
Fulfilling the prayer of all saints,
Who for my appearing do yearn.
O Savior, that glory's foreplann,
Illuming thy cross we can see;
And seeking its fullness supreme,
We live in remembrance of thee.

Some Things that will Take Place at the Lord's Coming.

The living saints on the earth when the Lord appears in the clouds, who will be accounted worthy to escape the judgments, will be those who are living in a state of constant watchfulness and prayer, or a state of earnest longing for his appearing and to be with him where he is. These will be preserved from "the hour of trial," who thus keep the word of the Lord and live in close fellowship with him.

And those highly favored ones will be with him at his next manifestation when he descends to Mount Zion to call around him another chosen band. The first manifestation of the Parousia will be only to the elect, the holy nation, those who are looking and waiting for him. But when he comes with these and stands on the Mount Zion, he is surrounded with another company, virgins, the gathering of the first fruits purchased from among men, numbering a hundred and forty and four thousand. Rev. xiv. 1–5. After this the harvest of the earth will be gathered; (verses 14, 16) all under the one coming, but at different stages of that coming.

In Rev. x. 7, we read, "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he is about to sound, then is finished the mystery of God, according to the good tidings which he declared to his servants the prophets." That part of the Divine plan respecting the ages which was not previously made known, except in the broad outlines, will then be manifested; and God's wonderful design in raising up a people for his name, who with Christ should form the promised seed, the Lord's anointed, will then be accomplished. The body of Christ, consisting of many members; the spiritual house, with Christ the chief corner-stone, will then be completed. Wonderful blessings for the nations will follow that stupendous work, for which all the previous dispensations have been a preparation. A work so vast, wrought at such infinite expense, and in its preparatory steps covering a period of six thousand years, must be worthy—will be seen to be worthy—of the wisdom and goodness of Jehovah.

In the day when the Lord shall come, special deliverance is given to his people, the Jewish nation; for though they have been long scattered and punished for their rebellion, yet God's relationship to them, made by solemn covenant, still continues. It is after long centuries of chastisement that salvation comes to them. Their hardness of heart and unbelief having yielded to the claims of the Messiah, and giving evidence of a sincere change of mind, of deep contrition and humility, and earnest seeking after the Divine favor, they are again restored. And it will be in place to fully establish this point by numerous quotations from Scripture, because this point is so strongly questioned by some writers. That it should be questioned by any, is matter of surprise, since no truth is more plainly set forth than this. But prejudice, when once conceived against any revealed truth, and for a while fostered, seems deaf alike to argument and Scripture. "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and will not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song; and he is become my salvation." "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will he appoint for walls and bulwarks." "And there shall be stability in thy times, abundance of salvation, wisdom and knowledge: the fear of the Lord is his treasure." "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, with the recompense of God; he will come and save you." "But Israel shall be saved by the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end." "And all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Savior, and thy Redeemer, the mighty one of Jacob." Isa. xii. 2; xxv. 9; xxvi. 1; xxxiii. 6; xxxv. 4; xlv. 17; xlix. 26. "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." Jer. xxiii. 6; xxx. 7.

Olshausen says, "The coming of Christ (i. e. his parousia) is therefore to be conceived as coincident with the times of refreshing, and his sojourn in the heavenly world closes with his return to the earth for the completion of his work." And referring to Acts iii. 19–21, it is correctly argued by Judge Jones "that the apostle urges the Jews, as a people, to repentance and conversion. It is implied that until this is done, such promised times cannot be set up, as predicted, without it."

At his second Advent and the restoration of the kingdom the Son of Man will meet with a wonderful reception and a glad and joyous welcome from redeemed Israel. A reference to this is made in several passages. In Micah ii. 14, we read, "The breaker is gone up before them: they have broken forth and passed on to the gate, and are gone out thereat: and their king is passed on before them, and the Lord at the head of them." In Zeph. iii. 14–17, we have a prediction of wonderful rejoicing at this Advent. "Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel: be glad and rejoice with all thy heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: The king of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not fear evil any more. In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: O Zion, let not thine hands be slack. The Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, a mighty one who will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy, he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing." Then in Zech. ii. 10–12, we have another prediction in reference to the Advent which shows that there will be great rejoicing. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall join themselves to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah as his portion in the holy land, and shall yet choose Jerusalem." The Savior also foretells the reception he will have in that day, when the house of David, now desolate, shall then be occupied. "For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 39.

SILAS HENN.

ROYAL EGYPTIAN RELICS.

In the place of honor at Manchester—that is to say, on the dais immediately under the dome in the centre of the exhibition building—stands an Egyptian looking-glass case containing a group of relics described in the catalogue as "the throne, signet, draughtboard, and draughtmen of Queen Hatasus, B. C. 1600." The date is sufficiently startling, but, due allowance being made for chronological difficulties, it is no doubt fairly correct. As for the contents of the case, whether as regards their extreme antiquity or their historical associations it is not too much to say that they are the most remarkable objects in the exhibition. The throne is unique. Specimens of the ancient Egyptian stools and chairs, some very beautifully inlaid with marqueterie of ivory and various woods, may be seen in several European museums, but in none do we find a Pharaonic throne plated with gold and silver, and adorned with the symbolisms of Egyptian sovereignty. It is not, of course, absolutely intact. The seat and back (which may have been made of plaited palm-fiber or bands of leather) have perished; but a leopard skin hides the necessary restoration of these parts, and all that remains of the original piece of furniture is magnificent. The wood is very hard and heavy and of a rich dark color resembling rosewood. The four legs are carved in the shape of the legs of some hoofed animal, probably a bull, the front of each leg being decorated with two royal basilisks in gold. These basilisks are erect, face to face, their tails forming a continuous coil down to the rise of the hoof. Round each fetlock runs a silver band, and under each hoof there was originally a plate of silver, of which only a few fragments remain. The cross-rail in front of the seat is also plated with silver. The arms (or what would be the arms if placed in position), are very curious, consisting of two flat pieces of wood joined at right angles, so as to form an upright affixed to the framework of the back and a horizontal support for the arm of the sitter. These are of the same wood as the legs and rails, having a border line at each side; while down the middle, with head erect at the top of the upright limb, and tail undulating downward to the finish of the armrest, is a basilisk carved in some lighter wood and incrusted with hundreds of minute silver annulets, to represent the markings of the reptile. The nails connecting the various parts are round-headed and plated with gold, thus closely resembling the ornamental brass-headed nails in use at the present day. The gold and silver are both of the purest quality. On the royal ovals which formerly adorned this beautiful chair of state, only one longitudinal fragment remains. This fragment measures some nine or ten inches in length, is carved on both sides, and contains about one-forth part of what may be formed the field of the cartouche. Enough, however, remains to identify on one side the throne name, and on the other side the family name, of Queen Hatasu, or, more correctly, Hatshepsu. The carving is admirable, every detail—even to the form of the nails and the creases of the finger-joints in part of the hand—being rendered with the most perfect truth and delicacy. The throne names, "Ra-ma-ka," is surrounded with a palmiroad bordering, and the family name, "Amen Kmun Hatshepsu," by a border of concentric spirals. The wood of this cartouche is the same as that of the basilisk upon the arms, being very hard and close-grained, and of a tawny, yellow hue, like boxwood. Some gorgeously colored throne-chairs depicted on the walls of a side chamber in the tomb of Rameses III. at Thebes, show exactly into what part of the framework these royal insignia were inserted, and might serve as models for the complete restoration of this most valuable and interesting relic.

Among other objects in Queen Hatshepsu's case is a fine female face—part of an effigy from a sarcophagus lid—carved in the same rich dark wood as the throne. In profile this face not only bears a close resemblance to the face of the seated statue of Hatshepsu in the Berlin collection, but it is almost identical with the profile of Hatshepsu's grandmother, Queen Aahhotep, carved in effigy upon her sarcophagus lid in the Bulak museum. It is a beautiful, low-browed, full-lipped, oriental face, of Egyptian type pur sang, without the least touch of Semitism. Is it a portrait of Hatshepsu? This question (which is perhaps impossible to answer) is one of no ordinary interest, for Hatshepsu was not only a principal actor in the long and splendid drama of Egyptian history, but she was also one of the most extraordinary women in the history of the ancient world. A daughter of Thothmes I., she appears to have inherited certain sovereign rights by virtue of her descent in the female line from the old legitimate twelfth dynasty stock. Intermarrying with her brother, Thothmes II, she ratified that Pharaoh's succession, and after his death she reigned alone, literally as Pharaoh, for many years. As Pharaoh, she is represented in the garb of a king crowned with the war helmet, and wearing a false beard. She was one of the most magnificent builders sovereigns of Egypt, her great temple at Dayr-el Bahareo, like western Thebes, being architecturally unlike every other temple in Egypt, and her obelisks at Karnak being the most admirably engraved and proportioned, as well as the loftiest known. One yet stands erect beside the fallen fragments of its fellow. The most striking incident of her reign was, however, the expedition which she dispatched to the "land of Punt," now identified with the Somali country, on the east coast of Africa. For this purpose she built and fitted out a fleet of five ships, which successfully accomplished the voyage and returned to Thebes laden with foreign shrubs, gums, spices, rare wood, apes, elephant-tusks, and other treasures. The departure and return of this fleet, the incidents of the voyage, the lading of the ships, and the triumphal procession of the troops on re-entering Thebes are represented on the terrace walls of Hatshepsu's temple in a series of sculptured and painted tableaux of unparalleled interest. This is the earliest instance of the fitting out of a fleet, or of a voyage of discovery known in history.—From Los Angeles Tribune.

THE EASTERN QUESTION

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Messianic, by J. P. Weethee. The title of the book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 619 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.00.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—BY J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellences. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly increasing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and immense wealth employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, to which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point emphatically to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

THE COMING AGE is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents learned views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand is in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great unfolding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Unconquerable Will. Whoever reads this book will lay it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth. Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. By L. C. Thomas.

This pamphlet—"The Law, the Covenants, and the Sabbath. Also an Epitome of the Great Salvation" and an Appendix including various other subjects, in brief.

The perfect unchangeable moral law is considered and shown to be the basis and spirit of the old Sinaitic law, now dead in its entirety. The law of Moses and law of Christ are compared and contrasted, and the relation of both to the old and new covenants is treated at some length. The Sabbath question is carefully and lengthily examined, and presented and discussed in a somewhat new light.

The work also includes the consideration of Sunday, conditional immortality, the gospel, return of the Jews, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, punishment of the wicked, the state of the dead, the new birth, the one faith, the one hope, the image of God, nature of Christ, the name, the religion, morality, Christianity, etc. This work contains 320 pages, Cloth bound, Price $1.00,

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXVI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 14, 1887. NO. 34.

THE RESTITUTION

Terms—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR

Payable in advance. Three and Six Months in proportion.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the real restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for salvation.

THE MILLENNIUM.

There are not a few of the popular writers and preachers of our day who see no need for a second appearing of Jesus Christ on this earth in order to bring about the Millennium. They think the Millennial blessedness and glory will come without his personal presence. Indeed, they tell us that it is coming, and that we are now on the eve of it. In proof of this, they point to the various Christian agencies now in operation. They point to the increase of schools, and churches, and charitable institutions, and the frequent proclamation of the gospel not only in buildings, but in the highways. They also point to the various openings which of late years have been gained into heathen lands, to the numerous missionaries who have gone to preach the gospel, and to the success—in a few instances signal success—which has attended their labors; and from these things they conclude that the world is growing better. Well, now, look at this for a moment. And in what we say we will depend upon facts more than upon arguments. Arguments may be sound or unsound; they may be based on Scripture or on a perversion of Scripture; they may be based on general facts; that is, on some facts disconnected from others which are necessary to their right understanding. Now it is a fact that during the last quarter of a century the gospel has been carried into some parts of the world where it had not been previously carried. And this fact is made much of at missionary meetings. But it can serve no wise end to withhold the fact, which is just as true, that any opening made into any country for the missionary of the cross, is an opening also for the rum and whisky-seller; and the great ships that carry Bibles, Testaments, and smaller portions of the Scriptures, carry also a cargo of intoxicating drinks; so that with the spread of civilization and religion there is also the spread of drunkenness and degradation. With the introduction of new blessings, there is the introduction of new vices and new curses. It is a fact also, according to a work lately published, that during one hundred years of Protestant mission work in various heathen countries, about 3,000,000 of the heathen have been won over to Christianity as taught by the several Protestant denominations engaged in that work. And this too is a fact not lost sight of on the missionary platform, and it is a fact for which all should give thanks to God. But in close connection with this there is another fact which, we fear, is seldom named at the same time; and that is, that during the one hundred years in which 3,000,000 have left heathenism, the heathen have increased in number about 200,000,000. So at these rates, where is the hope of their conversion since their number increases more than sixty times faster than their converts to Christianity? It is, then, without doubt, a fact that the world never contained so many Christians as it does today; but it is equally true that the world never contained so many unbelievers, ungodly men and sinners. The world, it is said, is growing better. In some respects that is true; but if we are to judge of this matter by comparing the numbers of believers on the one side with the number of unbelievers on the other side, and with the ratio of increase continually going on on both sides, then the conclusion is inevitable, that the world is growing worse.

Look at this matter in another light. If the world is growing better, as some maintain, there will be a better understanding and a better feeling between nation and nation, and less fear of war one with another. But is that so? The question is negatived by the increase in the army, and the constant preparations carried on on a large scale, for improvements, so-called, in the weapons of warfare, being designed not to kill as many as possible at a single blow, or fire. The ingenuity of man has lately devised weapons of terrible slaughter. At no former period of warfare could such destruction of life be inflicted as now.

If the world were growing better,—if education and learning were not only civilizing men but promoting good-will and benevolence, we should have more union between masters and servants, or between capitalists and laborers. But what are the facts? There never was a period when there was less union. There never was a period in all the world's history when there were such large and well organized bodies of working men to oppose their employers. If the world were growing better, we should have increased satisfaction on the part of the masses with their lot in life, and more submission on the part of the many millions of subjects to the various governments of the world under which they live. But what say the facts? Every observer of men and things knows that there never was a period when dissatisfaction with their earthly lot and with existing governments was so wide spread, as is evidenced by Nihilism, Socialism, Communism, and Fenianism. There is unrest every where. In many parts there is anarchy. There are organized attempts to oppose and overturn established law and order. If the world were growing better, fewer of the middle and upper classes would be going into scepticism and infidelity, and fewer of the working classes would absent themselves from church and chapel, and we should have a greater number of conversions among all classes under the preaching of the word. The world, viewed as it really is, with a population estimated at 1,424,000,000, and about three-fourths of the whole made up of heathen, Mohammedans, and unbelievers, presents a dark and gloomy picture, and gives no hope of its conversion by the present means and agencies. Now, according to the teaching of God's word, we have, before the Millennium, the wide spread defection and falling away, the general prevalence of unbelief, agnosticism, atheism, the worship of humanity, and other darling blasphemies; we have the seven seals, the seven trumpets, and the seven bowls; we have the judgment of the nations at the coming of the Christ and his saints; we have the destruction of the antichrist and his allies, and the depriving Satan of his power: all these things must take place before the thousand years' reign of Christ.

But there are another class of writers and preachers,—persons, strange to say, who give some attention to the study of prophecy,—who place the millennium, or the thousand years, in the past. Some date it from the beginning of the Christian era; some date it from Constantine, when Pagan Rome fell, and when Christianity was taken under the patronage of the state; some think it commenced in the reign of Charlemagne; and others date it from the year 804, and make it end in the year 1804. But the facts of past history contradict such a theory. Indeed, at no period in the history of the church have Millennial blessings, as portrayed by the prophets, been enjoyed. When was Satan bound? When did resurrection saints reign with Christ? When were the children of Judah and the children of Israel restored to their own land and united in one kingdom? When were they all righteous, and all dwelling in unity and in safety? When did wars cease, and all preparation for war cease, and even the very art of warfare pass out of man's memory? These are some of the blessings to be enjoyed in the Millennium. Such questions—which might easily be multiplied—show at once the absurdity and falsehood of the theory; and were it not that some able men have advocated this view, and some yet hold it who are leading others astray, it would seem unnecessary even to name it. But some will ignore the plainest texts. Interpreting Scripture according to their own fancy, they go far astray from the truth, and adopt the most foolish vagaries. They propound theories which are both unscriptural and contradictory. Those who believe the Millennium commenced with the Christian era; those who believe it commenced in the reign of Constantine; those who date it from the reign of Charlemagne; and those who date it from the year 804, all place themselves in opposition with both history and Scripture. Indeed, to give any thing like a show of reason for these hypotheses, recourse is had to a most reckless misapplication of history and to misinterpretation of Scripture. SILAS HENN.

MICA PEN-NOTES.

GOODNESS.

Paul, to his Galatian brethren, after an enumeration of grevious offences (seventeen in number, reduced to fifteen in the Revised Version), which would be an inseparable and disqualifying barrier to a place in the kingdom of God, gives a list of spiritual graces, with the immortal number of nine. They are truly spiritual, for he calls them "the fruit of the Spirit." They are not arbitrary things, such as a man can have at his own sovereign pleasure, and by his own unaided wisdom. They are wrought and imparted by the wisdom of God. That is a good thing to understand. Of course the one desiring them, seeks, asks, and even earnestly begs their development in his mind and life. And because he asks that which God delights to give, he has great comfort of expectation that he will have these lovely and blessed graces. Graces, I say, because they are things given, and excellent things. We gave a look at one the other day. Its name was gentleness. I would like to follow that with the contemplation of the one that follows it, that is goodness. Gentleness, or kindness, was locally the central one of all, the fifth of the nine, and goodness follows immediately after.

One would like to ask what grace of character could, as a fruit of spirit-power, be more comprehensive and lovely than goodness? We have known some people so thoroughly cast in the mould of goodness, so good in their thoughts and dispositions, so good in their language and actions, so good in conduct and character, that only the good God could give such treasures to men, and he only could, with skill and spirit energy, new-create them. And so glorious was the aspect and influence of their lives, that they remain precious in memory forever. They were gentle, cheerful, sympathizing, generous, patient, harmless, and God-like. They were good, and goodness shone in their countenances. It shone, even if they were homely, and unlearned and poor. It shone, even though they were in the world's view, common, uninteresting, or inferior. There was the stamp of royalty on them, because they had the work of God wrought in them. It was inextinguishable in them, and ineradicable in them.

Some people of this royal stamp I have known who would never scold. No, not under provocation, or in special temptations to impatience. The noble benignity of their goodness was radiant then. I know very well that some people who do scold, are nevertheless good, but have not conquered an infirmity, which has remained an incident of sore experiences of trial perhaps in the rearing and care of children, and in fatigues incessant, and weariness long-continued. Some are tortured with ill health, and some have been cruelly wronged by men that have artfully over-reached and robbed them. Some women have been plagued beyond expression with the ungenial society, and brutally harsh treatment of drunken husbands. On some infirmities we may have compassion, making a difference. But yet there were those we have known, who had the sweet and stately serenity that we attach, ideally, to such pictured graces, as Faith, Charity, and Hope. Perhaps our saint was an aunt, unmarried and childless, who was an almost heavenly guest in the families of others, and who loved children and was loved by them. Perhaps it was a mother, who bore all the pressure of domestic care with an unruffled brow, and soothed the fretfulness of her babes with words of love and playing tenderness. Just think of the trials of such as are taxed by night and day to answer the calls or minister to the needs of the dependent flock. How often is the mother roused from her sleep by an appeal she cannot disregard, for nourishment, covering, medicine or sympathy! What book will contain the thousand million trials of the mothers of earth?

There is another form of goodness in a persistent and positive preference to suffer wrong rather than perpetrate it. And this is proved in act and fact. Cases occur where a decision is absolutely compelled between doing or enduring an injury. Temptation or provocation, too, may be severe and urgent. There will be men in every community who are ready to rob or confiscate, if they can escape the rough and ready hand of the civil law. They are unscrupulous and sharp and greedy. They will do a great and flagrant wrong, a wrong life-long and heart-breaking in its working and results, for the sake of their own selfish convenience. What a painful and shameful spectacle! What a harpy eagle's egg of remorseful accusation lies within them, that in due time will manifest life, and utter its dissonant cry of complaint! And there are the children of God, bitterly suffering, who will bear the worst without retaliation, but uttering their sighs in secret to the ear of him who is supremely wise and good.

Goodness has its true and grand inspiration from God, who is himself goodness in perfection. That God is good to all, and good without reservation or imperfection, and good beyond impeachment, in a kind of knowledge of unspeakable value. Its influence is mighty. To have secret queries or suspicions of the goodness of God, is at once unfortunate and pernicious. It works havoc in the mind where the questions are harbored. Our model, practical and ideal, must be perfect, and we wrong our own interest severely by allowing distrust to pray on the mind, with a subtle voracity devouring the most precious things of life. Whereas, on the other hand, an instructed understanding of the boundless benevolence, and unimpeachable goodness of God is a treasure of immeasurable worth. This assurance, built as an immovable foundation into the mental framework, will prove a fruitful source of all pure and elevated and noble dispositions and gracious impulses. With a thought of malevolence or wrong in Deity, lodged in the mind, there is a germ of hatefulness whose poisonous susceptibility, let him calculate who can. Has not the world been rent and deluged with calamities in consequence of utterly wrong ideas of God? Has not the belief of cruelty without compassion, and rigor without relenting, in the height of intelligence and power, stimulated to deeds of awful inhumanity and desperate wickedness?

Let us cultivate goodness. Let us consider its transcendent value, learn its delightful lesson, and be captivated by its celestial charm. Let us imbibe the genial savor of those phrases of courtesy and affection by which the apostle seeks to foster goodness in the brotherhood. With what sincerity of appreciation, and discreet adroitness of compliment, he seeks to nourish them toward perfection in Christian character! "And I, myself, am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye yourselves are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another." And the sense of goodness in such a gentle and affectionate epistolary address is something like our sense of those gentilities we see in nature, where the beautiful things of God are grouped in unconscious sweetness and harmony, where order is the rule, loveliness the trait, and perfection the end of all ministrations. We observe not alone the goodness the apostle is seeking to foster in others, but his own, also, in language evincing such depth of solicitude, tenderness of sympathy and enthusiasm of hope. C. COLEGROVE.

Correction.—In a recent article an error crept in, which I should correct. The word "Satan" should have been "Latsinos," and apostate need not be regarded. The whole subject, however, may in a future number, be considered thoroughly, but not just at present. C. C.

Selections.

OUR COMING ASCENT INTO THE HEAVENS.

The Apostle Paul, describing the rapture of saints which will take place when Christ descends into the air, says briefly, "We shall all be changed" (1 Cor. xv. 51). How radical that change will be, how complete must be the alteration in the physiological conditions of human bodies that must take place at the moment of our translation alive, without dying, at Christ's Second Advent, to meet him in the atmospheric heavens, is strikingly shown by the undermentioned experience of some aeronauts who ascended in a balloon to a height of seven miles—the greatest ever attained. They barely escaped with their lives—being rendered more or less insensible. In another case two French Aeronauts died of suffocation at the height of five miles, through the rarefaction of the air. Yet far higher than five miles will the translated saints ascend.

St. Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from (the highest) heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God; the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up to meet Christ in the air, and so we shall ever be with the Lord"—"We shall not all sleep (die), but we must all be changed: in a moment: in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the trump," etc. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; 1 Cor. xv. 51.

In Revelation xiv. 1-5, we are told that 144,000 watchful living Christians—the wise Virgins of the Parable in Matthew xxv., will thus be caught up alive, without dying, into the air, at Christ's Second Advent, before the three and a half years of the Napoleonic antichrist's final persecution of the Christian Church. The date of this First Stage of Christ's Advent is stated in Daniel ix. 25, to be exactly 69 weeks of literal days after "the going forth of a future commandment to rebuild Jerusalem"—which 69 weeks are also stated to be "determined" or "cut off" (ix. 24) from the commencing part of 2,300 literal days or evening-mornings in Daniel viii. 14. Now, as the 2,300 days are to commence on Thursday, November 3, 1894, 2,345 days before the end of this Age which is on Thursday, April 11, 1901—the last day of Passover Week—therefore the 69 weeks of days will reach from Nov. 3, 1894, "unto Messiah the Prince's" Second Advent about Thursday, March 5, 1896.*

It is a solemn and awe-inspiring reflection that within so few years' time 144,000 living Christians will be caught up alive into the heavens; and in this connection it is interesting to read the following account of the experience of the adventurous Aeronauts:

The two French Aeronauts who are to attempt to eclipse everything that has yet been done in reaching the highest altitudes of the air are Joris and Mallet. The highest balloon ascent ever made, namely, to a height of seven miles, was accomplished five-and-twenty years ago by two Englishmen, Mr. James Glaisher, F. R. S., the Meteorologist, and Mr. Henry Coxwell, the balloonist. DeFonvielle, Tissandier, Flammarion and Guillemin, among others, have declared that never was worthier heroism than was shown by these two Englishmen. More than once French Aeronauts and savants have tried to rival this famous ascent, but hitherto in vain, and in one instance with distressing results.

Twelve years ago M. Tissandier, M. Sivel and M. Croce Spinelli rose in a balloon from La Villette on the 15th of April, 1875, to a height of 8,000 metres, or five miles, then all three becoming unconscious, fell to the bottom of the car—fortunately after they had opened the valve and begun to descend; but M. Tissandier, thanks to a strong constitution, alone survived; his two comrades lay dead at the bottom of the car. Sivel's face was black, his eyes glassy, and mouth open. Croce Spinelli, had his eyes shut, and the mouth of each was full of blood." But these two daring explorers were not near the height attained by their English forerunners, for Glaisher and Coxwell rose, it is believed, two miles higher, and now Captain Paul Jovis and M. Mallet in their balloon the Horla, will endeavor, nothing daunted by the fate of some of their compatriots, at least to equal—if possible, surpass—that achievement. The unparalleled high ascent of seven miles by James Glaisher and Henry Coxwell was made on September 5, 1862, from Wolverhampton. Their balloon or aerostat was charged with specially prepared and very light gas, approaching pure hydrogen. They left the earth at 1:3 P. M.—the temperature of the air being 59. In ten minutes they had risen nearly a mile, and were rushing through a dense cloud 1,100 feet thick. Ten minutes later they were looking down upon that cloud, which seemed like a sea with huge billowy waves, or like a Switzerland with endless hills, hillocks and mountain chains. Their car was a physical laboratory filled with a score of different sets of scientific instruments, hypometers, barometers, thermometers (wet and dry), a photographer's camera, chemicals, compasses, and what not, to test the weight, the heat, and the moisture of the various strata of the atmosphere. At 1:40 they were four miles high; the barometer sank to below fifteen inches, which means that the air was now only half the weight of that on terra firma, and two breaths were now only equal to one, and the thermometer recorded eight degrees. What followed is told in the scientist's own words:

"Discharging sand, we in ten minutes attained the altitude of five miles; the temperature had passed below zero, and then read minus 2 degrees. Up to this time I had taken observations with comfort, and experienced no difficulty in breathing; while Mr. Coxwell, in consequence of the exertions he had to make, breathed with difficulty for some time. Having discharged more sand, we ascended still higher. The aspirator became troublesome to work, and I also found a difficulty in seeing clearly. At 1:51 the barometer read 10.8 in.; about 1:52, or later, I read the dry bulb thermometer as minus 5 deg.; after this I could not see the column of mercury in the wet bulb thermometer nor the hands of the watch, nor the fine divisions of any instrument. I asked Mr. Coxwell to help me to read the instruments. In consequence, however, of the rotating motion of the balloon, which had continued without ceasing since leaving the earth, the valve-line had become entangled, and he had to leave the car and mount into the ring to readjust it. I then looked at the barometer and found its reading to be nine and three-fourth in., still decreasing fast, implying a height exceeding 29,000 feet.

Shortly after I laid my arm upon the table possessed of its full vigor; but on being desirous of using it, I found it powerless—it must have lost its power momentarily. Trying to move the other arm, I found it powerless also. Then I tried to shake myself, and succeeded; but I seemed to have no limbs. In looking at the barometer my head fell over my left shoulder. I struggled and shook my body again, but could not move my arms. Getting my head upright for an instant only, it fell on my right shoulder. Then I fell backwards, my back resting against the side of the car and my head on its edge. In this position my eyes were directed to Mr. Coxwell in the ring. When I shook my body I seemed to have full power over the muscles of the back, and considerably so over those of the neck, but none over either my arms or my legs. I dimly saw Mr. Coxwell, and endeavored to speak, but could not. In an instance intense darkness overcame me, so that the optic nerve lost power suddenly, but I was still conscious. I thought I had been seized with asphyxia, and believed I should experience nothing more, as death would come unless we speedily descended. Other thoughts were entering my mind when I suddenly became unconscious, as going to sleep. I cannot tell anything of the sense of hearing, as no sound reaches the ear to break the perfect stillness and silence of the regions between six and seven miles above the earth. My last observation was made at 1:54, above 29,000 feet. Whilst powerless I heard the word 'temperature' and 'observation,' and I knew Mr. Coxwell was in the car, speaking to and endeavoring to rouse me; therefore, consciousness and hearing had returned. I then heard him speak more emphatically, but could not see, speak or move. I heard him again say, 'Do try; now do.' Then the instruments became dimly visible, then Mr. Coxwell, and very shortly I saw clearly. I said to Mr. Coxwell, 'I have been insensible.' He said, 'You have, and I too, very nearly.'

"Mr. Coxwell told me that he had lost the use of his hands, which were black, and I poured brandy over them. He informed me that while in the ring he felt it piercingly cold; that hoar-frost was all around the neck of the balloon, and that on attempting to leave the ring he found his hands frozen. He had therefore to place his arms on the ring and drop down. When he saw me he thought for a moment I had lain back to rest myself, he then noticed that my legs projected, and my arms hung down by my side. He wished to approach me but could not, and when he found insensibility coming over himself too, he became anxious to open the valve, but in consequence of having lost the use of his hands he could not do this. Ultimately he succeeded by seizing the cord with his teeth, and dipping his head two or three times, the balloon took a decided turn downwards.

Mr. Coxwell says he saw the aneroid stand at 7 in.; a delicate thermometer recorded 11.9 deg., below zero—all which indications pointed to an elevation of 36,000 feet or 37,000, or about seven miles. Such is the record which our French friends have to surpass. It is an altitude where air is so thin and tenuous as to be only one-fourth its weight at the sea level—an air that few men can respire and live. It is far above the region where birds can fly. At a height of three miles a pigeon was sent out, and it extended its wings and dropped like a piece of paper; another at four miles flew vigorously round and round, but took a dip each time; while between four and five miles high a third pigeon fell like a stone. The French Aeronauts will have an advantage in taking up with them a supply of oxygen, which inhaled judiciously, is very useful. They have been submitted to a number of scientific tests. One of these is said to be that the aeronaut is placed in an iron chamber, from which the air is gradually pumped until by an exhaustive process the pressure is brought down to the lowest he can bear. If he can continue breathing and conscious when the mercury stands at seven inches he may perchance rise to the height of seven miles and live to tell the tale. Benumbing cold and acute pain is felt between three and five miles high. The voyager in these high regions must be sound in heart and lungs or death is certain.—M. Baxter, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

*We confess that we feel quite a lack of confidence as to the realization of all the events noted in this paragraph both in time and circumstances. We believe with the author that Christ's Advent is impending.—ED. REST.

Excursions to Philadelphia.

Extensive preparations are being made by the citizens of Philadelphia for a fitting celebration of the centennial anniversary of the adoption of the Federal Constitution on September 15th, 16th and 17th. The President of the United States, his Cabinet, and other distinguished gentlemen will be present. Excursion tickets will be sold to Philadelphia and return from September 8th to 17th, inclusive, at one fare for the round trip from ticket stations on the Pennsylvania Lines west of Pittsburgh. These tickets will be good for return passage until Sept. 22d, inclusive. No other lines can furnish such excellent facilities and accommodations for reaching Philadelphia as the Pennsylvania. Call on, or address the nearest ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Company, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railway, or the Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburgh Railroad Company.

Conference Report.

According to announcement the Church of God in Indiana met in Conference at Claysville, Ind., Friday, Sept. 2, 1887. The programme as arranged was taken up, and followed as near as it was possible to do.

The churches belonging to the Conference were all represented except two.

The election of Officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, R. S. Dwiggins, Vice Presidents, J. L. Wince and Robert Railsback, Secretary, A. R. Underwood, Treasurer, E. K. Barnhill. A paper written by A. P. Harsh in regard to a National Conference was read, and followed by general discussion of the subject, after which the following resolution was offered and adopted:

Resolved, That we favor the holding of a National Conference, composed of delegates from all the churches in the Nation. We therefore recommend the committee heretofore appointed to take the necessary steps, in conjunction with committees appointed by other State Conferences, to bring about the holding of such a Conference.

This committee consists of A. P. Harsh, J. H. Willey, T. O. Taber, A. R. Underwood, and R. S. Dwiggins.

A paper written by Sister P. C. Thompson favoring the holding of a Normal next summer, for the study of the Scriptures was read, and fully discussed, ending in the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That we favor the holding of a Normal next summer for the study of the Scriptures. We therefore recommend the appointment of a committee of six to take such action as may be necessary to enlist the assistance of the brotherhood in all the states, and bring about the holding of such a Normal, to be held at such place as may be agreed upon.

This committee consists of Lizzie A. Reed, A. R. Underwood, Fannie T. Dwiggins, Josiah Hoffman, Ellen Railsback, and Ettie Fry.

Sister Dwiggins being prevented from reaching the meeting, owing to a burned bridge on the Rail Road, the paper she had prepared on "Young People's Work" was not presented, but is given a place in this paper. The subject was discussed, however, and the following resolution adopted:

In the opinion of this Conference much good may be accomplished by the young people of each church holding "Young people's service" each week, to be conducted in such manner as may seem best. We therefore recommend that each church take the necessary steps to bring about the holding of such a service.

The Conference also recommended that each Church encourage its young members to start a Young People's Prayer Meeting.

Sister S. R. Wince read a very interesting paper on "Bible Lessons," and the subject was discussed quite freely. The committee who have had this matter in charge were commended for their faithful work, and asked to continue the same for another quarter. This committee is S. R. Wince, P. C. Thompson, Fannie T. Dwiggins, S. A. Chaplin, Robert Railsback, and L. E. Conner. It is recommended that they secure the assistance of like committees from other States.

The discussion led by L. E. Conner on "How can we evangelize the State?" was sharp and pointed, and resulted in the decision that if the money can be raised the State can be evangelized. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, We favor the keeping of an evangelist in the field all the time. We therefore recommend the Evangelical Committee to correspond with the various churches in the State, and ask them to contribute for the support of an evangelist.

This committee consists of I. G. Roberts, W. Tuttle, and Wm. Railsback.

The Treasurer's report showed about $13.09 on hand.

A resolution was adopted, ordering the Treasurer to make an itemized report, at each quarterly meeting of the Conference, of the funds in his hands, showing by whom money is paid, to whom it is paid, and amount on hand.

The preachers present were B. W. Woodward, S. A. Chaplin, L. E. Conner, R. S. Dwiggins, and J. L. Wince. Each speaker faced large and attentive audiences, and good order was maintained throughout. The thanks of the Conference are given to the owners of the commodious church building in which the meeting was held, for their kindness in opening the house to us. We appreciate this kind action and their friendly words very much. The brethren and sisters at Claysville are few in number, but wide awake to the cause of the Master, and entertained the visitors so well that an invitation to hold another Conference meeting there, will, I think, be accepted. On Sunday evening three willing souls stepped forward, and united with the little band, and were baptized Monday morning. Brethren and sisters, be faithful, the crown is yours if you do well.

Young People's Work, Written for the Annual Conference.

I wish to emphasize the work that received an impetus at the June meeting. It has been my pleasure to organize and attend one of these Young People's meetings for some months past, and find my expectation, more than realized in the earnestness with which they take hold of the work, and the ability displayed in conducting it. I have often wondered why these active minds have not been utilized to make the meetings more interesting and keep our numbers from growing less, but at this time it seems a necessity to keep our ranks from being decimated.

In many localities we find the sons and daughters of prominent members uniting with other churches, and becoming zealous workers.

Our good brethren have been so interested themselves, that they have failed to see that the young people are left idle for want of work to do. It is only in works that a lasting interest is created. The young people in our schools are able with some study, to prepare an article on almost any Bible subject, that will interest an audience of young people, yes, and older ones also, with the freshness and originality with which it is presented.

If every church had a society of "Willing Workers," actively engaged in weekly meetings, and we had a column in our paper filled with original matter, it would be better appreciated than selected matter, be it ever so good.

It has been my observation that the younger classes do not read THE RESTITUTION as they should, having an idea that the articles are above their comprehension.

With a lively young people's column, they would be interested and soon get to reading the more learned articles.

I submit the following Plan for Organizing the Young People for Religious Work.

The Society shall be known as the "Willing Workers." The officers shall consist of a leader, treasurer, and an executive committee, consisting of from three to five members.

1st. It shall be the duty of the leader to preside at all meetings, have a general supervision of all services, and see that the programme of exercises is carried out.

2nd. The secretary shall keep a record of all business done, all moneys received and paid out, and copy each programme in the record book of the society.

3rd. The treasurer shall take charge of all money belonging to the Association, and pay the same out as directed by the society.

4th. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to prepare a programme of exercises for each meeting and notify each member of the duty assigned them, giving them at least one week to prepare. Such committee shall also have a general supervision of all services, and with the leader shall be responsible for the success of the meetings.

5th. All meetings shall be opened with singing, reading of Scripture lesson and prayer. The services shall consist of such exercises as will be best calculated to interest the Young People in the study of the Bible.

6th. It is recommended that the society hold monthly a public meeting at the church, and weekly meetings at the houses of the different members.

F. T. DWIGGINS.

Conference Report.

On Sept. 1st, the Conference of the Church of God, of south-west Nebraska, held its anual session on the banks of the Republican River for the second time in its history. There were present at one time from four to five hundred persons who listened to Bro. Ramsay as he set forth the gospel from the great Book of God. The feeling of interest was deep and intense, five were baptized into Jesus the Christ. Bro. Adams baptized his own brother in the flesh, others are ready to obey. The meeting was well conducted and was a happy success in every way and manner. Many requests were received desiring a continuance of the meeting, which could not, consistently, be complied with this year. But next year D. V., we hope to tarry for the slow ones, in order that they might have a fair chance with the rest of us. Our members are increasing, and practical Christianity comes to the front with the gospel power. Brother and Sister Nowell, formerly of Baptist faith, have cast their lot with the Truth, the Kingdom, the Christ and the God of the Bible, and they both enjoyed their first gathering with the brethren which has made in them a lasting good impression. The Denny family of Indiana, were there and pronounced it the best. While here Bro. Ramsay received a letter from Philadelphia, Penn., giving him a call to that place, he is going. Our officers were re-elected for ensuing year. On the morning in the which we were to part for our several homes we called the brethren together for a good bye meeting. Well, I can't describe it; all broken up and broken down, as it were, all meeting and running over with heart love for God and the Master and the brethren. Some were sorry we had to go home, and some wished we all lived together. All seemed ready for the end of the dispensation. And oh, brethren, may we retain this readiness is my prayer.

Held Firm by Christ's Love.

We are told that no permanent fixture of the lighthouse tower to the rock is required to increase the stability of the structure. Our first thought, doubtless, is that the foundation-course of stones must be bolted or fastened in some way to the rocky bed on which it rests. But nothing except the weight of the superincumbent mass is needed to keep the lighthouse in its place. The foundation-course becomes in the end the most stable of all, because it has the greatest weight above it. In the Skerryvore Lighthouse, off the island of Tiree, in Argyllshire, the tower rests with a weight of 4300 tons upon the island rock, and has stability enough to receive the shocks of the storms which dash upon it from the Atlantic with a pressure of three tons and a half to the square foot. No more does the stability of Christian character depend absolutely upon our love for the Savior. In the end, no doubt, the love of the Christian for his Lord does join him to Christ as with hooks of steel. But it is something else which must give the young convert, distrustful of himself as he ought to be, the assurance that he will hold out. And what is that? It is the love of Christ that cannot be measured or weighed, shed abroad in the heart, and at the same time inspiring love for him that keeps the character of the Christian steadfast, so that all the dashings of the storms of temptation and trial cannot remove him from the Rock of Ages.

WOMAN'S PLACE AND WORK.

The right determination of this question seems to involve, in a pre-eminent degree, the extension of the Savior's kingdom in the world. In our time, under the pressure of the world's needs and the awakening zeal of the church, the question seems to be solving itself. Christian women are admitted, nay are urged, into spheres of labor and influence which until lately were closed to them. But whether this is right and according to the Master's will, must be decided, first of all, by the touchstone of the inspired Word.

I do not pretend that the subject is without difficulty; but the difficulty seems less to me than to some of my friends. There are two passages which at first sight seem to assign narrow limits to the place and work of women in the church. In 1 Cor. xiv. 34, the Apostle says, "Let your women keep silence in the assemblies; let them be in subjection, as also saith the law; and if they would learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home." And, again, in Timothy, 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12), presiding over the church in Ephesus, he says "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man." In both these passages, the Apostle employs a first principle of the human society (that God has placed women in a subordinate position to her husband, Gen. iii. 16), to enforce a direction which, I am persuaded, was intended to be neither universal nor permanent.

"If they would learn anything let them ask their husbands at home." This obviously belongs to a temporary state of things. The Apostle certainly does not intend to hand over to the sorry and precarious teaching, even of Christian "husbands at home," the women in our time, who might have such husbands, and who "would learn anything" of Christian truth. In how many hundreds of instances, teaching "at home" has come from the wife to the husband, awakened to inquiry.

These counsels were adapted only to the condition of women in the churches of Corinth and Ephesus; a condition which was not universal, and which it was the very design of Christianity to remove. The women in Greece and in Asia Minor were in a degraded condition, and unfit for the position of teachers, or even of intelligent questioners in the church; a position, however, which they were prematurely asserting for themselves, in the new-found liberty of the Gospel. The Apostle insists on their silence in the assemblies, as only leading to disorder. This chapter, 1 Cor. xiv. is occupied with directions, for the most part applicable only to a temporary condition of things, connected with the exercise of special gifts which were not to be permanent in the church. Yet, even then, this direction was not to be taken without exceptions; for he speaks (in ch. xi. 4, 5), of women as well as men "praying and prophesying" (i. e., preaching with special divine assistance), and insists that women should pray and prophesy with their heads covered.

Moreover, there are many other lights of Scripture which prove that St. Paul did not intend his words, "I suffer not a woman to teach," to have any universal or permanent application.

The truth is, the bondage of special rules and prohibitions does not belong to the Christian religion. These were characteristic of "the law," as adapted to the spiritually infantile condition of Israel. Christianity inspires motives and implants principles, and leaves large liberty for their application to the life of individuals and of the church.

Thus, e. g., in the establishment of Christianity, the Gospel was preached first to the Jews only, but when the men of Cyprus and Cyrene came to Antioch, under the constraint of the love of Christ, and without any special direction, they broke through the barriers of prejudice and "spake unto the Grecks also, preaching the Lord Jesus" (Acts, xi, 20). The need of perishing men was in their view. They felt the Gospel which they possessed was the only and the sufficient reply. The opportunity was present, and constrained by the love of Christ, they used it, and God gave his sanction to their work.

And such was the divine method for providing for the growth and extension of the Christian church. Not as Judaism, of which the pattern was shown to Moses. Complete from the first, and to be strictly followed, the Christian system was to be a providential development, free from the yoke of multiplied ceremonies, and leaving room to be supplied, as they arose, by the best wisdom of the church, under the guidance sought from her living and her present head.

First, the need was felt of deacons, and this was supplied. Afterwards of elders in the church at Jerusalem, etc., and soon the requirement was felt for such work as Christian woman was well fitted for, and the want was supplied. Woman's place and work in the church was found, as we have seen. And for some centuries she held her place and did useful work, till in the growing corruptions of what have been sadly, but truly, called "the Dark Ages of the church," her zeal became a wretched superstition; noble gifts were suppressed or prostituted, while the opportunity for their beneficent use was abandoned in the name of "the religious life." We are devoutly thankful that no small part of the revival of spiritual and evangelical life in this century has been the awakening of all the churches to a sense of the immense value of woman's work to the life and growth of spiritual religion in the world.

The abundant blessing with which God has crowned the lives and labors of Christian women at home and abroad in this age has forever established woman in a high place of honor in the church, and has amply illustrated the value and importance of her work for Christ. Let Christian people become acquainted with such books as "English Hearts and English Hands," by Miss Marsh; with the grand work of the Daniells and Miss Robinson among our soldiers, of Miss Weston and her companions among our sailors, and the work of Miss Hopkinson among the policemen and their families in Manchester, and of the thousands of "devout and honorable women" who are laboring much in the Lord" to bring his light into the darkest dens of ignorance, and infamy, and woe. Let them read the story of the blessed lives and work of such women in the great mission field, as Mrs. Judson, of Burmah, and Mrs. Baker, of Travancore, and they will feel that the warrant which St. Peter alleged as justifying his work in the house of Cornelius is the ample vindication of woman's place and work in the church: —"Forasmuch as God gave unto them the gift as he did unto us, what was I that I could withstand God?"

Oh, that the prayer might go up to the throne from faithful hearts night and day!—"O Lord, renew and continue the power of Pentecost in the church! Pour out thy Spirit on thy servants and on thy handmaidens still, and more abundantly and everywhere!"

Oh, that every Christian woman, as well as every Christian man, young and old, would open their eyes to see the need around them for work for Christ, and the gifts and opportunities they possess, by which the need might be supplied; and then as good stewards of the manifold grace of God would say, "Here am I; Lord, what will Thou have me to do?"—Frederick Macdonald, in Words and Weapons.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

"The many are not always right, the few not always wrong." Else would Christianity never have achieved much success.

All who have read ecclesiastical history are aware of the extensive corruptions, both in doctrine and practice, which, from Pagan sources, crept into the early Christian church. These corruptions are frequently referred to in the Epistles (2 Tim. ii. 17, 18; 2 Peter ii. 1; Titus i. 9–16; 2 Tim. iv. 3–4; etc.); and have been transmitted, chiefly through Papal channels, to all present sections of the church in a greater or less degree; until in those latter days "the whole lump" seems to be "leavened." In order to make the Sacred Scriptures present at least the appearance of authorising their teachings, the early Christian writers—so-called "fathers" and others—dealt with the New Testament pretty much as did the ancient Pharisees with the Old Testament; namely, they "rendered the Word of God of none effect by their tradition" and by their systems of mystical and figurative interpretation.

Martin Luther writes—"That which I have so often insisted on elsewhere I here repeat, that the Christian should direct his first effort to understand the literal sense of the Scripture, which alone is the substance of faith and Christianity. The allegorical sense is commonly uncertain, and by no means safe to build our faith upon, for it usually depends on human opinion and conjecture. It has come to pass that men make just what they please of Scripture, until some accommodate the word of God to the most extravagant notions; and, as Jerome complains of in his own time, they extract a sense from Scripture repugnant to its meaning." Again:—"I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as.... that the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman decretals."

John Locke writes—"By death, some men understood endless torments in hell-fire. But it seems a strange way of understanding a law, which requires the plainest and dreaded words, that by death should be meant eternal life in misery. Can any one be supposed to intend, by a law which says, 'For felony thou shalt surely die,' not that he should lose his life, but be kept alive in exquisite and perpetual torments? And would any one think himself fairly dealt with that was so used?" See Ezek. xviii., John vi., and 1 John v.

I think all will admit that there is not in the Old Testament a single intimation, expressed or implied, that any of God's creatures shall be tormented eternally. We find Moses and the prophets threatening temporal calamities as the punishment of sins, without ever once referring to a post-mortem state of eternal suffering. So that, if eternal misery be really the punishment due to sin, then it was only "brought to light through the Gospel;" and we are thus driven to the conclusion that God permitted the race to go on sinning for over 4000 years without once warning them that the fearful consequence would be everlasting woe!

No stronger threats are contained in the Old Testament than the following: —Psalm xxxvii. 9, "rooted out;" 10, "shall not be." Psalm xxxvii. 38, "shall be destroyed together." Prov. x. 25, "so is the wicked no more." Ezek. xviii. 4, "the soul that sinneth it shall die," etc., etc. Those who regard such passages as referring to punishment in this life only, virtually admit that the Old Testament is altogether silent regarding the ultimate destiny of the ungodly. In saying this I do not ignore Daniel xii. 2, which may simply mean that the remembrance of the wicked shall be had in "everlasting contempt." In any case there is no eternal torment in the passage. It is not their "shame" which is "everlasting," but the "contempt" in which they shall be held.

Coming to the New Testament, I would observe that the apostle Paul was a man who felt intensely and spoke forcibly. He "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God." Yet, although he refers many times to the end of the wicked, he never describes it as endless agony, but invariably in such terms as "death," "destruction," "perish," "corruption," etc. The inappropriateness of these words to express eternal torment, appears from the phraseology which so-called "orthodox" theologians find it necessary to resort to in order to convey that idea. We find their writings teeming with phrases like the following:—"The wicked will live for ever in eternal suffering." "The wicked shall never die" (James Grant); "shall never be consumed" (Johnathan Edwards). Need I say the Scriptures declare the very opposite?

In this connection, Dr. Weymouth, a leading Greek scholar, writes thus: —"My mind fails to conceive a grosser misinterpretation of language than when the five or six strongest words which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying 'destroy' or 'destruction,' are explained to mean—maintaining an everlasting but wretched existence."

As to the "Immortality of the soul," ....it is, I need scarcely say, nowhere declared in Holy Writ. Olshausen writes:—"The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name, are alike unknown to the entire Bible." Plato, who attempted to prove the soul's immortality, endeavored, also, with equal success, (that is to say, with no success) to prove, by similar arguments, the soul's pre-existence! So far from describing the soul as never-dying, the Bible warns us that "the soul that sinneth it shall die," and reveals to us that the Messiah bore our punishment, not by suffering eternal anguish, but by "pouring out his soul unto death."

The truth is great and will prevail—ultimately. But not in this age. For, if there is any inspiration in such passages as 2 Tim. iv. 1–4; 2 Peter iii. 1–4; Math. xxiv. 37, etc., it is clear that not the truth, but error will "prevail" until the day shall dawn when he who is himself "the truth," shall come in Person to this earth, to subdue all things to himself. "Even so: come, Lord Jesus!"—John S. Howden, in Bible Standard.

THE LIGHT OF TRUTH.

Ignorance gives a sort of eternity to prejudice, and perpetuity to error. Where baleful superstition, like that of the church of Rome, has once got footing among a people in this situation, it becomes next to impossible to eradicate it; for it can only be assailed with success by the weapons of reason and argument, and to those weapons it is impassive. The sword of etherial temper loses its edge when tried on the scaly hide of this leviathan. No wonder the church of Rome is such a friend to ignorance; it is but paying the arrears of gratitude in which she is deeply indebted. How is it possible for her not to hate the light which unveils her impostures, and detects her enormities?

If we survey the genius of Christianity we shall find it to be just the reverse. It was ushered into the world with the injunction, "Go and teach all nations;" and every step of its progress is to be ascribed to instruction. With a condescension worthy of its Author, it offers information to the meanest and most illiterate; but extreme ignorance is not a state of mind favorable to it. The first churches were planted in cities (and those the most celebrated and enlightened), drawn neither from the very highest nor the very lowest classes; the former too often the victims of luxury and pride, the latter sunk in extreme stupidity; but from the middle orders, where the largest portion of virtue and good sense has usually resided. In remote villages its progress was extremely slow, owing unquestionably to that want of mental cultivation which rendered them the last retreats of superstition; inasmuch that in the fifth century the abettors of the ancient idolatry began to be denominated Pagani, which properly denotes the inhabitants of the country, in distinction from those who reside in towns. At the Reformation, the progress of the reformed faith went hand in hand with the advancement of letters; it had everywhere the same friends, and the same enemies; and next to its agreement with the Holy Scriptures, its success is chiefly to be ascribed, under God, to the art of printing, the revival of classical learning, and the illustrious patrons of science attached to its cause.

In the representation of that glorious period, usually styled the Millennium, when religion universally prevails, it is mentioned as a conspicuous feature that men shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. That period will not be distinguished from the preceding by men's minds being more torpid and inactive, but rather by the consecration of every power to the service of the Most High. It will be a period of remarkable illumination, during which the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun as that of seven days. Every useful talent will be cultivated, every art subservient to the interests of men be improved and perfected: learning will amass her stores, and genius emit her splendor; but the former will be displayed without ostentation, and the latter shine with the softened effulgence of humility and love.—The late William Jones.

There is no sin more dishonoring to God, and none for which there is less excuse, than profanity. It gratifies no worldly ambition. All it can do is to foster a spirit of irreverence for God, and manifest the natural hatred of the heart for all that is sacred and divine.

"The Unpardonable Gift," by J. H. Pettingell, is now offered at Thirty Cents. The regular price of this edition is Fifty Cents, but to all who wish them to loan or otherwise use for missionary work, will be supplied with them at Thirty Cents each, singly or in quantities. We have 500 copies of this work and should like to have them all taken in the next three months. This book contains absolutely conclusive proof of life only in Christ, and as a missionary is ahead of anything published. If you do not need it yourself, don't you know a friend who could read it to good advantage? It will only cost a few cents to place it in his hands, and who can tell the good that may come of such a little effort on your part. We want to place a quantity of these books in the hands of missionary workers in this and other lands, and for this purpose will open a fund of free will gifts. Those of our friends who wish to take part in this missionary work may do so. The door is open, and though we do not urge this upon our brethren (for it should need no urging) we will just say, the privilege is yours.

THE END OF THE WAY.

The following beautiful lines were written by a young lady in Nova Scotia, an invalid for many years:

My life is a wearisome journey;
I'm sick with the dust and the heat;
The rays of the sun beat upon me;
The briers are wounding my feet;
But the city to which I am journeying
Will more than my trials repay;
All the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

There are so many hills to climb upward,
I often am longing for rest;
But he who appoints me my pathway,
Knows just what is needful and best;
I know in his word he has promised
That my strength shall be as my day;
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

He loves me too well to forsake me,
Or give me one trial too much;
All his people have been dearly purchased,
And Satan can never claim such.
By and by I shall see him and praise him
In the city of unending day;
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

When the last feeble step has been taken,
And the gates of the city appear,
And the beautiful songs of the angels
Float out on my listening ear;
When all that now seems so mysterious
Will be plain and clear as the day;
Yes, the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

Though now I am footsore and weary,
I shall rest when I'm safely at home;
I know I'll receive a glad welcome,
For the Savior himself has said "come."
So when I am weary or lonely
And longing in spirit I
All the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty;
There are cordials for those who are faint;
There are robes that are whiter and purer
Than any that fancy can paint;
Then I'll try to press hopefully onward,
Thinking often through each weary day,
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

THE SEVENTH-DAY. No. 4.

(Copyrighted, 1887.)

WHY NOT FOUND OUT BEFORE?

If Sabbatarians are right on the Sabbath question, then the whole Christian church has broken the Sabbath for the last 1800 years, and has kept Sunday, "a Popish institution," "the mark of the beast," in its stead. During all these long years all the holy men, martyrs, reformers, commentators, historians, and Christian scholars, with all their seeking of God, searching the Bible, and studying history, never discovered this great mistake!

Is it reasonable to believe that the whole Christian church, for at least nine-tenths of its entire history, has been trampling upon one of God's most holy commandments? Can it be that the wrath of God is now to be poured out upon the church for keeping the same day that all others have kept for 1800 years? Would God have blessed the reformers and his church as he has, if Sunday-keeping is such a fearful crime against God as is now claimed?

Let us see what Seventh-day Adventists say upon the sin of Sunday-keeping: "All who keep the first day for the Sabbath are Pope's Sunday-keepers and God's Sabbath-breakers." "History of the Sabbath," p. 502. "History is plain, and the Bible is plain, that the Sunday-Sabbath is purely a child of papacy. It is the mark of the beast." Advent Review, Vol. I., No. 2, August, 1850. "Sunday-keeping is an institution of the first beast, and all who submit to obey this institution emphatically worship the first beast and receive his mark, the mark of the beast.'" "Those who worship the beast and his image by observing the first day are certainly idolaters as were the worshipers of the golden calf." Advent Review, extra, Nov., 1850, pp. 10, 11.) Sunday-keeping "is in reality one of the most enormous of all errors." "The nature of the change which the little horn has attempted to effect in the law of God is worthy of notice. With true satanic instinct, he undertakes to change that commandment which, of all others, is the fundamental commandment of the law, the one which makes known who the Lawgiver is, and contains his signature of royalty." "This change of the fourth commandment must therefore be the change to which the prophecy points; and Sunday-keeping must be the mark of the beast!" "The Marvel of Nations," by U. Smith, pp. 181, 182, 183. "The most fearful threatening ever addressed to mortals is contained in the third angel's message (Rev. xiv. 9–12, the warning against the mark of the beast—Sunday-keeping). That must be a terrible sin which calls down the wrath of God unmingled with mercy." "Great Controversy," Vol. IV., p. 282, by Mrs. E. S. White.

Sunday keeping, then, according to these men and Mrs. White's revelation, is the "mark of the beast," "idolatry," "the most enormous of all errors," "a terrible sin," etc. Now, just to think that the entire church of Christ, almost immediately after the death of the apostles, should fall into this fearful sin and error, and practice this crime without rebuke during the entire history of the church, till just a few days before Jesus comes, and then only a few find it out and give it up! That pious men should fall into error on speculative doctrines, as the nature of the soul, future punishment, God's decrees, etc., would not be strange; but when it comes to so important and so practical a question as the weekly day of rest, the case is different. According to Seventh-day Adventists, as above quoted, Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley, Moody, with all the church of Christ for hundreds of years, committed two fearful sins each week of their lives—they broke the holy Sabbath, the most important commandment in the decalogue, and kept Sunday, the mark of the beast! Yet God has let the whole thing go on without any protest, till the last minute of time, and now everybody is to be hopelessly damned for doing what all Christians have always done! In all candor, this is a pretty big pill to swallow.

But Sabbatarians say that this has nothing to do with the case. "Our appeal is to the Bible alone. The Bible plainly teaches it, and we will go by that." So they say, and so they honestly believe; but the fact is, it is only their interpretation, their explanation, of the Bible which makes it say so. Did you ever know a sect under heaven, even the wildest and most fanatical, who were not always on hand ready to "prove it all by the Bible?" Yes; they know that they are right beyond a doubt, "because the Bible just says so." They will argue you blind, and grow more confident every day, and always end by saying, "It is true, not because I say so, but because the Bible says so." Meet a Mormon, and he has the Bible at his tongue's end. He "proves it all by the Bible." So the Shaker, and the Swedenborgian, and the Universalist, and the rest of them, "prove it all by the Bible." How many persons and sects have arisen at different times with a perfect furore of enthusiasm over some new idea besides "the old, old story of Jesus and his love." No matter what harm it does to other Christians and to the gospel, "the Bible teaches it, and that is enough. When we give this up we will give up the Bible too." So they go on till time alone demolishes their theory, and then they do indeed give up the Bible and all, while precious souls are lost.

God pity the good, old Bible! for it is made to teach all the fanaticism and tom-foolery that has ever disgraced Christianity. The Bible is all right, but you need a little common sense and some proper idea of the nature of the gospel with it. The effects of a doctrine are to be considered as well as the supposed Bible proof for it. We must be very cautious how we accept some unreasonable, useless and impracticable theory, just because some sharp person can construe and color the Scriptures to favor it.

If a doctrine is not in harmony with the general tone of the gospel; if it turns upon mere technicalities; if the plain, simple statements of the New Testament have to be explained away to harmonize with it; if it leads you to tithing mint and rue and straining at gnats; if it does not lead you to more love for your fellowmen, to more benevolent deeds in your own community, to a sweeter and lovelier life; if it leads you to become more contentious, more narrow, bigoted and sectarian; if it leads you to think of anything more than of Jesus, then, as you value your peace here and your soul hereafter, avoid it.

Jacob Knapp, in rebuking hair-splitting theologians, said; "It is not God, but the devil, who sets men tanning a mosquito's hide on shore, while a shipwrecked crew are perishing unhelped before them." There is a volume of sense in that homely remark. It well illustrates the work of the Seventh-day people. They will compass sea and land and turn the world upside down to get one good old Christian to rest on Saturday and work on Sunday, while thousands of lost souls are dying all around them, uncared for. How much better to assist in the great work of leading sinners to Christ, instead of bladdering those who are doing it.

D. M. CANRIGHT.

What is Truth?

Almost all believe they can answer this question, but standing out prominent in a sect of professing Christians who claim that they and they only have "the truth," and consequently are the only sect who can answer. Solomon says, there is a way that seemeth right to a man, but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him (or trieth him). Let us try this sect. Jesus said, "Except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom or reign of God." As that which is begotten or born of the flesh is flesh, and cannot rise above its own level, Jesus said, ye must be begotten or born again. This sect of which I write declare that when a man believes certain things and is baptized, "he is born out of water, and becomes a candidate for the birth of the Spirit." —R. Roberts.

Is this truth? It is not! To prove it hear what Paul says: "Though our outward man (the flesh) perish, our inward man is renewed day by day." What is this inward man, how was it begotten? It is neither more nor less than the new creature that was begotten of the spirit (by the incorruptible seed of the word) and is spirit? It is the creature that requires spiritual food to sustain and nourish it. The creature that discerns spiritual things. Now as this sect cannot lay claim to having any spiritual ones amongst them, (as children cannot be counted in the family before they are born), this accounts for the want of spirituality so complained of amongst themselves. In short that which is called the true Ecclesia, is only an intellectual affair. Exhortation, according to Scripture, has no place amongst them. It cannot be. Instead of the elders taking the oversight and feeding the others, according as they are fitted by the Spirit, and set in the body, by God as has pleased him; so is the case in the true body of the Christ. The whole thing is ignored. The members of this sect are placed in their body by open vote or ballot, and the spirit is denied all operation in the matter.

I wish to call attention to just a few things:

1. They are the only sect I know of that have a "form of godliness but deny the power thereof," which is the Spirit.

2. It is a mark of the church of Christ that they love one another and speak the same thing, being of one mind. This sect are famed for their differences of mind and their contentions one with another.

3. The church of Christ manifests the wisdom of God. This sect manifests the folly of man.

4. The church of Christ being begotten of the spirit, is spirit, and can only be sustained by spiritual food which is administered through the members according to the measure of the spirit unto them, and so by the effectual working in due measure of each part, it tendeth to the edifying of itself in love.

Let no one be surprised any longer that their greetings instead of being affectionate are cold and formal; instead of the humble and chastened spirit, there is the proud look and the indifferent countenance. In the place of exhortation, welling out of an overflowing heart, there is a rigmarole of words without meaning, and irreverence stamped upon the whole. Neither let them be surprised that their ideas of the Christ, of resurrection and of judgment, are perversions of the teaching of God's word. When the light is darkness how great is the darkness. Be cautious ye that are asking, What is truth? J. P.

"If Ye Know These Things, Happy Are Ye if Ye Do Them."

What profit is it, if we know the things that must be done to secure eternal life, and yet do them not? Will it give us a place in the kingdom to believe the gospel as preached by Jesus and his disciples, if we take no steps to secure the blessings promised in that gospel? We may enjoy hearing about coming glories, may listen with pleasure to the songs of God's children, we may assist in the service with our voices, and may give of our means to have the truth proclaimed, but God wants something more than this, he wants you, oh man! oh woman! "He commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Let no man deceive you, he that doth righteousness, is righteous."

He commands you to repent; have you done it? Have you turned away from your sins? Every hour that you neglect to repent, you are sinning against him. Repentance must be added to faith, and after repentance must come obedience. You must hear the sayings of Jesus and do them if you would build your house upon a rock; must do the will of the Father in heaven if you would enter into the kingdom of heaven.

But you say, you have counted the cost and you are not able to build; nor can you go to war with ten thousand men when he that cometh against you has twenty thousand. You are not able? "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." You are not fit to come? "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." You cannot stand? "Unto him that is able to keep you from falling!" You are afraid you cannot live a Christian life? "The Lord, let him be your fear." Isa. viii. 13, for "the fear of man bringeth a snare," Prov. xxix. 25, but the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, Psalm iii. 10, and of knowledge, Prov. i. 7; ix. 10; it is "to hate evil," Prov. viii. 13; "it prolongeth days," Prov. x. 27; "it is strong confidence," Prov. xiv. 26; it is "a fountain of life," Prov. xiv. 27; by it men "depart from evil," Prov. xvi. 16; by it are "riches and honor and life." Prov. xxii. 4.

You are afraid? when God has "laid help upon one that is mighty to save?" when God is "able to make you stand," is not going to let you be tempted above that ye are able to bear, is "able to do abundantly above all that you ask or think," is "able to subdue all," "able to keep that which you commit to him against that day," "able to succor you," "able to raise you from the dead," "able to save?" The arm is an omnipotent arm upon which you are to lean. You are not to trust in yourself. Your strength cannot save. Do not be afraid to cast yourself upon God.

Lay hold on eternal life, grasp the enduring riches, do not hold the truth in unrighteousness but show your faith by your obedience. Go down into the watery grave, and come up bearing a name that you never wore before, the precious, blessing name of Jesus. Go down and come up to walk in the new life, fearing not but that God is able to help you and make you worthy of him that hath called you to glory and virtue. Not until you do can you say, "Our Father which art in heaven," not until you do can you have a title to the future inheritance, not until you do can you have hope of a resurrection to eternal life.

Whom will you serve? Whom will you fear? Choose the fear of the Lord and be quiet from the fear of evil. Prov. i. 24 to close of chapter.

New Testimonials to Biblical Records.

What a wonderful resurrection that a in Nineveh upon the banks of the Tigris, in Mesopotamia. The burial of that city was in a grave which the Lord made: "I will make thy grave" Nahum i. 14). This prophecy was made about 700 B. C., and the burial took place one hundred years later—608 B. C.

Nineveh was a beautiful and powerful city when its last king shut himself up in its walls for two years before its destruction by Cyaxares, the king of Media. At this time Media covered a territory, on the east of Nineveh, of only about the area occupied by the States of New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia, or little more than twice the size of New England. But the Medes were mountaineers and a hardy race, and certain testimonies from the monuments show that the Assyrians had been growing effeminate for many years before the destruction of their capital. The last mention of Nineveh in the Scriptures is the prophecy of Zedekiah (ii. 13) who wrote in the days of Josiah, king of Judah, and Nineveh was then proud, voluptuous and weak.

It has been only within the past forty years that anything of much value has been known of Nineveh, and it is less time since the monuments, including thousands of tablets, have revealed to us the history of that ancient and splendid empire.

Comparatively speaking, very few of those who read the Bible are aware of the fact, that at the present day immense numbers of these historical monuments and tablets have already been removed from the clay hills and mounds of Nineveh to the museums and private collections of Europe and of this land, and great numbers of scholars are translating the Assyrian and other languages found upon them, and marvelous testimonies to the accuracy of the Old Testament are yearly discovered.

An interesting fact is, that the clay that was packed down upon these remains sealed them from both air and water, and that so tightly that the letters, where the slabs are unbroken, are as though they were fresh from the writer's hands. Let us imagine a finely lettered clay slab, a little more than a foot square and about an inch thick, and this makes one of some 11,000 now in the British Museum, which form what may be called the pages from the library of Asshur-bani-pal, king of Nineveh. Twelve of these little slabs form what is known as the "creation tablets," because they contain some records of the creation, and particularly of the deluge. This last-mentioned king reigned from 667–647 B. C. So that these tablets have actually survived the burial of twenty-five centuries.

One of the most important facts learned from this tablet history is, that the belief in the one God prevailed in those earliest ages, long before the time of Asshur-bani-pal, for these tablets assert that what they narrate was copied from far earlier tablets found in the sacred city of Erech, ninety miles southeast of Babylon, in ancient Chaldea.

On these tablets we read that the one God explains to the newly created man his duties—the phrase "God and man" sometimes occurs; "God and the king" is very frequent. The evidence is clearly developed on these tablets, as translated by Mr. G. Smith, that in the earlier ages the doctrine of one supreme God was taught. It is very interesting to learn from other cuneiform tablets, now in the British Museum, dated in the reign of several ancient Greek kings and found at old Erech, that the doctrine of the one God supreme was taught to a late period: the only name of a deity found on these tablets, and this many times repeated, is "God One."

Now, this city Erech, mentioned in Gen. x. 10, was an old city several centuries before Abram left Ur. It was only fifty miles northwest of Abram's native place on the opposite side of the Euphrates, and it was the seat of learning of all Chaldea, and in after centuries for Babylon and Nineveh. It is probable that both Abram and Melchizedek received their early impressions of the Most High God from these traditions descended from the time of Noah, "the preacher of righteousness." —Pulpit Treasury.

The Lake Erie & Western R. R. will sell special tickets to St. Louis, Mo., and return, from Sept. 24th to 28th, for the G. A. R. encampment, at very low rates.

EXPLANATION OF LABEL MARKS.

Some having complained that they do not know what the marks on labels mean, we will just say, "Jny" means January, and when it is followed by a figure "6" and reads "Jny6" it means your subscription expired the first day of January, 1886. "Feb" February, "Mar" March, "Apr" April, and "May" are well understood, but "Jun" meaning June seems to confuse some, and to be taken to mean January. "Jun" means June. "Jul" is July, "Aug" August, "Sep" September, "Oct" October, "Nov" November, and "Dec" December. The figure following the month stands for the year, "1" means 1881, "2" means 1882, etc. A postal card of inquiry will bring you any information you wish.

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNAL

The above is the title of a New Hymn Book just issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 156 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 400 hymns. To this is added 23 pages of Hymns for Children to use in Sunday Schools or at home. We want some good brother or sister in every locality to take this work in hand and introduce it to the friends in your neighborhood. Will every minister of our faith please send us the name and address of some good, energetic worker in each congregation where he labors.

Price 75 cents each, singly; 6 copies for $4.00; 12 copies, $7. 20. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

GRANT.—In Jasper Co., Ind., August 24th, 1887, Rebecca R., wife of Daniel Grant, aged 84 years, 7 months and 1 day.

Rebecca R. Hale was born in Fleming Co., Ky., Jan. 23, 1803; was married to Daniel Grant Sept. 24, 1820, with whom she lived until the messenger of death separated this long and happy union, they having lived together one month short of sixty-seven years.

In 1827, with her husband, she moved from Kentucky to Rush county, Ind., and in 1834 to Wabash Co., this State. Soon after moving to Wabash Co., she and her husband confessed their confidence in the gospel of Christ, and were among the first pioneers of the Disciples Church. A Church Organization was perfected in their neighborhood in 1836, and their meetings were held each first day of the week, alternately at the houses of Bros. Wm. and Daniel Grant. Mother Rebecca R. Grant ever continued a faithful and sincere helper in the church.

They moved in 1860 to Jasper Co., Ind., where they have lived to the present time—a period of thirty-seven years. There was born to Mother Grant ten children, six sons and four daughters, now grown to manhood and womanhood. Her aged husband, the six sons and two of the daughters, Mrs. Norman Warner and Mrs. Fleming Phillips, survive their aged mother. She and her husband were very devoted to their children, who in turn have never forgotten the commandment to honor their parents, and with their children and children's children have lived almost in the immediate neighborhood of their aged parents, that they might be a comfort and support to their declining years. In 1860 Mother Grant and her husband, through the preaching of Elder Wm. P. Shockey, united with the Church of God, with their hope of a future life, with its blessings, anchored within the promise of a resurrection from the dead. Ever since mother Grant has been a devoted Christian with her faith ever stayed in the glorious gospel of God's dear Son.

The undersigned was called to assist the bereaved friends in the solemn yet Christian rite of burial. The loss to her feeble yet devoted husband is most severe. But we are glad we can say he sorrows not as those who have no hope. Decrepit with old age, leaning upon his staff, his head silvered o'er with the frosts of many winters, yet his faith is strong in the hope of a reunion beyond the tomb. Truly with the devoted follower of Christ, in the evening time of life it shall be light. We endeavored to cheer the saddened hearts from the following, Thes. iv. 14, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Yours in hope, J. H. WILLEY.

PERKINS.—Fell asleep in the glorious hope of the resurrection, Joseph J. Perkins, at Galesburgh, Mich., aged 74 years.

He leaves a wife and four sons to mourn his loss. Funeral services at the Advent church conducted by Elder A. P. Moore, of Buchanan, assisted by J. Carver. Your Sister in the hope of the gospel. L. PERKINS.

Announcement.

The Annual Assembly of the Church of God will, if the Lord will, convene at the house of the brethren, Winchester, Va., on Friday before the second Sunday in October, and will continue over Sunday. All who love the truth in sincerity and all members of the A. P. P. C. and A. P. C. K. are especially invited and the public in general. All of the former, both churches and individuals who can not come will please not fail to prepare letters and send in good time. Just address, Church of God, Winchester, Va. All who can come will please write at once and they will be met at the Winchester Depot and conducted to the house of the brethren where they will meet with all the word expresses while they are a mind to stay.

J. J. SPAID,
JOHN D. GOOD,
JACOB GOOD,
A. J. MILLER,
WILLIAM GOOD,
N. J. MORGAN.

The Annual State Conference of the Church of God of Michigan will meet at Watson, Allegan Co., Thursday, Sept. 29, 1887, and last over the following Sunday (the Lord willing). Able speakers will be with us from abroad. We are hoping to have a general rally of God's people present and try, if possible, to beat the record of the June conference, for if we are doing our duty we are growing in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Sacrifice, if necessary, that ye may be with us. We earnestly hope and expect all who are able will come and come with hearts full of love, souls full of prayer and lips ready to speak forth the mighty songs of deliverance through the Almighty God, as good old David of old, and especially those chosen on the different committees, as we have considerable important business to attend to.

Those coming from the north will leave Grand Rapids at 11:45 a. m., change cars at Monteith, reaching Fisk's Station at 2:30 p. m., where they will find welcome friends to meet them. Those coming from the south stop off at Martin, where the brethren will meet them Thursday and Friday at the three o'clock trains.

To shorten time with our business there have been committees chosen previous to meeting that they might be better prepared for duty.

Finance committee: Jacob Lemon, W. W. Jamieson, Clark West, John Grant.

Committee on the best mode of evangelising and doing missionary work: W. B. Woodward, Frank Bennett, Newton Pike, Martha Pike, Mrs. Jacob Lemon.

Committee on National Conference: Noah Howser, Clark West, Newton Pike, Mary Woodward.

Committee on Bible readings: W. W. Jamieson, Calvin Winchester, Mary Smith, Essie Anderson, W. B. Woodward.

JACOB LEMON, Pres.
K. N. WOODWARD, Sec.

There will be a meeting of those of our faith at the Brock's school house, near Scholl's Ferry, Oregon, commencing Friday evening, October 28th, 1887, and holding over the following Sunday. If agreeable to those present a State conference will be organized, and measures for extending the work of spreading the "glad news" discussed. In view of the signs of our times we urge all who can to be present and participate in the meeting. If any who wish to attend will give us due notice, we will be glad to meet them with teams at Portland, which is about seventeen miles northeast of us.

W. W. JAQUITH.

The church of God at Cleveland, O., will hold meetings at 10:30 a. m. every Sunday (D. V.) in Bland and Weller's Block, Room 36, 274½ Ontario Street, Corner of Bolivar, north of Central Market. Testimonies from abroad of like faith and all searchers after truth are welcome.

"The Gospel of Our Salvation and Kindred doctrines—as Life only through Christ—Resurrection of the dead—Second coming of Christ—The Kingdom of God, etc., will be faithfully preached every Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m., to which services we heartily invite the seeker after divine truth! This service will close at 11:30, after which the church will meet for conference, "breaking of bread and prayers." 174 Grand st., on first floor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

CONFESSION.

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John i. ix.

I am so weary and so weak tonight, dear Savior,
So tired of striving and so sick of sin,
That were I worthy of a place in thy fair dwelling
I'd ask that I just now might enter in.

Here let me kneel in sorrowful contrition.
And lean my head against thy wounded side,
And kiss thy hands and feet all torn and bleeding,
And whisper to myself, "for me he died."

And I have grieved Him whom I love. Oh shame to say it!
Such base ingratitude it seemeth to me now,
How could I pierce again so dear a heart that loved me,
And bind the thorns again upon that brow.

I did not mean it Lord! some sudden gust of passion,
Some snare the tempter laid with wily art,
Entrapped my thoughtless feet, and ere I knew it,
My path and thine were lying wide apart.

And as I stand, my wayward steps retracing,
I meet thine eyes, so full of grace and love
It breaks my heart; Ungrateful soul how could'st thou sin so,
So wound his kindness and so faithless prove?

And falling at thy feet I plead for pardon.
And speak bitter tears of grief and shame;
While thou hast only loving words of comfort for me.
Not one reproach, not one just word of blame.

Thus knowest I love thee, Lord: though in my weakness,
Tempted and tried, thy love I often grieve,
Thou knowest I love thee! stay thou ever near me,
That from thy heard my heart may strength receive.

Strength to o'ercome, to conquer every failing,
That mars my life and makes it incomplete,
Strength that shall keep me safe from sin and weariness,
Faithful and pure, forever at thy feet.

HEREDITY AND TEMPERANCE. No. 3.

Before leaving inebriety in connection with the law of heredity, explained at some length in the first of these contributions, it seems proper to say a word on the physical and moral injuries that the victim of alcoholism must inevitably undergo in his own person. Every organ is at length injured by the fiery stimulus, till nature can bear the wrong no longer, and the self-enslaved sooner or later perishes by his own doings. Of this most of us have seen deplorable instances, and those who have been destroyed are unfortunately not the last who will point the moral of continuous sobriety. Stop, make heroic efforts to stop the indulgence else your doom is sealed. You are going toward the whirlpool, and when its center is reached, and it does not take long to reach it, where are you? None can rescue the intemperate but themselves. It is a triumph of will, which friends and heaven may aid, but personal will must be exercised. The fallen brother must resolve to be free—must will to resist in future; and if he wills not the battle is lost that might have been won to his own credit and the joy of his friends and well-wishers.

But the special question before us demands our attention, and it intimately connected with the enslaved condition of those whose case has just been described, not without genuine pity for them in their great feebleness and sometimes despair.

Sad as the inebriate's state is when viewed by itself, the case becomes tenfold more alarming when the fact is recognized that this disease of alcoholism, for in fact and it really becomes disease, if it was not so at first, may be transmitted at birth to innocent offspring. The law of heredity is thus indisputably associated with the law of penalty. Evil is transmitted from parent to child, and so is evil; vice comes down as well as healthful moral natures; tendencies towards ruinous courses, and impulses in the direction of conduct that is crowned with honor, prosperity and peace. The healthy child has had healthy parents; the offspring which at an early age droops in consumption, had at least one parent through whom the fatal malady had its descent. To limit the law of heredity to the transmission of good, like sound physical tone and vigor, would require a perpetual miracle, and hinder the growth of human beings, we may say, of the human race, in wisdom and self-restraint. Whatever suffering it may entail on the blameless, the law is as we have described it, and in a God-ruled world it must be founded in equity and love.

Any amount of evidence exists to establish the doctrine that drunkenness is transmissible from parent to child, exactly like consumption and scrofula. From a volume lying before me, written by one who deeply studied this matter, as well as the general nature of man, I take leave to present the following quotations:

"A friend told me that in his youth he lived in a country in which the gentlemen were much addicted to hard drinking, and that he, too frequently, took a part in the revels. Several of his sons, born at that time, although subsequently educated in a very different moral atmosphere, turned out strongly addicted to inebriety; whereas the children born after he had removed to a large town and formed more correct habits, were not the victims of this propensity. Another individual, of superior talents, described to me the wild and mischievous revelry in which he indulged at the time of his marriage, and congratulated himself on his subsequent domestication and moral improvement. His eldest son, born in his riotous days, notwithstanding a strictly moral education, turned out a personification of the father's actual condition at that time; and his younger children were more moral in proportion as they were removed from the period of vicious frolics."

A distinguished Continental physician mentions, in one of his treatises, the case of a Russian family, "in which the father and grandfather fell victims in early life to their propensity to drunkenness. The son, although he foresaw the consequences of this pernicious habit, continued to abandon himself to it, in spite of every resolution to the contrary. The grandson, who was only five years of age when the physician composed his book, displayed even then a most decided inclination for spirituous liquors."

Dr. Caldwell, a distinguished American physician, in an article that appeared in the Transylvania Journal, wrote as follows:

"In hundreds and thousands of instances, parents, having had children born to them while their habits were temperate, have become afterwards intemperate, and had other children subsequently born. In such cases it is a matter of notoriety that the younger children have become addicted to the practice of intoxication much more frequently than the elder—in the proportion of five to one. Let me not be told that this is owing to the younger children being neglected, and having corrupt and seducing examples constantly before them. The same neglects and profligate examples have been extended to all, yet all have not been equally injured by them. The children of the earlier births have escaped, while those of the subsequent ones have suffered."

The writer has before his mind some vivid illustrations of the relationship between drunkenness in the parent and its reappearance among the rising members of the family. In one case at least two sons became victims of the bottle, their mother having been habitually intemperate before they were born. A promising young lady who contracted the alcoholic propensity about the seventeenth year, and sank to the lowest depth of degradation under its weight, was the child of a man low in his nature, and for years a slave to intemperance. Other instances might be detailed but the subject is painful, and we shall add no more. Any reader who has noted with even moderate care the fortunes of households with which he is acquainted can scarcely fail to supply additional confirmations to his own reason of the startling truth we have attempted to evolve and confirm. It is satisfactory to observe that this matter, so intensely practical in its bearings on individual and social existence, is attracting wider attention than ever. These few sentences from the Evangelical Churchman for the 7th of October last deserve to be gravely pondered:

"The laws of inheritance which perpetuate the sins unto the third and fourth generation are literally fulfilled in the inebriate. Were it not for the inexorable law of selection which brings the physically weak to an early grave, and hurries the morally diseased to the center of death, our race would be burdened with a festering tide of corruption propelling it backward into the night of barbarism. It has been said an inebriate transmits poison enough to require ten generations to annihilate it."

These articles may have suggested bitter thoughts to some who discover themselves firmly bound within the sweep of a law that no mortal can expend or control. Far be it from our purpose to wound any troubled sensitive nature. As every one must allow we can have no personal references in our remarks. If the truth is painful, is that a reason why it should be covered up from view? The teaching of science is of all things dispassionate and impartial; flatteries and scorns, it has none of them. When properly regarded it is emphatically human. It comes not to annoy but to guide, and even when its revelations seem to have no cheer for those who are bound to suffer for the follies and ignorance of others, it may give them courage to bear their portion of all with a clear perception of sublime wisdom in the general arrangement under which they are fated to pine and struggle.—W. H. Mumford.

Cheerlessness of Infidelity.

There is something very suggestive and instructive in a remark attributed to the arch infidel, Robert G. Ingersoll: "Life is very sad to me; it is very pitiful; there isn't much to it." From Mr. Ingersoll, considering all things, this is remarkable language. He is not a poor dyspeptic whose stomach often gets above his heart and lies on it with a load that crushes all joy out of it. He is a man of good digestion, good blood and plenty of it, has a physique to be admired and to be coveted. In the prime of life, with comfortable competence, enviable reputation for the most popular and captivating gifts, hailed and applauded by immense audiences wherever he speaks, happy, according to Dr. Field, in his family, where he is lovable and devotedly loved, yet this man says: "Life is very sad to me," etc.

This must be a revelation to the hundreds of thousands who screamed with laughter at his wit and drollery and sarcasm as he employed them in his raillery at the Bible and Bible characters. Will it not seem surprising to his gay admirers that this man, so full of humor and fun and ridicule, should be sad and cheerless and say of life: "It is very painful; there isn't much to it." If there "isn't much to it" for a man so peculiarly favored by nature and fortune what shall be said for the lot of those—and they are in the immense majority—to whom life comes as an inheritance of physical infirmity and pain, of poverty and toil, mental disquietude and spiritual unrest, unceasing domestic and social burdens and sorrows? What has Mr. Ingersoll to say to them? What has he to say for himself? Fortunate as he is he has had some experience of the troubles from which none of us can escape. Some years ago he was bereaved of a brother whom he loved. He officiated at the funeral. His address on the occasion was characteristic for rhetorical beauty and also for its utter cheerlessness and barrenness of hope. "Life is but a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities." No wonder if this is all and the best, there isn't much to it.

At another time, with this burden off him, the like of which is always crushing some bleeding hearts, he is frivolous and comical, and talks about being "as ready," should there be a future life, "as the next man to enter on any remunerative occupation." But "the peaks are barren and cold" which lie between this and that contingency, and he has nothing but jokes about it, and scorn and sarcasm for those who look as "seeing him who is invisible," and wait to be "satisfied when they awake in his likeness." But Mr. Ingersoll's experience as an infidel about the sadness and emptiness of life is not singular. Other noted infidels, much more serious and profound, able to disclose to others and enjoy themselves any secret comforts there may lie hidden in philosophic unbelief, if such there be, have anticipated him and even yet more bitterly bewailed the calamity of human existence. As Mr. Ingersoll only notoriously rehashes the old infidel arguments and sneers, adding absolutely nothing original, save it may be the brilliant tinsel of a unique sarcasm, or a jaunty blasphemy to paint the inconsequent logic of his predecessors and his own, it is not to be expected that his occasional sober confessions, such as the one quoted in this article, should be very different from theirs. How Mr. Ingersoll's lament resembles that of his great French master and superior, Voltaire, who said: "The world abounds with wonders, also with victims. In man is more wretchedness than in all other animals put together. Man loves life, yet he must die; spends his existence in diffusing the miseries he has suffered, cutting the throats of his fellow-creatures for pay; cheating and being cheated. The bulk of mankind are nothing more than a crowd of wretches, equally criminal, equally unfortunate. I wish I had never been born." To the French sceptic "the cold and barren peaks" were burdened with slaughter and crimsoned with blood. To the philosophic Hume they were shrouded in blackness and darkness. He said "When I look abroad on every side I see dispute, contradiction and distraction. When I turn my eye inward I find nothing but doubt and ignorance. I begin to fancy myself in a very deplorable condition, environed with darkness on every side." Yes, take the soberest things the noted infidels have said of life or death and they are at once a comment upon what Mr. Ingersoll has said, and a confirmation of his judgment when the light of Revelation is not permitted to illuminate the little valley bounded by the also cold and barren peaks of the two eternities.

But what is the testimony of those for whom that light shines; for whom there hang high above and casting light over peaks and valley, a cross and suffering Savior? One has said: "Yes, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." Another has said: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Such an one after, "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation and finishing his course with joy," said: "I am ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand." Then after a sweet and collected retrospect upon a glorious and fruitful past, he anticipated in "the full assurance of faith," beyond the peaks, not cold and barren, but radiant with the light of hope, "a crown of righteousness" in the immediate and blissful future. Millions holding his faith have confessed life a rich and blessed opportunity, and exit from it a coronation and a joy. Contrast life, its significance, dignity and joy in Christian experience with the mystery, barrenness and gloom of it in infidel confessions and lamentations and say which is to be preferred. The apples of Sodom do not grow on the tree of life, nor among the leaves which are for the healing of the nations. Judging infidelity by its manifest fruits and by the bitter confessions of its wisest and best representatives the true, root, leaf, flower and fruit is only evil.—Joel Swartz, D.D., in New York Observer.

THE EASTERN QUESTION

In its various phases,—Egyptian, British, Russian, Ottoman, Hebrew, American and Mountain, by J. P. Weethen. The title of this book gives a good idea of its contents, and the reputation of the author is a guarantee of its worth. The subject as a whole, and in its different divisions is handled in a masterly manner, and the reader is convinced at once that the author has spared no labor in the study of his topics. The work is thoroughly done and any one who carefully reads the 640 pages of this book will be well repaid. It is just the book for the time in which we live. Cloth binding, clear, pleasant type to read, and good paper. Price $1.50. Send to this office; orders will now be promptly filled, as we have received an invoice of the book, and will send direct from here. The two books, "Coming Age" and "Eastern Question" if ordered together, $4.50.

DR. SMITH'S
BIBLE DICTIONARY.

A Dictionary of the Bible comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Natural History, with fifteen full-page Engravings, numerous smaller illustrations, besides Maps of the Holy Land in the time of David, the time of Christ, and General Map of the Countries mentioned in the Bible. It contains every name in the Bible concerning which anything can be said. It gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs of the Jews, as well as other nations alluded to in the Scriptures. This work by Dr. Wm. Smith, is just the "aid" to Bible study that you need, and every thorough student should place a copy on his table—you cannot read a chapter in your Bible without coming to some question on which you wish more information, and the best help you can get is Smith's Standard Bible Dictionary. Bound in cloth, 772 pages, price $1.50.

THE COMING AGE,

—IN—

Nature and Proximity.

—By J. P. WEETHEE.—

This is a religious book of surpassing excellence. It treats with consummate ability, a topic which of late years has commanded the most profound thought of Christian thinkers, and which is exciting in the popular mind, among religious people, a strong and constantly growing interest. Already the masses are enquiring: "What are the signs of his coming?" The great upheavals in the political world, the rapid increase of knowledge, the profound wisdom and keen intellect employed in commercial enterprises, the miracles of modern inventions, railways, telegraphs and the telephone, by which new discoveries are constantly being added—these and many similar tokens, point unmistakably to the fact that we now live in the near approach to a culminating period of the world's history.

The Coming Age is the product of laborious research covering a period of more than forty years, involving careful study and profound thought. It is ably written, and contains many passages of thrilling and absorbing interest. It deals largely in political history, showing in a clear and vigorous style the remarkable manner in which God has fulfilled the predictions of prophecy.

It points out the fallacies of superficial interpretations, and presents fastened views consistent alike with Scripture and with reason. It outlines the events of unfulfilled prophecy, and shows that they are near at hand.

In brief it tells us concerning the COMING AGE, whatever can be gleaned from the Inspired Word, supported by the drift of current events. It discloses the wonder-working hand of God in the history of by-gone ages and shows that the same hand in the present age, is shaping the course of events and forming its history. It also shows that his supreme hand is moulding and fashioning the events of the Age to come, preparatory to the dispensations yet to be. Literature and learning, science and philosophy, art, statesmanship, genius, piety, all are shown to be used by the great Guiding Hand in working out the purposes of divine wisdom and the fiat of the Omnipotent Will. Whoever reads this book will key it aside with enlarged views of the greatness of the Supreme Majesty and the irresistible power of the Divine Sovereign who guides and governs all.

It contains over 500 large pages, bound in Cloth, Price $3.00. Send to this office for this work.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

—By B. WILSON.—

Containing the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the rendering of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christianity have been built up. In this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
